Historic, Archive Document

Do not assume content reflects current scientific knowledge, policies, or practices.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

203460

Public Law 774--81st Congress

Chapter 932--2d Session

H. R. 9176

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Digest of Public Law 774 1

Index and Summary of History on H. R. 9176 3

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950. Authorizes the President to establish priorities, require the performance of defense contracts, and allocate materials and facilities. Authorizes the President, when all other methods fail, to requisition supplies, materials, and facilities. Authorizes various Government agencies, operating through the Federal Reserve Banks, to guarantee public or private loans to expedite production and deliveries of defense goods; and authorizes the President to install additional equipment in Government facilities and install Government equipment in private plants. Authorizes the President to encourage voluntary action by business, agriculture, labor, and consumers to bring about wage and price stabilization. To the extent that this fails, he may establish individual or general price ceilings, and at the same time if price ceilings are invoked he must stabilize wages. Price ceilings could be established only when the President finds that (1) a price has risen or threatens to rise "unreasonably" above the level from May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950; (2) such increases will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense; (3) the ceiling is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the act; (4) it is practicable and feasible to impose such a ceiling; and (5) a ceiling would be generally fair and equitable to sellers and buyers of materials and to sellers and buyers of related and competitive materials. Completely exempt from the wage and price provisions are (1) prices or rentals for real property; (2) rates or fees charged for professional services; (3) prices or rentals for materials for certain publication services, newspapers, radio, etc.; (4) selling or underwriting insurance; (5) common carrier or other public utility rates; and (6) margin requirements on any commodity exchange. If general, or across-the-board price and wage controls are invoked, they would have to be administered, and rationing at the retail level, through a new independent agency.

No ceilings could be set for any agricultural commodity below the highest of the following prices: (1) the parity price, (2) the highest price received by producers druing the period from May 25, 1950 to June 24, 1950, inclusive, or (3) in the case of any commodity for which the market was not active during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the average price received during the most recent representative period prior to May 24 in which the market for such commodity was active as determined and adjusted by the Secretary to a level in line with the level of prices during the period May 24 to June 24, or (4) in the case of fire-cured tobacco a price equal to 75% of the parity price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop, and in the case of dark air-cured tobacco and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, respectively, a price equal to 66 2/3% of the price of Burley tobacco of the corresponding crop. Provides that no ceilings may be established on a commodity processed or manufactured from any agricultural commodity below a price which would reflect to producers of such agricultural commodities the highest of the prices referred to above; with provision for a "generally fair and equitable margin" for the processing. Ceilings would be adjusted for reductions in yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and for other conditions. Provides for the adjustment of milk prices in areas not under marketing agreements and orders in relationship to prices for milk marketed under agreements or orders, and for adjustment in view of the availability and price of feed and other economic conditions. Authorizes the Federal Reserve System to impose consumer credit controls. Authorizes the President to regulate real estate construction credit on structures commenced after noon on August 3, 1950. Provides for fines and imprisonment for any employee of the Government who uses confidential information in commodity speculation or discloses such information to others who speculate. Establishes a joint congressional committee composed of 5 members of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and 5 members of the House Banking and Currency Committee to study and review the operation of the act. Authorizes the President to place and employ persons temporarily in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule under the Classification Act of 1949 to carry out the provisions of the Act. The provision for priorities, allocations, and requisitioning would expire on June 30, 1952; but the provisions for price and wage stabilization and credit controls would expire June 30, 1951.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE
Washington, D. C.
October 9, 1950

A GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF THE "DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950"

(Prepared in the Office of the Solicitor)

Introduction

The purpose of the Act is to provide for emergency measures in the interest of the national defense, and everything done under the Act must be related to the promotion of the national defense. The provisions of the Act are supplementary to, and not in substitution for, pre-existing law. The Act applies to the United States, its Territories and possessions, and the District of Columbia.

The defense measures for which the Act makes provision are as follows: (a) priorities and allocations with respect to materials and facilities, including the administrative designation of scarce materials which may not be hoarded; (b) the expedition of procurement through government guarantees, loans, purchases, and the requisitioning of property; (c) maximum prices for materials and services and stabilization of wages; and (d) regulation of consumer credit, real estate construction credit, and loans on real estate made, insured or guaranteed by the government. The Act also contains general provisions relating to the settlement of labor disputes.

The objectives of the Act may be achieved through voluntary or involuntary programs. All functions of the Act are excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act except the requirements of section 3 thereof. The authority to adopt defense measures, unless sooner terminated by the Congress or the President, expires on June 30, 1951, except that the provisions of the Act relating to priorities, allocations, hoarding, and expedition of procurement shall continue in effect until June 30, 1952, to the extent only that is necessary to aid in carrying out government contracts made prior to July 1, 1951.

The powers contained in the Act to take measures for the promotion of the national defense are, for the most part, vested in the President. The powers vested in the President may, except where otherwise specifically provided, be delegated by him to any existing agency or to any new agency (except that no new corporate agency may be created), and, in making such delegation, the President may authorize redelegations by the agency.

The President has by Executive Order No. 10161 delegated to appropriate existing agencies of the government most of the powers vested in him, except that the Order creates a new agency, known as the Economic Stabilization Agency, to administer price and wage controls, and these agencies are, for the most part, authorized to make successive redelegations to agencies, officers or employees of the government. The functions delegated to the several agencies are to be coordinated on behalf of the President by the chairman of the National Security Resources Board.

The Act provides for a Congressional committee, known as the Joint Committee on Defense Production, to make a continuous study of operations under the Act.

Priorities, Allocations and Hoarding

The priority power may be exercised to require priority of performance under, or preferential acceptance and performance of, contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment). The allocation power over materials and facilities may be exercised in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as may be administratively determined. The term "allocation" means also rationing at the consumer level. Any allocation resulting in a significant dislocation of normal distribution of material in the civilian market shall, insofar as practicable, be made in such manner as to give to business and the various segments thereof a fair share of the supply based upon the normal share of such business during a representative period preceding June 24, 1950, with due regard also to the needs of any new business. Persons subject to priority and allocation orders may not discriminate against such orders in any way, such as charging higher prices thereunder.

The prohibition against hoarding relates to scarce materials and materials the supply of which would be threatened by accumulation. These materials are to be administratively designated from time to time. The designation of materials and the withdrawal of such designation are required to be published in the Federal Register. Hoarding consists in accumulating such designated materials in excess of reasonable demands of business, personal, or home consumption or for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices.

A willful violator is subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. All persons are excused from damages or penalties for any act or failure to act as a result of compliance with any order issued pursuant to the Act, even though such order may later be declared by competent authority to be invalid.

The Executive Order delegates functions relating to priorities, allocations and hoarding. The delegation to the Secretary of Agriculture covers food, farm equipment and commercial fertilizer. The term "food" is broadly defined in the delegation as all commodities and products capable of human or animal consumption, and also starches, sugars, vegetable and animal fats and oils, cotton, tobacco, wool, mohair, hemp, flax fiber and naval stores until they lose their identity as an agricultural commodity or agricultural product. The term "farm equipment" means equipment manufactured for use on farms in connection with the production and processing of food. The term "fertilizer" means fertilizer in form for distribution to users thereof.

The delegation made to the Secretary of the Interior covers petroleum, gas, solid fuels and electric power, and the delegation made to a Commissioner of the Interstate Commerce Commission covers domestic transportation, storage and port facilities. All other materials and facilities, except fissionable materials, are covered in a delegation to the Secretary of Commerce.

Each delegate may make claim against the other delegates for additional materials and facilities necessary to carry out the program of the claimant delegate, and each delegate may, with approval of the chairman of the National Security Resources Board, designate other agencies of the government as claimants. Provision is made also for successive redelegations to agencies, officers or employees of the government, including redelegation by one delegate of the President to another such delegate.

The Act provides for the appointment of such advisory committees as shall be appropriate and for consultation whenever practicable with such committees in the formulation of regulations. Any regulation shall contain a statement that in the formulation thereof such consultation has taken place and that consideration was given to recommendations made, or that special circumstances have rendered consultation impracticable. The regulation is not vitiated by inaccuracy in the statement. The committees must be representative of small, medium and large size business, different geographical areas, trade association members and non-members, and different segments of the industry. Small business enterprises are to be encouraged to contribute in carrying out the objectives of the Act. They are required to be given full information concerning the provisions of the Act and agency activities thereunder. They may be granted appropriate exemptions. All of their requests must be expeditiously handled.

In the administration and enforcement of the Act, or any regulation thereunder, any person may by regulation, subpoena, or otherwise, be required to furnish information, make reports, to keep records subject to inspection, and to give sworn testimony. These provisions continue in effect for a period of two years after the termination of the Act for other purposes. Regulations shall be issued insuring that this authority will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of investigation, inspection and inquiry have been defined by competent authority with assurance that the information is not available from any responsible agency. A willful violator is subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. The usual provisions are made for the judicial enforcement of subpoenas, for immunity of witnesses, and for confidentiality of information. The information obtained may be confidential pursuant to official determination or request by the person furnishing the information, and any willful disclosure of such confidential information subjects the violator to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. The information may be released upon an official determination that the withholding thereof would be contrary to the interest of the national defense.

The Act provides that confidential information received from any source by a public official shall not be used by him, or disclosed by him to any person for use, in speculating on any commodity exchange. Any violator is subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Expedition of Procurement through Government Guarantees, Loans, Purchases and Requisitioning

The expedition of production and deliveries or services may take place through (1) guaranteeing financial institutions against loss on loans to carry out government contracts; (2) the making of government loans to private business enterprises to carry out government contracts; (3) the purchase of raw materials for government use or resale; (4) the improvement of government and private industrial plants; and (5) the requisitioning of property. The funds for guaranteeing and requisitioning may be any funds available for the national defense. For loans, purchases and plant improvement, a borrowing authority of $600,000,000 is provided and an appropriation of $1,400,000,000 is authorized.

The guarantee arrangement by which financial institutions may be protected against loss on loans to carry out government contracts may be by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or other arrangement. The guarantee may be made without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment or modification of contracts. The guaranteeing agency may be the Army, Navy, Air Force, Department of Commerce, and such other agencies as the President may designate. Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve Bank may be designated to act as fiscal agent for the guaranteeing agency on a full reimbursement basis. Government loans to private business enterprises (including non-profit research corporations) to aid in carrying out government contracts may be made only where private financial assistance is not available on reasonable terms. The purchase of raw materials for government use or resale may only in exceptional cases be made at higher than the current market price or with anticipated loss on resale. The authority to purchase extends to transportation, storage and processing. Agricultural commodities may not be purchased for resale except for industrial use or stockpiling, and may only be sold at not less than the current market price or at the minimum sale price provided by statute for commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation, whichever is higher.1/ The loan and purchase programs may be carried out without regard to limitations of existing law. The requisitioning power covers equipment and supplies and materials or facilities necessary to produce or operate such equipment and supplies where the need is extremely urgent and cannot otherwise be met.

1/ In addition to purchases of raw materials the Act authorizes the encouragement of exploration, development, and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals.

The Executive Order designates the guaranteeing agencies, including the Departments of Agriculture, Interior and Commerce, and the General Services Administration. It also designates the Federal Reserve Banks as fiscal agents, subject to the supervision of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, for the guaranteeing agencies. The Executive Order also delegates the authority to make loans and purchases, within the funds made available by the President, in such manner as to require loans to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and purchases to be made by the Administrator of General Services upon certification by the Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce with respect to materials and facilities assigned to them respectively for priority and allocation purposes, except that the Secretary of Agriculture may certify also as to lumber and the Secretary of the Interior may certify also as to metals and minerals. It is provided, however, that the Secretary of Agriculture may make direct purchases of agricultural commodities. The delegation with respect to requisitioning is made to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Commerce with the same coverage as in the delegation of the priority and allocation power, except that the power to dispose of requisitioned property no longer needed is delegated to the Administrator of General Services. The Executive Order contains the same authority for redelegation as in the case of priorities and allocations.

The provisions of the Act relating to advisory committees and small business enterprises, the obtention of information for the purpose of administration and enforcement, and the disclosure of confidential information, are the same for procurement functions as for priorities and allocations.

Maximum Prices for Materials and Services and Wage Stabilization

The Act authorizes the establishment of maximum prices covering the consideration, whatever it may be, in the disposition of any material or service and the stabilization of remuneration in any form for personal services rendered by employees. The action taken may be selective or general; that is, it may relate to a particular material, service or type of employment, or generally to all materials, services and types of employment.

A price ceiling with respect to an individual material or service may be established only under prescribed conditions. The principal conditions are that the price has risen or threatens to rise unreasonably above the price prevailing during the period May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, and that such price increase will materially affect the cost of living or the national defense. Whenever a price ceiling is established for a particular material or service the wages in any business producing the particular material or performing the particular service shall likewise be stabilized and the regulation stabilizing such wages shall prohibit such increase in wages as would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships on sellers subject to the price ceiling. When price ceilings have been established on materials and services comprising a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, ceilings, together with wage stabilization, shall be made general.

The price and wage measures as to particular materials, services or types of employment may be administered by existing agencies of the government pursuant to delegation by the President, but when the President determines that it is necessary to impose such controls generally over a substantial portion of the national economy, the controls, together with rationing at the consumer level of goods for household and personal use, shall be exercised through an independent agency created for that purpose without power of delegation. The Executive Order of the President creates an Economic Stabilization Agency for the administration of price and wage controls.

Any regulation or order controlling prices and wages must meet the basic requirement that it be generally fair and equitable and carry out the purposes of the law. The regulation or order must be accompanied by a statement of underlying considerations. To meet the basic requirement, the Act specifies certain factors which must be taken into account. It directs that, so far as practicable, due consideration must be given to prices and wages which prevailed during the period May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, if representative, and if such prices and wages were not representative, then those which prevailed on the nearest date on which they are generally representative. In determining and adjusting price ceilings, due consideration must likewise be given to all relevant factors of general applicability, including speculative fluctuations and general changes in costs and profits since June 24, 1950. In like manner, due consideration must be given to the national effort to achieve maximum production.

Adjustments are required to be made to prevent or correct hardships, including hardship to sellers under contracts normally made for future delivery. Authority is given for appropriate exemptions and exceptions of materials, services and types of employment. The Act itself excepts real property, professional services, material for publication, insurance, public utility services, and margin requirements on commodity exchanges from price control. The controls may not be exercised to effect changes in established business methods, to restrict the use of trade and brand names, to require grade labeling, to standardize any material or service, or to establish price ceilings for different kinds of material or service based on any specification or standard not in general use, except that changes in business methods and standardization may be required upon a determination that such a requirement is necessary for effective price control. Sellers of materials at retail may not be required to limit sales with reference to any previous highest price line offer.

Minimum ceilings are provided for wages and agricultural commodities. The minimum for wages is the wage paid during the monthly period above, and any wage stabilization must also be consistent with Federal and State labor laws. The minimum price ceiling for agricultural commodities (other than fluid milk in Federally non-regulated areas) is the highest of four prices: (1) parity price, (2) the highest price received by producers during the period May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950, (3) if the market for the commodity was inactive during such period, the average price received by producers during the most recent representative period prior thereto in which the market was active, adjusted to the level of prices of agricultural commodities generally for the monthly period, or (4) in the case of fire-cured tobacco, 75% of the parity price for Burley tobacco, and in the case of dark air-cured and Virginia sun-cured tobacco, 66-2/3% of the parity price for Burley tobacco. The minimum ceiling prices are to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and adjusted by him for grade, location and seasonal differentials, except that in the case of tobaccos specified above, the adjustment is for grade differentials only. The minimum ceiling price for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in an area not Federally regulated shall be not less than the higher of (1) the parity price for such milk and (2) such a price for such milk in the area as will maintain the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as in the period May 24, 1950 to June 24, 1950. Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds, however, that the price determined by this formula is not reasonable in view of relevant economic conditions in the area, including feed costs, he shall fix such a price as will reflect such conditions, and the price so fixed by him is required to be used as the ceiling price for such milk in the area. Marketing agreements and orders under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, are not affected in any way.

The Act makes additional provisions relating to price control of agricultural commodities. In establishing a ceiling (1) for any agricultural commodity for which the 1950 marketing season commenced prior to the enactment of the Act and for which different areas have different periods of marketing during such season or (2) for any agricultural commodity produced for the same general use as a commodity described in (1), due consideration shall be given to affording equitable treatment to all producers of the commodity for which the ceiling is being established. Also, appropriate allowance or adjustment shall be made in the ceiling price of any agricultural commodity or product produced in whole or in substantial part therefrom for a substantial reduction in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors that result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of the agricultural commodity. It is further provided that the minimum ceiling price for a product produced in whole or in substantial part from an agricultural commodity shall be a price that will reflect (1) to the producers of the commodity, a price equal to the minimum ceiling price for the commodity, and (2) to the processors, a fair and equitable margin for processing.

Contracts with the government for the purchase of processed chickens or turkeys shall contain a provision, when price ceilings are in effect, that the contractor represents that the contract price is based upon an estimated price paid to the producers for the live fowls, and that the contract price shall be reduced coextensively with the amount by which the actual producer price was less than the estimated price.

It is unlawful to sell or deliver any material or service or to pay any wage in contravention of the Act or any regulation thereunder relating to price or wage stabilization. It is also unlawful for any person to buy or receive in business any such material or service or for any employee to receive any wage in contravention of the Act or any regulation thereunder. No person, however, may be required to make sales or to perform personal services. A willful violator is subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. All persons are excused from damages or penalties for any act or failure to act as a result of compliance with any order issued pursuant to the Act, even though such order may later be declared by competent authority to be invalid. The non-business buyer of a material or service may sue the seller on account of overcharge, and the United States may bring such an action where the buyer fails, or is not entitled, to bring action.

No other court than the Emergency Court of Appeals (and the Supreme Court on certiorari to the Emergency Court of Appeals) may consider the validity of price regulation. The jurisdiction of the Emergency Court of Appeals is invoked to review the administrative denial of a protest. It is provided, however, that the defendant in any enforcement proceeding, civil or criminal, may obtain leave to file a protest in the Emergency Court of Appeals, and upon the granting of such leave the defendant is entitled to stay of the proceeding. He is likewise entitled to stay in case a protest is already properly pending before the agency or under review in such court. The stay in a civil proceeding may only be granted upon application within five days after judgment, and shall be accompanied by injunction against further violations during the period of stay.

The provisions of the Act relating to advisory committees and small business enterprises, the obtention of information for the purpose of administration and enforcement, and the disclosure of confidential information, are the same for price and wage stabilization as for priorities and allocations.

Consumer Credit, Real Estate Construction Credit and Government Real Estate Credit

The Act provides for the regulation of consumer credit by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and of real estate construction credit by the President. The President may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Federal Reserve Banks, and any other agencies, Federal or state, in the regulation of real estate construction credit. Real estate construction credit is credit given by private lenders, and is broadly defined, with new construction meaning that which is begun after August 3, 1950. Lenders may be required to keep records and make reports, and the records are subject to examination. Registration of lenders, or credit transactions, subject to suspension after notice and opportunity for hearing, may also be required. A willful violator of any regulation relating to consumer credit or real estate construction credit is subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Provision is also made for regulation by the President of loans on real estate made, insured, or guaranteed by the government, including wholly-owned and mixed ownership government corporations, with preservation, however, of the relative credit preferences now accorded to veterans.

The Executive Order delegates authority over real estate construction credit to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, subject to the concurrence of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator in any regulation involving residential property, and delegates to the said Administrator authority to regulate government credit on real estate involving residential property, subject to the requirement that the Administrator shall see that the restrictions imposed on real estate construction credit are made applicable to the fullest extent practicable to government credit on real estate involving residential property.

The provisions of the Act relating to advisory committees and small business enterprises, the obtention of information for the purpose of administration and enforcement, and the disclosure of confidential information, are the same for credit regulation as for priorities and allocations.

Voluntary Agreements

The President is empowered to accomplish the objectives of the Act through approved voluntary programs, and nothing done by any person under a voluntary program approved by the President will come within the prohibitions of the anti-trust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act. A copy of each request for a voluntary program shall be furnished the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Commission, and the request must be published in the Federal Register unless publication is determined by the President to endanger the national security.

The authority of the President over voluntary programs may be delegated to Senate-confirmed officials of the government, but any delegation to effectuate voluntary programs for priorities and allocations may be made only to a single official. The delegate of the President must consult with the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Commission not less than ten days before making any request for, or finding under, a proposed voluntary program, and the request must be approved by the Attorney General before the making thereof.

The functions relating to voluntary programs are delegated in the Executive Order to the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior and Commerce and the Commissioner of Interstate Commerce Commission, respectively, according to the designation of materials and facilities set forth in that part of the Executive Order delegating functions relating to priorities and allocation, except that the Secretary of Commerce is the sole delegate for the effectuation of voluntary programs for priority and allocation purposes. The power to effectuate voluntary programs relating to finance is delegated to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and with respect to stabilization to the Economic Stabilization Administrator. The Executive Order contains no authority to redelegate except in the matter of consultation with interested persons looking to the adoption of a voluntary program.

The provisions of the Act relating to advisory committees and small business enterprises, obtention of information for the purpose of administration and enforcement, and disclosure of confidential information, are the same for voluntary programs as for priorities and allocations.

This description of the provisions of the Defense Production Act of 1950 is not intended as an interpretation of the statute in its applicability to specific situations. A careful study of the relevant provisions of the statute will be necessary in the solution of particular problems as they arise.

July 19, 1950	H. R. 9176 was introduced by Rep. Spence and was referred to the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Print of the bill as introduced.
	S. 3936 was introduced by Senator Maybank and was referred to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. Print of the bill as introduced. (Companion bill).
July 20, 1950	Print of an amendment to S. 3936 proposed by Senator Thye.
July 21, 1950	Print of an amendment to S. 3936 proposed by Senator Johnson.
July 24, 1950	Hearings: House, H. R. 9176.
	Hearings: Senate, S. 3936. and Supplement.
July 28, 1950	House Committee reported H. R. 9176 with amendments. House Report 2759. Print of the bill as reported.
July 31, 1950	House Rules Committee reported H. Res. 740 for the consideration of H. R. 9176. House Report 2763.
	Print of an amendment to S. 3936 proposed by Senator Byrd.
August 1, 1950	Senate inserted the President's letter urging passage of S. 3936.
	House began debate on H. R. 9176 and agreed to H. Res. 740.
August 2, 1950	H. R. 9308 was introduced by Rep. Kunkel and was referred to the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Print of the bill as introduced. (Similar bill).
	H. R. 9314 was introduced by Rep. Spence and was referred to the House Committee on Banking and Currency. Print of the bill as introduced. (Similar bill).
	House continued debate on H. R. 9176.
August 3, 1950	House continued debate on H. R. 9176.
August 4, 1950	House continued debate on H. R. 9176.
August 7, 1950	Hearings: Senate, supplemental, S. 3936.
	Senate Committee reported S. 3936 with amendments. Senate Report 2250. Print of the bill as reported.
August 8, 1950	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senator Maybank.
August 9, 1950	Senate began debate on S. 3936.
	House continued debate on H. R. 9176.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senator Maybank.

August 10, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	House concluded debate and passed H. R. 9176 with amendments by a vote of 383-12.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Capehart, Frear, and McClellan.
August 11, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Byrd, Capehart, Robertson, Johnson, Fulbright, Taft, and Bricker.
	Print of H. R. 9176 as passed the House.
August 14, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Williams and Dworshak.
August 15, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Ferguson, Maybank, Sparkman, Taft, Wherry, and Williams.
August 16, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Holland, Kem, and Wherry.
August 17, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Capehart, Fulbright, Hunt, Saltonstall, Ives, Kem, Maybank, and O'Mahoney.
August 18, 1950	Senate continued debate on S. 3936.
	Prints of amendments to S. 3936 proposed by Senators Fulbright, Wherry, Williams, Maybank, and Millikin.
August 21, 1950	Senate concluded debate and passed H. R. 9176 with amendments, by a vote of 85-3. Action on S. 3936 indefinitely postponed. Senate conferees appointed.
	Print of H. R. 9176 with the amendments of the Senate.
August 22, 1950	House conferees appointed.
August 28, 1950	Senate changed one conferee.
August 31, 1950	House received the conference report. House Report 3042.
September 1, 1950	Both houses agreed to the conference report.
September 8, 1950	Approved. Public Law 774.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JULY 19, 1950

Mr. SPENCE introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title V. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, and (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid 50 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000; in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligation shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

Subtitle A—Consumer and Real Estate Credit

Sec. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context

otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory insurance service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property (including leasehold and other interests therein) ; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying such property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving such property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use such property.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 403. The first sentence of section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as added by section 1 of the Act of June 27, 1950 (Public Law 576, Eighty-first Congress), is amended to read as follows: "No member of a Federal home-loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That such amount shall not be less than 4 per centum or more than 20 per centum of the obligation of the member or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable."; and the last sentence of said section 5A is amended to read as follows: "This section shall be effective upon the enactment of the 'Defense Production Act of 1950'."

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of subparagraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of the Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this subparagraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade."

SEC. 412. Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress) is hereby amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, whenever the President so directs, sales of any commodity owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation may be made at the current support price for such commodity, when such support price is not below the market price, for the purpose of stabilizing the market, including the discouragement and prevention of undue speculation, fluctuation, and enhancement in price, and for the purpose of meeting unusual demand."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) in the formation of any business advisory committees under this Act, consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or Agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title II of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title II of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act requested by the President, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 509. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

By Mr. SPENCE

JULY 19, 1950
Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

FILE COPY

Please return to DIVISION OF LEGISLATIVE REPORTS
Office of Budget and Finance

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 19 (legislative day, JULY 1), 1950

Mr. MAYBANK introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as "The Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title V. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, and (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid 50 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount, or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligation shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

Subtitle A—Consumer and Real Estate Credit

Sec. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real-estate credit as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form, and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider, among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real-estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory insurance service connected with any such goods or interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property (including leasehold and other interests therein) ; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying such property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving such property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use such property.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 403. The first sentence of section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as added by section 1 of the Act of June 27, 1950 (Public Law 576, Eighty-first Congress), is amended to read as follows: "No member of a Federal home-loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That such amount shall not be less than 4 per centum or more than 20 per centum of the obligation of the member or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable."; and the last sentence of said section 5A is amended to read as follows: "This section shall be effective upon the enactment of the 'Defense Production Act of 1950'."

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of subparagraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of the Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this subparagraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean board of trade."

SEC. 412. Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress) is hereby amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, whenever the President so directs, sales of any commodity owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation may be made at the current support price for such commodity, when such support price is not below the market price, for the purpose of stabilizing the market, including the discouragement and prevention of undue speculation, fluctuation, and enhancement in price, and for the purpose of meeting unusual demand."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) in the formation of any business advisory committees under this Act, consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a persons' books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title II of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title II of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act requested by the President, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 509. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

By Mr. MAYBANK

JULY 19 (legislative day, JULY 1), 1950

Read twice and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 20, 1950

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. THYE to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, viz: At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. . Section 4 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act (15 U. S. C., sec. 604) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) In order to aid the Government of the United States in its national defense and security program, and to strengthen the national economy, the Corporation is authorized and directed to make loans to any private enterprize organized or operating under the laws of any State of the United States, for the development, production, and better utilization in the continental United States of iron ore (including taconite ore or iron formation), manganese, chromite, copper, lead, zinc, bauxite, aluminum, synthetic-liquid fuel, fertilizer, or other minerals important to the national defense and valuable to the national economy, including the construction of industrial facilities for the production and beneficiation thereof and transportation and shipping facilities therefor. Any such loan shall have a maturity not exceeding thirty years and may be repayable on a unit-of-production basis. The Corporation is authorized to accept, in lieu of a previous history of operation of a prospective borrower under this subsection, a showing that management will be in the hands of experienced business and technical personnel adequate to insure sound management, and the Corporation, in determining whether any loan under this subsection shall constitute a reasonable risk, is authorized to accept the opinion of the United States Bureau of Mines with respect to probable mineral reserves. No loan shall be made under this subsection unless the Attorney General shall have certified that the granting of such loan will not create, or tend to create, monopolistic conditions, practices, and restraints."

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. THYE to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

JULY 20, 1950

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JULY 21 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, viz: At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

(e) When in his judgment it will aid the national defense, the President is authorized to install additional equipment, facilities, processes, or improvements to plants, factories, and other industrial facilities now owned by the United States Government.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

AMENDMENT

Intended to be proposed by Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

JULY 21 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed

81st Congress } HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES { Report
2d Session } { No. 2759

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

July 28.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed

Mr. Spence, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany H. R. 9176]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9176), to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with an amendment, and recommend that the bill as amended to pass.

The amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause of the introduced bill, and inserts an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The text of the matter inserted appears in italic type in the bill herewith reported to the House.

General Statement

The President's message to the Congress of July 19, 1950, reported on the situation in Korea and presented his views concerning the significance of these events for this Nation and for the world. In the words of the President the significance of Korea is, "The free world has made it clear, through the United Nations, that lawless aggression will be met with force." He pointed out that the United States must increase its military strength and preparedness not only to deal with the aggression in Korea but also to increase our common defense, with other free nations, against further aggression and that the steps that must be taken will necessarily have repercussions upon our economy. He urged prompt action to insure that the increased national-defense needs will be met and that our economic strength which is at the base of our security is not impaired, but continues to grow.

In his Midyear 1950 Economic Report, the President outlined the duty of government in the following language:

> A primary duty of Government is "to provide for the common defense." In fulfilling this responsibility, the test is not how far we can go without placing strain upon the domestic economy or without creating inflationary pressures. We must go as far as changing circumstances may require. In the final analysis, there are no limits except our total strength to guide us in our determination to resist aggression and thus to strive for peace.
>
> The question remains as to how much of our total economic strength must be shifted from peacetime production to defense purposes in the current situation. On the basis of searching study of the best information now available, I have recommended to the Congress the substantially increased programs which should now be undertaken to resist aggression and further to build up our preparedness. I have also indicated that other programs will be needed.
>
> The realities of the current situation now require certain changes in national economic policy. These changes will take us in the right direction at once. And if the situation should become even more serious later on, the measures which I now propose for the current situation are also the measures which would make us more ready for further steps.
>
> Appropriate agencies of Government have for several years been preparing the detailed plans for these further steps, if and when needed. If it should become necessary, I shall without hesitation ask the Congress for the grant of the powers to implement these further plans, whether for complete economic mobilization or for further intermediate action depending upon the need.

* * * * * * *

Four of the five titles of the bill under consideration implement changes in national economic policy which the President believes are required. These are priority and allocation authority, authority to requisition, provision for expansion of productive capacity and supply, and control of consumer and real-estate credit and commodity speculation. The fifth title of the bill contains general provisions relating to the authority granted and provides for termination of all such authority June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

Because of the paramount importance of expediting the bill, hearings were limited to testimony from officials of the executive branch. The following witnesses appeared before the committee: W. Stuart Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Commerce, and R. M. Evans, representing the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. In addition Gen. Omar Bradley, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, appeared before the committee in executive session. Individuals and organizations were afforded an opportunity to submit statements of their views for incorporation in the record.

Your committee believes that in any appraisal of our present economic picture, two facts stand out clearly. One is the fundamental soundness of our position. Never in our history have we been so strong, has our national product been so high, has the diversity of employment, plant location, and sources of supply been so extensive.

The President in his message referred to our current total output of goods and services of almost $270 billions a year. He referred also to the 61½ million people now in civilian employment and to our huge production of steel, electric power, and food. American plant capacity was expanded greatly during World War II. In the 5 years since 1945 American business has built and added to its productive facilities $115 billions of new plants and equipment. Our over-all capacity to produce has been increased by 40 percent since 1940.

The Secretary of Commerce in his testimony before the committee outlines the general productive and supply position of our economy.

Our supplies of steel, nonferrous metals, lumber, rubber, coal, oil, and transportation are far greater than for the period prior to World War II. In 1940, we were dependent completely upon natural rubber for the production of rubber products. Today, we have a synthetic rubber industry capable of rapid expansion and now producing substantial quantities.

In 1940, our outlook for adequate oil supplies was unfavorable. Today, the domestic and Western Hemisphere reserve producing capacity, together with refining capacity to process the oil, is adequate to meet foreseeable needs.

Our transportation system has a far greater capacity than prior to World War II. Locomotives and freight car capacity exceeds prewar levels. Private and commercial vehicle registrations in 1949 were 36 percent greater than the 1939–41 average. In the 1939–41 period, American-flag vessels in the overseas trade totaled 563 with a gross tonnage of 3,400,000. We have, including reserve fleets, more than five times as many ships with a gross tonnage proportionately greater. Our oil gathering and trunk pipelines are 22 percent greater than prewar.

General industrial machinery capacity is two and one-half times larger than prewar. In machine tools, present production is utilizing only one-half of the capacity available.

Not only do we have a vast addition to our plant capacity and productive capacity, but it is better distributed than in 1940. The shift of population to the West has been accompanied by a shift in industry locations. The movement of plants toward the west coast has made it easier to operate in the Pacific than was true in 1940 and 1941.

We have thousands of airfields, shipyards, and other facilities available for use whose building in the early forties required not only a vast number of man-hours but tremendous quantities of steel, cement, and other basic materials. Most of the additional productive facilities which World War II required are available to be converted, if conversion proves to be necessary, without the drain on critical materials which was required to construct these plants in 1940, 1941, and 1942.

The second clear fact is that in spite of these considerations we are at the moment faced with certain grim problems. Much of the capacity available is now being fully used. There are already some shortages of materials, and our economy is operating at a very high tempo. The peacetime demand by businessmen and consumers has been due to confidence in our future. The recent increase in demand in certain areas is undoubtedly due to fear. While we should be reassured by the basic facts mentioned, we should do what we can to allay the fear which causes panic buying, and we should at the same time be prepared to discipline those who are trying to take advantage of that fear.

Even now there are signs, as represented by price movements, that the problems raised by increased consumer demand, by an expanded military program and by an accelerated and expanded stockpile program, are already upon us.

Consumer purchasing as shown by retail sales reached a record high in June. In the last 3 weeks further increases of retail purchases have occurred.

Business purchasing was also stepped up within the past 3 months to support a rising volume of production and sales. Nonfarm business increased its book value of inventories by more than 6 billion dollars at an annual rate, during the second quarter of this year. Expenditures on new plant and equipment also increased during the quarter, and, together with record rates of housing construction, have resulted in a peak volume of national production.

The bill reported by your committee provides for dealing with the situation in two principal ways. The first, by channeling needed materials into production for the national defense and the second, by providing authority through the exercising of credit controls to reduce consumer demand for goods and materials needed for the national defense. At the same time the bill also provides authority through a system of loans and loan guaranties for increasing the production of materials required to support an increased defense program and also provides authority for the procurement of metals and minerals for stockpiling and other defense purposes.

PRIORITIES, ALLOCATIONS, AND AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

Titles I and II of the bill would provide the means for a direct and specific approach to the problem of channeling materials and equipment in accordance with our national objectives. Title I would authorize the President to assign priorities and to allocate materials and facilities. It would provide that the authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use. In all other respects, the powers that would be granted are broad and flexible. They would include the power to issue orders stopping or reducing the production of any item; orders to prohibit the use of a material for a particular purpose or for anything except a particular purpose; and orders to prohibit the accumulation of excessive inventories. They would authorize the President to require filling certain orders in preference to other orders, or requiring the acceptance and performance of particular orders. Where limited action would be required to accomplish the necessary purpose, limited action could be taken. As far as possible the action to be taken could be limited to the immediate objective. Our productive and distributive system is so complex that authority which did not permit this flexibility would be likely either to prove insufficient or to do more harm than good. Title II would give the President authority to requisition. This power is needed only as a stand-by device, to insure that persons who hoard excessive quantities of materials and refuse to make them available could be compelled to do so. Full provision would be made, of course, for the payment of just compensation.

The power to requisition is a drastic exercise of the sovereign power. The committee is desirous of reducing to the minimum the effect of requisitioning upon the public. Provisions have therefore been inserted, requiring that the authority cannot be exercised unless the President has been unable to obtain the property on fair and reasonable terms, requiring the President to give the former owner the opportunity to reacquire the property at its then fair value, when it is no longer needed for the national defense, and providing for payment of 75 percent (instead of 50 percent as provided in the bill as introduced) of the value as determined by the President, when the former owner does not accept the amount so determined and wishes to have the amount of compensation determined by a court.

It is the committee's intention that the determination of value by the President be made as soon as feasible after the requisitioning, and that the former owner be given an opportunity, where feasible, to present evidence as to the value of the property, and that prompt payment be made of the 75 percent of the amount determined by the President when the former owner is not satisfied by the award and wishes to have the amount determined in court.

Your committee was informed by the representatives of the executive branch of the Government that the power to allocate will be utilized immediately in regard to steel and other metals in short supply. The importance of metals in our economy is well known. Most of our important metals are in tight supply and the increased demands can be met only with difficulty. Some of the important ones will require governmental action to make certain the supply is distributed in accordance with our needs. While for security reasons it would be unwise to disclose in great detail our position on these metals, a few categories demonstrate why the situation calls for certain controls.

First, let us consider steel which is the backbone of our economy. This industry is of paramount importance both in peace and in war. War needs of steel are obvious; in peacetime there are 44,000 steel fabricators and 10,000 other users of steel who enter the market. Steel consumers range from the very small machine shop, through home construction, to such consumers as the automobile manufacturers. Any diversion of steel out of the civilian market inevitably affects many consumers, and may result in inequities and severe hardships. Although the industry has expanded greatly in the last decade and is still expanding, capacity cannot be expanded overnight.

From 1940 to 1945 the iron and steel industry increased its ingot capacity by 17 percent, or some 15,000,000 tons. This increase in ingot capacity was accompanied by additional rolling mill, forging, and casting capacities, with all the auxiliary equipment, needed to bring out the required finished iron and steel products.

At the close of the war there was a total capacity of about 95 million tons. Some of this tonnage was overage and, while it served well in the war effort, it was inefficient for peacetime operations. Hence, 4 million tons of capacity were dismantled, leaving a total capacity of 91 million tons. From this level, the country's total equipment for making crude steel has risen to 100,563,000 tons as of July 1, 1950, and recently the American Iron and Steel Institute announced that the industry is planning a further increase in capacity of 5 million tons by the end of 1952.

In appraising the current supply-demand situation, comparison may be made with 1948, the first postwar year during which steel shortages ended. Steel inventories of the steel-consuming industries were built up in the last quarter of 1948, when steel shipments exceeded steel consumption for the first time in the postwar period.

The May–June 1950 rate of steel production exceeded the 1948 rate by about 12 percent. There was, however, a marked change in distribution. Consumption increased 95 percent in the automotive industry, 22 percent in construction, and 52 percent in the refrigerator industries. Shipments to freight-car builders declined 76 percent and to agriculture 20 percent. Exports decreased 43 percent.

The lack of serious steel shortage in the May-June 1950 period was the result of the much larger and better inventories held by the steel-consuming industries. But even before the invasion of Korea the upsurge in consumption of steel began to eat into the inventories held by the steel-consuming industries. The rush of orders that followed the Korean incident has greatly aggravated this situation. The military program will require heavy tonnages of steel. The impact of this will vary depending upon the types of products required.

Another illustration of a metal important to the national economy and which is of especial importance to the national defense, and with which the House is familiar, is tin. On Tuesday, July 25, 1950, less than 5 days ago, the House passed S. 3666 which provided for a 5-year extension of the operation of the Texas City tin smelter. That smelter, owned by the Government and the only tin smelter of any productive importance in the Western Hemisphere, supplied our economy during the war and postwar period with the major portion of our tin requirements. Its continued operation will assist in securing supplies for our production and stockpile needs.

Our copper industry has greatly increased its refining and fabricating capacity since the 1939–41 period and we now have idle capacity which would be put into operation. We have, however, a problem in obtaining adequate supplies of ores and concentrates to feed our refining capacity. The estimated supply of metal available in 1950 will be about 1,500,000 tons, of which 500,000 tons will be imported. Based on current experience, however, distribution—or disappearance from the market—of copper will be about 1,800,000 tons, and over the year this excess of distribution over supply could only be accomplished by drawing down stocks. Stocks of refined copper are now at low working levels. We must anticipate that for many months ahead neither the supplies of ores and concentrates, nor the imports of refined metal, can be significantly increased. Even without the addition of a new program for military purposes, and without the addition of an accelerated stockpile program, the heavy demands for copper, combined with the low level of working stocks, would mean that supply would be inadequate and consumers would meet increasing difficulty in obtaining supplies. The expanded military and stockpile programs will of necessity reduce the amount available for civilian use, and will create shortages and hardships to industries dependent on this important material.

Today our aluminum industry is operating 70 percent more capacity than was in operation in December 1941. All World War II plants that are now economical to operate are running at the present time. Other existing plants could be reactivated, over a period of several months, but electric power must be made available. On the basis of present practical capacity, it is estimated that supply available in 1950, including imports from Canada and supply from secondary sources, will be 1,075,000 tons, of which domestic ingot capacity will supply 600,000 tons. Based upon experience thus far this year, the distribution of more than a million tons will approximate our total available supplies. Working stocks fell from the beginning of the year, indicating that consumption during the first two quarters was at a level slightly above the available supply. It is thus clear that the imposition of an expanded military program, or of an accelerated stockpile program, or both, inevitably means that past and current civilian demands cannot be met in full.

In the case of each of these metals there is an increased capacity and in each there is also greatly increased demand, for the military and other programs, or for stockpiling. This increase will inevitably cut down on the supply available to industry generally, with consequent dislocations. The same situation is present, to a greater or lesser extent, in the case of many other materials, such as many chemicals, petroleum, and in the case of many kinds of equipment.

EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

Title III would authorize the President to provide for financial assistance in the expansion of productive capacity and supply of essential materials by three different methods.

Section 301 of the bill would authorize the President to reinstitute a guaranty program similar to the V-loan program operated by the Federal Reserve System during World War II. The proposed program would be confined to the guaranty by the national defense procurement agencies of loans made by banks and other financial institutions to contractors to finance the production of defense materials needed by the United States in the present emergency.

The financing problems of contractors engaged in defense production, particularly where they are small and medium size, are unique in character. The loan guaranty mechanism here proposed provides an effective solution of these problems. Contracts for essential defense materials often require much larger financing by contractors than they are able to command under ordinary financing practices. It can make possible maximum participation by numerous smaller business enterprises in the Government's defense production program, particularly those who do not themselves have direct Government contracts but whose work as subcontractors is essential for prompt performance on the larger prime contracts. It can also make practical the awarding of more Government contracts, requiring unusually large working capital or expansion in plant and facilities, directly to relatively small and medium-size concerns. Without such financing these concerns would not be able to make a full contribution to defense production. Finally, where great speed is essential in the performance of Government contracts, the mechanism can serve to expedite the consummation of loans with a promptness which is not always possible under usual procedures.

The loan guaranty proved to be an eminently successful means of encouraging the extension of private credit for facilitating production under Government contracts during World War II. The guaranty program of that period—the so-called V-loan program referred to earlier—was instituted under Executive order of the President in March 1942. Under that program, loans for war production were guaranteed by the armed services through the agency of the Federal Reserve System. The 12 regional Federal Reserve banks and 24 branches, with experienced personnel and close daily contacts with financial institutions, afforded an already existing and well-adapted organization for making such guaranties promptly available to contractors throughout the country. The Board of Governors in Washington acted as the coordinating agency in the administration of the program.

During the course of the V-loan program, bank loans to war contractors, both large and small, amounting to about $10½ billion were approved for guaranties. Over 90 percent of the number and one-third of the amount of these guaranties were on loans to small and medium-size businesses; that is, businesses with total assets of less than $5 million. Notwithstanding the great volume of loans handled, the program was self-supporting; receipts of the Treasury from the program exceeded expenses and losses by $23 million by the end of 1949. Without the program, the production of war materials would have required more Government financing through direct lending and other means.

The committee believes that the authority contained in this section of the bill for the establishment of similar machinery for the making of guaranteed loans is an essential part of the over-all program of the Government for expediting deliveries under defense production contracts.

Section 302 of the bill gives the President authority to provide for loans to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary with the exception that other financial assistance for such purposes must be unavailable on reasonable terms.

Such authority is not as broad as that previously given the Reconstruction Finance Corporation under the provisions of the act approved June 25, 1940 (amending sec. 5–d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act). Under that authority the RFC was not alone authorized to make loans but also to purchase the capital stock of any corporation for plant construction, expansion and equipment, and working capital, to be used by the Corporation in the manufacture of equipment and supplies necessary to the national defense. These loans increased the productive capacity of the country in providing steel, aviation gasoline, alcohol, synthetic rubber, jewel bearings and many other essential materials and supplies. Approximately $981 million of such business loans were made by the RFC during World War II.

The authority conferred upon the RFC under the above-mentioned section 5–d also included authority for the RFC when requested by the Federal Loan Administrator, with the approval of the President, to organize a corporation or corporations to acquire and carry strategic and critical materials as defined by the President. In the field of strategic and critical materials purchases were made of 50 different critical materials from 51 foreign countries, 38 States in the United States and Alaska and the Philippines. Section 303 of this bill would provide similar purchase authority in that the President could make provision for purchases of metals, minerals and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use and resale.

For the purposes of the loan and procurement authorities provided in the sections 302 and 303 of the bill the President would be authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations under prescribed powers and limitations. Any corporation established or utilized for such purposes would be authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States but the total amount of such borrowings outstanding at any one time for such purposes would be limited to $2 billion.

CONTROL OF CREDIT AND COMMODITY SPECULATION

Section 401 of title IV of the bill would authorize the President to regulate consumer and real estate credit. Under such authority minimum down payments on purchases, maximum maturities, and other standards appropriate to limit credit extension could be prescribed. The committee amended this section to make it clear that the authority to regulate credit only would apply to credit extended subsequent to the issuance of the regulations authorized. Section 402 of the bill would strengthen the President's authority to curtail Federal financing programs in the housing field when the national interest so requires. The committee regards these as important provisions of the proposed legislation.

Consumer credit regulations were administered by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System from September 1941 through October 1947 and again from September 1948 through June 1949.

Such regulations as might be necessary in the real estate credit field under section 401 would be designed to meet the special needs of this area. They would serve the same general purpose as consumer credit controls by restricting demand for housing and other construction and thus freeing materials used in buildings which are required in the defense effort. At the same time they would prevent the use of mortgage or other real estate as an avenue of obtaining credit to purchase those consumer goods, the demand for which is necessary to be curtailed. The committee included a provision (sec. 401 (e)) which provides that in the imposition of restrictions on real estate credit for home construction no restriction shall discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans as against conventional loans either with respect to required down payments, maturities, or otherwise.

Authority for restrictions on consumer and real estate credit should be provided for use to the extent necessary as an essential part of the program for conserving resources for defense and protecting the economy against inflation. This authority would help to prevent current and potential demand from exceeding supply in the areas affected. Accordingly, it would help to reduce inflationary pressure upon prices in these areas. It would help to make materials and manpower more readily available for the national defense and military effort, including the materials and manpower necessary to expand our total productive capacity.

The present international situation not only increases greatly the Government's demand for the goods and services of our economy, but at the same time accelerates private demand. These two additional factors of demand are imposed on a condition of already very high demand, employment, and prices. Even before the attack by the Communist North Koreans on June 25, prices were rising and we were in a potentially inflationary situation. Because of developments of the past few weeks, it is imperative that steps be taken to reduce or defer civilian demands and to lessen inflationary pressures.

The state of public psychology has already stimulated consumer buying and the accumulation of business inventories. In the week ending July 15, department store sales rose to a level 24 percent above a year ago, with increases ranging from 12 percent in the Richmond district to 39 percent in the Dallas district. Sales of automobiles and houses have risen to record levels.

Prices of 28 basic commodities, which had risen 7 percent from January 3 of this year to June 23, advanced sharply after the invasion of South Korea—10 percent in 1 month. The all-commodity index of wholesale prices, which had risen 4 percent by June 20, has since jumped 3 percent further. Consumer prices began to rise in March and recently the advance has been further accelerated. Consumer prices are now higher than at any other time, except for a short period in the latter part of 1948.

Unless prompt action is taken, the country will face serious problems of gray markets and spiraling prices. Not only would this situation upset our economic balance but it would add to the difficulty in procuring the manpower and materials necessary for the military effort.

One of the major factors in the expansion of private demand is the growth of mortgage and consumer credit. Since the end of 1945 consumer credit has been increasing by about $3 billion a year. The increase in the past 12 months was $3.5 billion and in May was almost $500 million, the largest increase on record for that month. This was before the Korean crisis precipitated the present buying spree.

The most important segment of total consumer credit is installment credit, especially for the purchase of durable goods. During the past year installment credit rose nearly $3 billion and accounted for 83 percent of the increase in total consumer credit. The role which installment credit has been playing in the growth of demand is illustrated not only in the amount of the expansion but also by the relaxation in the terms under which such credit is extended. Reports of declines in the required down payment are widespread and the average period of repayment has lengthened progressively.

The current record rate of residential construction involves the greatest increase in mortgage credit which the country has ever experienced. Home mortgages made by all lenders in the first half of 1950 amounted to about $6½ billion or at an annual rate of $13 billion.

The net increase in mortgage debt outstanding during the first half of 1950 (after regular amortization and other repayments) was about $3 billion, bringing the total outstanding on June 30 to about $40 billion. The home mortgage debt of this country has more than doubled since the end of the war.

Expansion of consumer and mortgage credit contributes not only to the current demand for labor and materials that go into housing and durable consumer goods, but also augments the demand for all other goods. The purchasing power created by consumer and mortgage credit enters the income stream where it adds to the competition for goods, including materials vital to the national defense.

Growth of consumer and mortgage credit increases the volume of money and other liquid assets. Expansion of bank loans for such purposes adds to the growth of bank deposits. Bank holdings of both consumer installment paper and mortgage paper are rising rapidly and are thus adding to the total supply of money which is already so large in relation to current output as to provide a constant inflationary threat. Restriction of consumer and mortgage credit, therefore, would help to keep within bounds the quantity of money and other liquid assets in the hands of the public.

In normal times consumer and mortgage credit play a very important and desirable role in our economic system. Without such credit widespread home ownership and mass distribution of durable goods would not have been possible. If our mass-production economy is to sustain its expansive character in normal times, we will need to have expansion of mortgage and consumer financing. However, in order that such financing may be of greatest value it is important that it be used most fully when industry is in a position to meet the demands created. When industry is already occupied to capacity and important resources must be diverted to the defense effort, the creation of new credit cannot increase the general availability of goods. On the contrary it contributes to inflation and economic disorganization. If mortgage and consumer credit is appropriately limited now it will be in a better position to play a necessary and desirable role whenever adequate productive capacity is once more available to meet freely consumer demands.

Section 411 would strengthen the regulation of speculative trading on the commodity futures markets by amending the Commodity Exchange Act in several respects.

Section 4a of the Commodity Exchange Act provides authority for fixing limits on the commodity futures trading and positions of individual speculators. Such limits tend to restrict the speculative trading of large operators. They are not effective with respect to the mass trading of the thousands of small speculators.

The most effective means of curbing excessive speculation in the commodity futures markets is by granting authority to establish margin requirements for speculative accounts. This can be accomplished without impairing the hedging facilities of the futures markets. Minimum margin requirements on the commodity exchanges are fixed by the exchanges themselves, and customarily range from 6 to 13 percent, as compared with the present 50-percent requirement on the securities exchanges, established by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

There can be no justification for unrestrained speculation during the current emergency. Authority to establish trading and position limits and minimum margin requirements on speculative commodity futures transactions should extend to all agricultural and forest commodities in which futures trading is conducted.

Section 411 of the bill would amend the Commodity Exchange Act to provide authority for the regulation of margin requirements on any board of trade for speculative transactions and commitments in any agricultural or forest commodity or product or byproduct thereof. Such authority would be conferred with respect not only to the commodities enumerated in section 2 (a) of the Commodity Exchange Act but also to commodities not now covered such as coffee, cocoa, sugar, wool, hides, rubber, apples, pepper, and onions.

Authority also would be conferred to establish limits on the speculative futures trading and commitments of individual speculators in any agricultural or forest commodity, product, or byproduct.

To make margin regulation and speculative trading limits effective with respect to commodities not covered by the present provisions of the act, provision would be made for necessary reporting, record-keeping, inspection of records, and subpena. Protection of margin deposits with respect to commodities now covered by the act, through segregation of customers' funds, would be extended to all agricultural and forest commodities in which futures trading is conducted.

In connection with consideration of this section of the bill, the chairman of the committee received a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture expressing his understanding of the intent of the proposed provisions. As will be noted in this letter the Secretary suggested that doubt as to the application of the provisions to other than futures transactions of a speculative nature could be resolved by inserting the qualifying word "speculative" in three appropriate places in the section. This suggestion was followed by the committee and in addition a proviso was incorporated specifically exempting bona fide hedging transactions from any rule or regulation issued under this section. The letter of the Secretary of Agriculture follows herewith:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, July 26, 1950.

Hon. BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPENCE: This is in response to your inquiry concerning section 411 of subtitle B of title IV of H. R. 9176.

The purpose of section 411 is to prevent excessive speculation in the commodity futures markets during the current emergency. The need for immediate curbs is obvious. Since the outbreak of hostilities in Korea there have been sharp advances in prices and heavy increases in volume of trading in the futures markets. Cotton, soybeans, and cottonseed oil are among the war-sensitive products which have been immediately affected.

The most directly effective means of curbing war-scare speculation, short of closing the markets, is to increase the amount of margin which speculators must deposit. Present minimum margin requirements on commodities are wholly in the hands of the exchanges and the rates are uniformly low. It is possible to speculate in all of the more important commodities with down payments averaging from 6 to 13 percent. It is obvious that such rates attract speculators away from the securities markets where 50 percent margin is required.

The stabilizing effect of adequate margin deposits has been tested for more than 15 years in the security markets and this beneficial effect would undoubtedly apply equally to commodity speculation. There need be no fear that some reduction in commodity speculation would handicap merchandisers and processors in their use of the market for price-protection purposes. The volume of speculation is definitely far beyond that needed for the purpose of facilitating actual marketing. Detailed analyses of trading on the more important futures markets have shown that approximately 95 percent of the trading on one of the cotton markets was speculative and that 80 to 90 percent of the trading in wheat, corn, and soybeans was speculative.

Soybeans represent the most current example of the effect of undesirable speculation. This speculation has resulted in such erratic price movements that actual soybeans have been selling recently in Chicago at 6 to 8 cents below the futures price. Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the artificial character of the futures quotations. Soybean processors have complained bitterly to the Department in recent weeks that the market was not only useless for hedging but that the character of the speculation taking place was causing such erratic price gyrations that legitimate merchandisers and processors were suffering heavy losses.

We understand it has been suggested that subtitle B of title IV would authorize margin control over hedging transactions as well as speculative trades and therefore, is broader than other bills to amend the Commodity Exchange Act, now pending (H. R. 4685; S. 1751). It would seem clear from the language of proposed paragraph (5) (A), which would be added by section 411 of the bill, that the intent is to authorize the regulation of margin requirements on speculative trading only. Any margin regulations administered by the Department would be applied accordingly. To resolve all doubt on this score, however, we would suggest that the bill be amended as follows:

Page 17, line 23, strike out "purchase or sale", and insert in lieu thereof, "speculative purchase or speculative sale".

Page 18, line 1, strike out "a position" and insert in lieu thereof "a speculative position".

With these clarifying amendments it would seem clear that no authority would be conferred by section 411 of subtitle B of H. R. 9176 beyond that which would be granted by H. R. 4685 and S. 1751.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES F. BRANNAN,
Secretary.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Title V contains a number of general provisions designed to facilitate execution of the provisions of the act.

In a time of shortages and actual or threatened inflation small-business enterprises frequently find themselves at a serious disadvantage. They cannot so easily hire expediters to get scarce materials, and often cannot easily convert to essential work in a defense economy. Small businesses cannot so easily follow the Government regulations which are issued at such a time. In order to minimize the hardships to small-business enterprises, section 501 of the bill requires that full information concerning activities under the bill be made available, that advisory committees be appointed on which small enterprises are represented, that feasible exemptions for small enterprises be granted, and that provisions be made for special handling of applications by small businesses.

In order to carry out any defense program, a great deal of information as to inventories, production, and requirements will be needed. Section 505 therefore provides for record-keeping and reporting requirements. Provisions are made to prevent undue duplication and harassment in these requirements, and to safeguard the confidentiality of the information submitted. The usual provision is made to protect against improper self-incrimination.

The experience of World War II has shown that voluntary cooperation on the part of industry can accomplish much to promote the national defense, where protection is given against the danger of prosecution under the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act. Section 508 of the bill contains such an exemption for acts taken at the request of the President. However, in view of the possibility that such voluntary programs might involve activities inconsistent with free competition, or might establish patterns of conduct which would continue after the expiration of the authority granted under the bill, provision is made for consultation with the Attorney General before action is taken under this section, and the committee has amended the section to make it clear that the immunity provided does not extend beyond the duration of the act. It is the understanding and intention of the committee that full consideration be given to small business enterprises in connection with any such program.

Regulation of the Nation's economy on the scale contemplated under the bill must be carried out with full knowledge and appreciation of the complexity and interrelations of our economy. Otherwise the intended results may not be accomplished, and instead much harm to the economy, and to the defense effort, may result. The advisory committees provided for under section 501 will give assistance to this end. In addition, the committee has also inserted a provision in section 510 (b), which would authorize the President to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation, and to waive certain statutes which might otherwise be construed as subjecting these employees to criminal penalties. This would enable these men to continue to draw their salaries from their former employers, and to retain pension rights with their companies. The committee recognizes the danger that such persons may be placed in a position where their loyalty to their former employer might conflict with their responsibility to the Government and the public. The committee places its reliance in the President to safeguard the interests of the public, first by making a wise selection of persons for such employment, and second by issuing regulations which would reduce to a minimum the extent to which these conflicts of loyalties may arise.

Other Changes of the Committee Amendment

The committee amendment strikes out two sections of the bill, as introduced, namely, section 403 and section 412. Section 403 would amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, to provide for an increase in the reserves authorized to be imposed on members of the Home Loan Bank System. In Public Law 576, approved June 27, 1950, the Congress made provision for the first time for authority to impose reserves for such member institutions. The reserves authorized to be imposed on any such institution under Public Law 576 are an amount equivalent to 4 to 8 percent of the member institution's obligations on withdrawable accounts. Such amount must be kept by a member institution in the form of cash or Government obligations. In view of the fact that the committee and the Congress has so recently acted upon the matter of reserve requirements for member institutions of the Home Loan Bank System, the committee was of the opinion that an increase in the maximum reserve requirements was not necessary at this time. Since these institutions for the most part are authorized to make only real-estate loans, the committee is of the opinion that any contraction of real-estate credit will automatically reflect itself in the reserves of such institutions.

Section 412 of the bill, as introduced, would have authorized the President to direct the Commodity Credit Corporation, notwithstanding the provision of any other law, to sell its stocks at the current support price provided that such support price was not below the market price. Under the provisions of existing law which are applicable to the sale of commodities owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized to sell basic and nonbasic storable commodities at a price not less than the current support price plus 5 percent, plus reasonable carrying charges. It is the considered opinion of the committee that the provisions of section 412 are not necessary.

Explanation of the Committee Amendment by Titles and Sections

Section 1

This section provides that the act may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950," and also contains a table of contents.

Section 2

This section contains a declaration of policy, setting forth the reasons why the proposed legislation is necessary and stating its objectives.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

Section 101

This section authorizes the President to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance. It also authorizes the President to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. However, use of the allocation power to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use is expressly prohibited.

The provisions of this section are patterned on provisions which were contained in title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942 (56 Stat. 176). The two significant differences are as follows: First, the allocation provision in the Second War Powers Act permitted the rationing of consumer goods at the retail level, a power denied by this section. Second, under the provision in the Second War Powers Act the exercise of the allocation power was limited by the necessity for a finding that fulfillment of requirements for the defense of the United States "will result in a shortage in the supply" of the material or facilities being allocated, whereas under this section the authority may be exercised upon a finding that the action is necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. Experience during World War II demonstrated the need for this change.

Section 102

This section provides for a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, in the case of any willful violation of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder. The same penalty was provided for in the Second War Powers Act.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

Section 201

This title authorizes the President to requisition certain property (that is, equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacturing, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or parts) urgently needed for the national defense, or the use of such property, when he is unable to acquire the property involved, or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms. Just compensation, as determined by the President in accordance with the fifth amendment of the Constitution, must be paid for any property or the use thereof so requisitioned or, if the person entitled to compensation does not accept as full payment the amount so determined, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of that amount, and may recover, in a suit against the United States, whatever additional amount is required to provide just compensation. Before disposing of any property (other than fungible property or property valued at less than $1,000) requisitioned under this title, the President is required, to the extent feasible and practicable, to give the former owner an opportunity to reacquire it.

This title is patterned on an act approved October 16, 1941 (55 Stat. 742), as amended by the Second War Powers Act. The principal differences between this title and the earlier act are as follows: (1) Requisition power under the earlier act could be exercised only with respect to "military or naval" equipment, supplies, and component parts; (2) the earlier act did not authorize requisitioning of any "facilities"; (3) under the earlier act, where the amount determined by the President to be just compensation was not accepted as full payment, only 50 percent of that amount was paid pending settlement of the dispute in court; (4) the earlier act did not provide, as this title does, that if the amount involved exceeds $10,000 suit must be brought in the Court of Claims; and (5) the earlier act contained certain restrictions on the requisition of firearms, and as tatement that the act should not be construed to impair or infringe the right of any individual to keep and bear arms, whereas these two provisions are not included in this title, the first because it would unnecessarily restrict the President's power under the title, and the second because the Constitution itself protects this right.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

Stated generally, this title, containing sections 301 to 304, provides methods to make possible the expansion of productive capacity and an increase in the supply of essential materials. The general statement at the beginning of this report shows a comparison of the authority granted under this title with that exercised under previous similar authority.

Section 301

Subsection (a) provides that, in order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize agencies of the United States engaged in procurement to guarantee loans made by public or private financial institutions to contractors or other persons for defense purposes. The President may authorize such agencies to make such guaranties without regard to laws relating to the making, performance, amendment or modification of contracts.

Subsection (b) authorizes any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve Bank, when designated by the President, to act as fiscal agent to carry out such guaranties, and provides for the utilization of funds of the guaranteeing agency to meet all expenses and losses incurred.

Subsection (c) authorizes the President to supervise the operations of such fiscal agents, and he is further authorized to prescribe rates of interest, fees and other charges and to issue regulations governing uniform procedures applicable to such guaranties.

Subsection (d) authorizes the use by guaranteeing agencies, for purposes of this section, of any funds appropriated or allocated, or otherwise available, to them for national defense purposes.

Section 302

This section gives the President authority to provide for loans (including participations in loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that such financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

Section 303

Subsection (a), to assist in carrying out the objectives of the act, authorizes the President to make provision for purchases or commitments to purchase such metals, minerals and other raw materials, including liquid fuels for Government use or for resale.

Subsection (b) removes the procurement restrictions of other laws and permits the President to make advance payments and prescribe other terms and conditions deemed necessary. The use of premium payments, however, is expressly confined to those cases in which the supply of essential materials cannot be obtained at lower prices or in which the purchases are necessary to assure availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

Subsection (c) provides that the power to purchase includes the power to transport and store, and to have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

Section 304

Subsection (a) authorizes the President, for the purposes of sections 302 and 303, to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other agencies of the Government or to create and use new corporations.

Subsection (b) sets out the general powers of the corporations which may be newly formed under this section. Life of such corporations is limited to June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation.

Subsection (c) provides that any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section may borrow from the Treasury of the United States such sums as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title, but the amount borrowed by all such corporations may not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. Obligations of such corporations are to be issued to the Secretary of the Treasury for purposes of such borrowing. In purchasing such obligations the Secretary is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL-ESTATE CREDIT

Section 401

This section provides authority for the regulation of consumer credit and real-estate credit, and sets forth the standards to guide the exercise of that authority.

The requirements of the regulations issued under this section would apply primarily to the person extending the credit—the dealer who sells the automobile, the finance company that buys the paper or makes the loan, etc.

The various subsections of section 401 are summarized below:

Subsection (a): To assist in carrying out the purposes of the act, the President would be authorized to prescribe regulations from time to time which, in his judgment, are necessary in order to prevent or reduce the excessive or untimley use of, or fluctuations in, consumer credit and real-estate credit. Any such regulation may apply only to credit extended after such regulation is prescribed.

The regulations may prescribe such matters as the kind or kinds of consumer or real-estate credit to be regulated, maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments, maximum maturities and amounts of credit, and rules against any credit in specified circumstances. Rules also may be prescribed regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and regarding other similar or related matters. Persons or transactions may be appropriately classified. The regulations, in addition, may include such administrative provisions as are reasonably necessary to effectuate the purposes or to prevent evasions of the authority so established.

The regulations may be changed or suspended by the President from time to time in order to take account of changing conditions. But, in either prescribing, changing or suspending the regulations, the President is required to consider, among other factors, (a) the level and trend of consumer and real-estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (b) the effect of the use of such credit upon (1) purchasing power and (2) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (c) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

Subsection (b): This subsection prohibits conduct contrary to the regulations prescribed under this section. It also provides that persons subject to such regulations shall make, keep, and preserve such records and related matters, and make such reports, as may be necessary or appropriate to an effective administration of the consumer credit and real-estate credit provisions of the bill. In addition, provision is made for periodic or other examinations or inspections which may be reasonably necessary or appropriate to an effective administration of such authority.

Subsection (c): This subsection provides that any person who willfully violates any provision of section 401 or section 402 or any regulation or order thereunder shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year or both. The maximum criminal penalties provided in the statute pursuant to which consumer credit was previously regulated were $10,000 fine or 10 years' imprisonment, or both.

Subsection (d): Under this subsection, persons, transactions, or classes of persons or transactions subject to this subtitle may be licensed or required to be registered. This is not an automatic requirement but one which may be included in the regulations prescribed by the President. Such a requirement will be not only of material assistance in enforcement but also a valuable source of information as to such matters as the number of persons or the volume of transactions of the kind or kinds that are subject to regulation. The subsection also provides for the suspension of any required license or registration for violation of the subtitle or regulations prescribed thereunder. This could be done only after notice and opportunity for hearing; and any person whose license or registration is suspended would be entitled to court review of the suspension order under the judicial review provisions of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 which are made applicable to any suspension order under this subsection.

Subsection (d) also provides that in carrying out the authority granted to him by this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

Subsection (e): Provision is made in this subsection that in the imposition of restrictions on real estate credit for home construction no restriction shall discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans as against private lenders either with respect to percentage of value or maturity or otherwise.

Subsection (f): This subsection defines certain basic terms used in the law.

The term "consumer credit" is defined to mean "credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit." This includes both installment and noninstallment credit. However, the following are exempted from the definition: (1) any credit to finance or refinance the purchase or construction of any entire building, either residential or nonresidential; (2) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale; or (3) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

The term "real-estate credit" is defined to mean credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or construction buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. It is made clear that "real property" wherever used in this definition, includes a leasehold and other, interests in real property.

The term "credit" is defined broadly and at length, the purpose being to include any credit, any form of credit, or any arrangement which, in effect, constitutes credit. Only through a comprehensive definition can regulations be made effective and equitable.

The definition of "person" includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, as well as the entities or business forms or groups specified in the definition of "person" contained in section 502 (a) of the bill. However, the criminal penalties of subsection 4 (c) do not apply if the "person" is the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

This subsection also provides that the regulations issued under this section may further define the above terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade and accounting terms. This permits sufficient flexibility to meet problems that may now be unforeseen; but any such definition by regulation may not be inconsistent with the provisions of the law.

Section 402

This section establishes authority to restrict or suspend Federal loan or credit assistance programs the operations of which may be contrary to the purposes of the bill. Thus, the President, in order to carry out the objectives of the bill, is authorized to require a scaling down of any Federal program for the insurance or guarantee of real estate loans, or the scaling down or complete suspension of Federal real estate loan programs. However, such action may be taken only upon a determination by the President that it is necessary in the public interest, after considering its effect on the building industry and the national economy and the needs for increased defense production. The President is also required to give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

Section 411

This section adds a new paragraph 5, containing subparagraphs (A) through (G), to section 4a of the Commodity Exchange Act.

Subparagraph (A) would provide that upon determination by the President that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations in price of any commodity, he may prescribe regulations as to margin for speculation purchase or speculative sale of such commodity for future delivery on any board of trade. Bona fide hedging transactions are specifically exempted from such control.

Subparagraph (B) would provide that buying, selling, or accepting orders for purchase or sale of such commodity for future delivery is unlawful unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph. A floor broker acting solely in that capacity shall not be deemed a violator of this paragraph.

Subparagraph (C) would provide that money, securities, or property deposited as margin for transactions on any board of trade shall be handled in compliance with the provisions of section 4d (2) of the Commodity Exchange Act, which section relates to protection to customers against commingling of funds and investment of funds deposited as margin.

Subparagraph (D) would provide that it is unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for purchase or sale of a commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, unless such person keeps written records of such transactions, which shall be kept for 3 years from date of each transaction, and open at all times to inspection by any duly designated Government representative.

Subparagraph (E) would provide that for the purposes of paragraph (5) the term "commodity" shall include any agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

Subparagraph (F) would make the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended (relating to investigations, injunctions, and prosecution of offenses), applicable for administering and enforcing this paragraph 5.

Subparagraph (G) would make applicable to any board of trade and any commodity, as defined in subparagraph (E), the provisions of sections 4a and 4i of the Commodity Exchange Act. These sections respectively relate to restrictions on excessive speculation and the reporting of positions in excess of authorized limits.

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISION

Section 501

This section expresses the policy of encouraging the participation of small business firms in programs authorized by this act. It provides for furnishing to small business enterprises full information concerning the activities under the act of Government agencies. It also provides for such exemptions for small firms as are feasible, and for special procedures designed to expedite their applications, requests, and appeals relative to such participation.

This section further provides that such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations, and orders issued under the act, and that in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry.

Section 502

This section defines, for the purposes of the act, the terms "persons" and "materials."

Section 503

This section provides that any power or authority conferred upon the President by this act may be delegated and (upon authorization by the President) redelegated to any officer or agency of the Government. Personnel to carry out the purposes of this act are authorized without regard to section 14 (the "personnel ceilings" provision) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946.

Section 504

This section authorizes the President to make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of the act, and provides that any regulation or order may contain such classifications and differentiations, and provides for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as the President deems necessary or proper in effectuating the purposes of the act.

Section 505

Subsection (a) provides that the President may, while the act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, obtain information, require reports, require the keeping of records, make inspections of books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, such persons as may be necessary or appropriate in his discretion, to the enforcement or administration of the act and the regulations or orders thereunder. He is required to issue regulations insuring that such authority will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

Subsection (b) provides that no person shall be excused from complying with requirements under this section or from testifying or producing evidence in obedience to a subpena for any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence required may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. This requirement is coupled with a provision to insure immunity from any penalty or forfeiture in any judicial proceeding, State or Federal, on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which such person is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence. Exception is made in the case of a natural person committing perjury in so testifying. It is provided that the immunity so granted shall not be construed to vest in any individual any of certain specified rights with respect to priorities, allocations, or other benefits under this act.

Subsection (c) deals with the places at which a person may be required to produce documentary evidence. It also provides that witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

Subsection (d) relates to the treatment of confidential information obtained pursuant to this section and provides for penalties for willful violations of the subsection.

Section 506

This section grants to district courts of the United States and to courts of Territories or other places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, jurisdiction of violations of this act or regulations prescribed thereunder and of civil actions brought to enforce the act or such rules or regulations. The section specifies the districts in which actions may be brought and contains provisions as to service of process and service of subpenas. It also provides that the termination of any title or section of the act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder shall not affect any suit, action, or prosecution which is based upon a right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title, or such rule, regulation, or order.

Section 507

This section provides an exemption from damages or penalties which might result from compliance with rules, regulations, or orders issued under title I. This section also prohibits discriminations against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I or any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder.

Section 508

This section provides that no act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act. It is provided that copies of such requests shall be furnished to the Attorney General and shall be published in the Federal Register unless, in the opinion of the President, publication would endanger the national security. It is further provided that the authority granted under the provisions above referred to shall not be delegated to more than one official of the Government, who will be required to consult with the Attorney General concerning each request. Such requests may be withdrawn, and the immunity provided for by this section will not be applicable to a subsequent act or omission by reason of such request.

Section 509

This section exempts the functions exercised under this act from the Administrative Procedure Act, except the requirements of section 3 thereof. Such section 3 relates to the publication of rules, opinions, and orders and to making official records available to persons properly and directly concerned.

Section 510

Subsection (a) authorizes the President, to the extent he deems it necessary or appropriate, to carry out the provisions of this act, to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the general schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, in addition to the number now permitted. Under present law a limit of 400 is established on the number of positions which may be placed in such grades.

Subsection (b) authorizes the President, in carrying out the provisions of this act, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation. He is granted authority to provide for the exemption of such persons from the operation of certain specified provisions of Federal law.

Section 511

This section contains an authorization for appropriations necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. It provides that funds so appropriated may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of the act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out the act.

Section 512

This section contains a separability provision.

Section 513

This section fixes June 30, 1952, as the date on which this act and all authority conferred thereunder shall terminate, but provides that the act and the authority thereunder shall terminate at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President by proclamation, may designate.

Changes in Existing Law

In compliance with paragraph 2a of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, changes in existing law made by the bill, as introduced, are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is enclosed in black brackets, new matter is printed in italics, existing law in which no change is proposed is shown in roman):

Section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act

Sec. 5A. No member of a Federal [Home Loan Bank] home-loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That such amount shall not be less than 4 per centum or more than [8] 20 per centum of the obligation of the member [on] or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable. The Board is authorized in said regulations to prescribe from time to time different amounts, within the limitations hereinbefore specified, for different classes of member institutions, and for such purposes the Board is authorized to classify such members according to type of institution, size, location, rate of withdrawals, or such other basis or bases of differentiation as the Board may deem to be reasonably necessary or appropriate for effectuating the purposes hereof. Failure to comply with the provisions hereof shall constitute ground for removal from membership. This section shall be effective [six months after the date of its enactment.] upon the enactment of the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

Section 4a of the Commodity Exchange Act

Sec. 4a. (1) Excessive speculation in any commodity under contracts of sale of such commodity for future delivery made on or subject to the rules of contract markets causing sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of such commodity, is an undue and unnecessary burden on interstate commerce in such commodity. For the purpose of diminishing, eliminating, or preventing such burden, the commission shall, from time to time, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, by order, proclaim and fix such limits on the amount of trading under contracts of sale of such commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any contract market which may be done by any person as the commission finds is necessary to diminish, eliminate, or prevent such burden. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the commission from fixing different trading limits for different commodities, markets, futures, or delivery months, or different trading limits for buying and selling operations, or different limits for the purposes of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of this section, or from exempting transactions commonly known to the trade as "spreads" or "straddles" or from fixing trading limits applying to such transactions different from trading limits fixed for other transactions.

(2) The commission shall, in such order, fix a reasonable time (not to exceed ten days) after the order's promulgation; after which, and until such order is suspended, modified, or revoked, it shall be unlawful for any person—

(A) directly or indirectly to buy or sell, or agree to buy or sell, under contracts of sale of such commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of the contract market or markets to which the order applies, any amount of such commodity during any one business day in excess of any trading limit fixed for one business day by the commission in such order for or with respect to such commodity; or

(B) directly or indirectly to buy or sell, or agree to buy or sell, under contracts of sale of such commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any contract market, any amount of such commodity that shall result in giving such person a net long or net short position at any one time in or with respect to any such commodity in excess of any trading limit fixed by the commission for net long or net short position in such order for or with respect to such commodity.

(3) No order issued under paragraph (1) of this section shall apply to transactions which are shown to be bona fide hedging transactions. For the purposes of this paragraph, bona fide hedging transactions shall mean sales of any commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any board of trade to the extent that such sales are offset in quantity by the ownership or purchase of the same cash commodity or, conversely, purchases of any commodity for future delivery on or subject to the rules of any board of trade to the extent that such purchases are offset by sales of the same cash commodity. There shall be included in the amount of any commodity which may be hedged by any person—

(A) the amount of such commodity such person is raising, or in good faith intends or expects to raise, within the next twelve months, on land (in the United States or its Territories) which such person owns or leases;

(B) an amount of such commodity the sale of which for future delivery would be a reasonable hedge against the products or byproducts of such commodity owned or purchased by such person, or the purchase of which for future delivery would be a reasonable hedge against the sale of any product or byproduct of such commodity by such person.

(4) This section shall apply to a person that is registered as a futures commission merchant or as floor broker under authority of this Act only to the extent that transactions made by such person are made on behalf of or for the account or benefit of such person. This section shall not apply to transactions made by, or on behalf of, or at the direction of, the United States, or a duly authorized agency thereof.

(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act.

(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term "contract market", as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

(E) For the purposes of subparagraph (5) the term "commodity" shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

(G) Sections 4a and 4i of the Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this subparagraph (5) the term "contract market" as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade.

Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949

Sec. 407. The Commodity Credit Corporation may sell any farm commodity owned or controlled by it at any price not prohibited by this section. In determining sales policies for basic agricultural commodities or storable nonbasic commodities, the Corporation should give consideration to the establishing of such policies with respect to prices, terms, and conditions as it determines will not discourage or deter manufacturers, processors, and dealers from acquiring and carrying normal inventories of the commodity of the current crop. The Corporation shall not sell any basic agricultural commodity or storable nonbasic commodity at less than 5 per centum above the current support price for such commodity, plus reasonable carrying charges. The foregoing restrictions shall not apply to (A) sales for new or byproduct uses; (B) sales of peanuts and oilseeds for the extraction of oil; (C) sales for seed or feed if such sales will not substantially impair any price-support program; (D) sales of commodities which have substantially deteriorated in quality or as to which there is a danger of loss or waste through deterioration or spoilage; (E) sales for the purpose of establishing claims arising out of contract or against persons who have committed fraud, misrepresentation, or other wrongful acts with respect to the commodity; (F) sales for export; (G) sales of wool; and (H) sales for other than primary uses. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, whenever the President so directs, sales of any commodity owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation may be made at the current support price for such commodity, when such support price is not below the market price, for the purpose of stabilizing the market, including the discouragement and prevention of undue speculation, fluctuation, and enhancement in price, and for the purpose of meeting unusual demand.

○

Union Calendar No. 982

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

[Report No. 2759]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JULY 19, 1950

Mr. SPENCE introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

JULY 29, 1950

Reported with an amendment, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and ordered to be printed

[Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the part printed in italic]

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, ~~That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".~~

~~TABLE OF CONTENTS~~

~~Title I. Priorities and allocations.~~
~~Title II. Authority to requisition.~~
~~Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.~~
~~Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.~~
~~Title V. General provisions.~~

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, and (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall be paid 50 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designated to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out

~~its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligation shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.~~

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time or from time to time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context

otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory insurance service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property (including leasehold and other interests therein); credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying such property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving such property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use such property.

~~(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.~~

~~(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.~~

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SEC. 403. The first sentence of section 5A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as added by section 1 of the Act of June 27, 1950 (Public Law 576, Eighty-first Congress), is amended to read as follows: "No member of a Federal home-loan bank shall make or purchase any loan at any time when its cash and obligations of the United States are not equal to such amount as the Home Loan Bank Board shall by regulations prescribe: Provided, That such amount shall not be less than 4 per centum or more than 20 per centum of the obligation of the member or withdrawable accounts or, in the case of any member insurance company, such other base as the Board may determine to be comparable.''; and the last sentence of said section 5A is amended to read as follows: ''This section shall be effective upon the enactment of the 'Defense Production Act of 1950'.''

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

''(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragragh (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of subparagraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of the Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this subparagraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade."

SEC. 412. Section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (Public Law 439, Eighty-first Congress) is hereby amended by adding the following sentence at the end thereof: "Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, whenever the President so directs, sales of any commodity owned or controlled by the Commodity Credit Corporation may be made at the current support price for such commodity, when such support price is not below the market price, for the purpose of stabilizing the market, including the discouragement and prevention of undue speculation, fluctuation, and enhancement in price, and for the purpose of meeting unusual demand."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) in the formation of any business advisory committees under this Act, consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized group of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or Agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the determination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title II of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title II of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act requested by the President, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 509. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Pro-ecaure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title V. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

Subtitle A—Consumer and Real Estate Credit

Sec. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semi-durable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 502 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumen-tality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 411. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the speculative purchase or speculative sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a speculative position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall be applicable to bona fide hedging transactions.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term

'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of this Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade."

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 502. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 503. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 504. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 505. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 506. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 507. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 509. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 510. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 511. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 512. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 513. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9176

[Report No. 2759]

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

By Mr. SPENCE

JULY 19, 1950

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

JULY 29, 1950

Reported with an amendment, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and ordered to be printed

81st Congress, 2d Session } HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES { Report No. 2763

CONSIDERATION OF H. R. 9176

July 31, 1950.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed

Mr. Lyle, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany H. Res. 740]

The Committee on Rules, having had under consideration House Resolution 740, report the same to the House with the recommendation that the resolution do pass.

○

House Calendar No. 254

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. RES. 740

[Report No. 2763]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JULY 31, 1950

Mr. LYLE, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed

---

RESOLUTION

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed one day, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the five-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

S. 3936

AMENDMENTS

Intended to be proposed by Mr. BYRD to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

JULY 31 (legislative day, JULY 20), 1950
Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed clusion of a general requirement along the following lines in the civil functions portion of the appropriation bill:

"All projects authorized in the Flood Control Act of 1944, for construction by the Department of the Army, as well as all other projetcs thereafter authorized for construction by that Department, to the extent that a portion of the cost is or has been allocated to irrigation and assigned for repayment by the project beneficiaries and for which repayment contracts have not been executed, shall be subject to section 8 of the Flood Control Act of 1944, notwithstanding the fact that no additional works for irrigation are necessary, and no funds hereafter appropriated shall be available for expenditure for the construction of any such project unless and until the irrigation beneficiaries shall have executed repayment contracts with the Secretary of the Interior covering at least 50 percent of said reimbursable allocation to irrigation."

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL W. STRAUS,
Commissioner.

It therefore appears that (a) there is determined opposition to the signing of repayment contracts in compliance with reclamation laws, (b) very substantial irrigation benefits can be secured by landowners from the mere construction of the dams and the raising of the underground water level, (c) evasion of reclamation law in these projects will make it very difficult to enforce these carefully developed policies of the Government in other parts of the Central Valley and elsewhere in the country, (d) the $10,000,000 figure pressed by some water users as a repayment limit in the Kings River Valley (Pine Flat Reservoir) and the $14,250,000 figure earlier suggested by the Bureau of Reclamation both seem too low in view of the present cost estimates of $51,121,000 and the 1948 report of the Corps of Engineers that over 60 percent of the benefits of the project will be to irrigation, and (e) the only effective way to enforce reclamation policies here is by requiring compliance prior to completion of construction of the projects.

The President has on a number of occasions revealed his clear understanding of these issues and appealed for such a proviso in connection with any further appropriations for these projects. For the further information of Senators, I also submit a copy of the President's letter of April 8, 1949, to Senator MCKELLAR (Civil Functions, 1950 Appropriations, Senate Hearings, pp. 641–642) as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 8, 1949.

Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Appropriations,

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: When I approved the War Department Civil Functions Appropriations Act of 1947, I issued a statement on May 3, 1946, expressing gratification that the Congress, by the addition of provisos to the item for the Kings River project in California, had afforded an opportunity for assuring that the Federal reclamation policy, including repayment and wide distribution of benefits, would apply to the project. The Kings River project was the first of several similar projects in that area on which actual construction was to have begun by the Corps of Engineers. Construction of that project is now continuing as is construction on the second of these four dams: namely, the Isabella Dam. In addition, funds have been provided in the pending civil-functions appropriation bill to undertake detailed plans and specifications for the remaining two dams in this series: namely, the Terminus and Success Dams.

All of the reservoirs created by these dams will serve multiple purposes and in substantial measure are to serve irrigation needs in that part of the Central Valley, as well as to provide flood control. The disposition of the irrigation service in all four cases should be by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the reclamation laws.

In addition, because of the physical characteristics of the area, I am sure that we all recognize that, even if these particular reservoirs are built and operated solely for flood control, a substantial portion of the total potential irrigation benefits will result inevitably as incidental to the manner in which these reservoirs must be operated for flood control. Thus, as shown by experience in other cases, the most effective manner of assuring suitable repayment arrangements for the incidental as well as the direct irrigation services would be provided by agreement on those arrangements in advance of construction.

I urge, therefore, that, if the Congress deems it wise to appropriate funds for work on any of these reservoirs, the bill provide for irrigation service to be rendered through the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to the reclamation law. In doing so, I hope that the Congress will also find suitable means of safeguarding the Federal investment through assurance of suitable repayment arrangements.

Because of the importance of this matter to the integrity of the great Central Valley project of the Bureau of Reclamation, of which these reservoirs by their very nature must necessarily serve as a part, I hope that it may have your careful consideration.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

ADVANCED TRAINING IN AERONAUTICS OF TECHNICAL PERSONNEL OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ADMINISTRATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4) authorizing the advanced training in aeronautics of technical personnel of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, which were, on page 1, line 5, strike out "Administrator" and insert "Secretary of Commerce"; on page 1, line 10, strike out "Administrator" and insert "Secretary of Commerce"; on page 1, line 11, strike out "not to exceed twenty-five"; on page 2, lines 3 and 4, strike out "Administrator" and insert "Secretary of Commerce"; on page 2, line 11, after "aviation." insert "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, not to exceed $50,000 for any fiscal year, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection.", and on page 2, line 12, strike out "Administrator" and insert "Secretary of Commerce."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AID TO STATES IN FISH RESTORATION AND MANAGEMENT PROJECTS—REENROLLMENT OF H. R. 6533

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 249, authorizing the Clerk of the House to make a change in the enrollment of H. R. 6533, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 6533) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in fish restoration and management projects, and for other purposes, is authorized and directed to strike out paragraph (c) of section 2 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) the formulation and adoption of plans of restocking waters with food and game fishes according to natural areas or districts to which such plans are applicable, together with the acquisition of such facts as are necessary to the formulation, execution, and testing the efficacy of such plans."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

CONTROLS OVER WAGES, PRICES, AND THE DISTRIBUTION OF GOODS—LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the President of the United States has sent a letter to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which I desire to have placed in the body of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing you in response to your request for my views on the expressed desire of various Members of the Senate to add to the defense production bill (S. 3936) some kind of authority for direct controls over wages, prices, and the distribution of goods to consumers.

It is urgently necessary that the Congress act on the defense production bill without delay. If this measure is enacted promptly, we can do a great deal to ease the economic adjustments which our defense effort will require. At the same time, we can continue, on an expedited but careful basis, our planning and preparation for other economic controls, if and when needed.

Of course, there is no objection, in these circumstances, to enactment of additional stand-by control powers which the President could invoke when the need arose. Before my message of July 19, I gave careful thought to the desirability of asking at once for stand-by authority to control prices and wages, and to ration at the consumer level. I refrained from making this proposal to the Congress because it seemed more important to obtain quick action on the powers contained in the defense production bill. To have included a request for stand-by controls might, it seems to me, have dangerously delayed enactment of the immediate program, while the Congress considered these broader authorities. My recommendations of July 19 were designed to meet the problems immediately before us.

The Congress, in its judgment, may now want to make price, wage, and rationing controls available, on a stand-by basis, for use if and when needed. But if the Congress were to take this course, the following conditions appear essential:

First. These additional controls should be supplementary to, and not in lieu of, the basic powers already contained in the defense production bill. The production aids and limited controls for which I have asked are essential now.

Second. We cannot afford to bog down or delay in enacting what is needed at once, and supplementary provisions should be added only if they do not prolong consideration or delay action in either House.

Third. Any provisions relating to prices and wages should not set up a rigid formula or freeze in advance of experience. If these powers are now made available in advance of widespread need, it is simple common sense that they must be written in a form which allows wide discretion and flexibility as to the method and place and timing of application.

Fourth. For the same reason, any grant of price and wage authority should leave open the question of the method of administration. This should remain flexible, because it cannot be separated from the question of the extent to which price and wage controls actually might have to be applied.

If these reasonable conditions can be met, I should have no objection to the granting of authority beyond that requested in my message of July 19. But if, for any reason, these conditions cannot be met, I urge strongly that the Congress move at once to enact the defense production bill without including these additional powers.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

AUGUST 1, 1950.

LOCAL 50, INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION, AND THE WAR IN KOREA

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to read a resolution I have received, and make a very brief comment on it. It is a resolution that was passed by Local 50 of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union of Astoria, Oreg., dated July 9, 1950.

As a preface to the reading of the resolution, I wish to point out that for some years there has been a conflict within various maritime unions on the west coast as between the so-called right wing and the left wing. By left wing we mean those who within the maritime union have been following the Communist Party line.

I desire to say, as a Senator from the State of Oregon, that I am very proud of the fact that the members of Local 50 of the ILWU of Astoria, Oreg., on July 9 passed this resolution. It is about as clear evidence as can be offered that there is in a great number of the ILWU locals on the Pacific coast control by the right-wing element. I believe that when men take a stand against communism and make a fight against communism, as these free American workers within the maritime unions have been doing, it is worthy of comment and compliment on the floor of the Senate, and I am pleased to make such comment at this time in this form by reading the resolution.

The communication I have received is as follows:

The Honcrable WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following resolution was adopted by the officers and membership of Local 50, ILWU, the longshoremen of Astoria, Oreg., on July 9, 1950, in a special meeting:

"Whereas we, the longshoremen of the port of Astoria, banded together in Local 50, are American citizens, proud of our country and loyal to it; and

"Whereas serious international trouble has broken out in Korea, caused by the invasion of southern Korea by the Communist northern Korean Army; and

"Whereas in many places doubts have been cast on our loyalty as American citizens by recent local statements that the longshoremen are Communist dominated: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the longshoremen of Local 50, ILWU, in no uncertain terms, condemn the act of aggression by the Communist North Korean Army in breaking the peace and invading South Korea; and be it further

"Resolved, That we go on record without any reservations that we will support our Government and President 100 percent in this great crisis, and we will load any and all cargoes destined for the war area; and be it still further

"Resolved, That we shall not join in, condone, or recognize any Communist demonstrations, picket lines, etc.; and be it finally

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, Senators WAYNE MORSE and GUY CORDON, Congressman WALTER NORBLAD, and the press."

Yours very truly,

HARRY LARSON,
Secretary.

I am very proud of the action taken by local 50 in Astoria, Oreg., and I am satisfied that a majority, and I think a large majority, of the workers in the maritime unions, whose work is so vital to the security of our country, can be counted upon to rally to their patriotic duty, as have the members of local 50 of Astoria, Oreg.

THE KOREAN WAR SITUATION—POSITION OF THE INTERNATIONAL LONGSHOREMEN'S AND WAREHOUSEMEN'S UNION IN HONOLULU

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD several newspaper clippings and editorials from Honolulu regarding the position taken by the I. L. W. U. union there with reference to the Korean war situation.

First is a clipping from the Honolulu Star-Bulletin of July 26, 1950, giving the full text of the statement of the International Longshoremen's and Waremen's Union in Hawaii regarding the Korean situation.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF THE ILWU STATEMENT ON UNION'S POSITION IN KOREA ACTION

Following is the text of the local ILWU policy statement on UN and United States action in Korea. The statement, on behalf of the four ILWU local groups, was given to the Star-Bulletin this morning. The four groups are the sugar, pineapple, longshoremen's and warehousemen's and miscellaneous.

"Members of the ILWU are loyal Americans as the record conclusively proves. We all support our Government in the Korean police action which was sanctioned by the Security Council of the United Nations. Our locals will cooperate fully with our Government in this action.

"However, we deplore war and we earnestly believe that all international disputes should be settled peacefully through the machinery of the United Nations, without recourse to force of arms, so that the possibility of an atomic world war III might be avoided. This position is the same as that expressed by our union when the Arabs invaded Israel and the Dutch invaded the Indonesian Republic."

USING THE KOREAN SITUATION

"While we support our Government, we must express publicly our real concern about the speed with which certain employer elements in this community, including most newspapers, have seized upon the Korean situation as a smoke screen behind which they are carrying on an increasingly stepped-up campaign to split our union and to wipe out our economic gains.

"These elements are using the Korean situation to divert attention from their plot to speed up their production and to increase profits by getting more work out of less men for less money.

"This selfish program can only result in aggravating Hawaii's chronic unemployment situation."

WE WARN EVERYONE

"We warn everyone not to forget that the reduction in our unemployment rolls which is resulting from a move toward a war economy is but temporary and a return to stabilized economy with peace on the international scene will find unemployment and depression for Hawaii much worse than the recent chaos, should we permit the destruction of our wage and working standards by certain employers acting under their self-tailored cloak of 'patriotism.'"

SEES HORRIBLE EXAMPLE

"Already we have one horrible example of this employer technique.

"A walk-out at Kekaha 10 days ago over the attempt of a sugar company to increase the workload of employees (which was since settled to the satisfaction of the workers) prompted a scurrilous employer newspaper to editorialize that the walk-out was organized by ILWU leadership to aid communism and North Korea.

"A simple, but defeated employer scheme to speed up employees thus becomes a 'red' plot."

WE SERVE NOTICE ON EMPLOYERS

"We serve notice upon any employers who may harbor such plans that we are not going to be intimidated into surrendering our hard-won wages and working conditions because of a phony, profit-inspired clamor that it is necessary for us to do so if we are to prove our loyalty to the Nation.

"We workers of Hawaii have had something more than our share of this "loyalty" line during the last war when we suffered under the heel of martial law.

"We will not soon forget how we were ordered to 'work to win' and frozen to ill-paid jobs under miserable conditions while tens of thousands of other workers were imported for the relatively well-paid jobs in military employment. We can't and won't tolerate such discrimination in the future."

LOYALTY TO AMERICA

"Loyalty to America is one thing that must be indivisible and universal. It must apply equally to employers and workers.

"Employers must not be permitted to take advantage of their employees in this Korean situation as they did in World War II.

"The future will prove, as has the past, that the loyalty of the ILWU and its members cannot honestly be questioned.

"And, if labor peace is mandatory at this time, we are prepared to meet the employers halfway on the basis of mutual confidence, respect, and fair play.

"If it can't be achieved on that simple, honest basis, then serious consideration must be given to the establishment of machinery such as the war labor boards of World War II for the peaceful adjudication of labor disputes."

Mr. BUTLER. Second, Mr. President, an editorial from the Honolulu Star-Bulletin of the same date in which it is pointed out that "to date the ILWU has not backed the Government in its move to bar Communists and other subversives from American ships."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHERE DOES THE ILWU STAND ON KOREA?

(Since this editorial was written the ILWU has partially clarified its stand. A local statement, given out last night, says in part: "Members of the ILWU are loyal Americans

I hope the Congress will stand by the Committee on Veterans' Affairs and not repeat the serious blunder that was made at the beginning of World War II when the Committee on Veterans' Affairs was bypassed, to the detriment of the men and women in the Armed Forces.

FRANCO-ITALIAN PACKING CO.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1293) for the relief of the Franco-Italian Packing Co., with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after "States", insert ": And provided further, That any action instituted hereunder shall be filed within 1 year after the date of approval of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

A WATCHDOG COMMITTEE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, at this time we are getting ready to roll out billions of dollars for war purposes. I think it is very essential that the full Committee on Appropriations have within it a committee for the purpose of acting as a watchdog on these expenditures and seeing to it that this huge sum of money is used for what the Congress has intended, with a minimum of waste. We can here save hundreds of millions of dollars, if not billions, by holding consultations with the chiefs of our armed services before the funds have been spent or allocated. We on the Committee on Appropriations must provide for a real examination into the method of expenditure of all of these billions of dollars the war effort will entail. All of us want to make available every dime needed to back up the boys on the front but we do not propose to waste taxpayers' money nor to pour out tens of billions of dollars without scrutinizing very carefully the uses to which these funds are put.

For example, President Truman has requested over $5,000,000,000 for the expressed purpose of rearming our allies. We are now at war and I am in agreement with such rearming as long as it is on a scale large enough to do some good. But while helping these allies rearm we have the right to know that these $5,000,000,000 are expended for that purpose and nnt diverted to some scheme entirely at variance with what Congress has in mind. Also we must know whether the $23,000,000,000 turned over to the Armed Services for this fiscal year will buy a large amount of first-class, modern war materials, planes especially, rather than to be frittered away in what is termed "housekeeping expenses."

We must get our industrial plants into operation, turning out the arms so much needed by our Nation, even though the Armed Services have had at least $50,000,000,000 in appropriations since the close of World War II. It is the duty of Congress to know where the defense money goes and not simply give the administration a blank check and the go-ahead signal. We must accept our responsibility.

Feeling as I do that proper scrutiny by the Congress may save billions of dollars, I suggested to the Appropriations Committee yesterday that a watchdog committee, properly staffed, be immediately set up. It is our duty to do everything we possibly can to help maintain a strong America militarily, financially, and morally, and we must cut out waste and extravagance all along the line. That is the least we in the Congress can do to back up our troops abroad. Let us lock the door on extravagance before it breaks loose and runs wild. I hope my suggestion for the watchdog committee will receive favorable consideration by the Committee on Appropriations.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

OFFICE OF TEMPORARY INFORMATION

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, as we embark against our will upon another gigantic program of building for our defense, we should look back over some of our mistakes in World War II and rectify them.

I believe we have just scratched the surface in bringing our industrial and business genius to bear upon the Nation's defense building.

There are scores of small concerns and hundreds of able businessmen in my district who feel they should be given the chance to prove their worth. I agree, they should have such opportunity.

It is, of course, the accepted theory that the next war will be waged with atomic and other powerful type bombs which will do untold destruction in given areas.

Therefore, our plants and factories must be scattered over the length and breadth of this great land so that not more than a few of them can ever be destroyed at once.

Our weapons of defense could be made in part in these smaller plants dispersed around the country. For instance, I know of a friend who offers to convert his recreation center out in a rural location into a small factory.

He says he has all the local labor he would need among women and older men in that locality. This would assure his plant of constant employment. It would also save tremendously on gasoline and tires because his employees live right near his plant.

Another business has approached me about converting an old plant now closed and formerly manufacturing household utilities into a factory for employing 50 people. This is already partially tooled to turn out electrical gadgets by the thousands.

The plants I have described are considerable distances from dense metropolitan sections and are suited for subcontract work.

Such factories could be utilized by our Government to product parts. A transport system of trucks, trailers, railroads and even airplanes can be devised to distribute them to places of assembly.

All these details could be worked out by master planners. Such a course will assure a maximum defense program through a decentralized system which is of course the only solution in view of a much greater bombing hazard than ever before in case of attack.

However, advanced steps must be taken before any orderly procedure with such an idea can be realized.

I proposed to set up a temporary Office of Information with authority to commit the Government to reasonable assurances to businessmen so that they may go ahead immediately with their conversion plans.

There is no time left to fiddle. Let such an organization be set up right away. Then have businessmen back home come down here to Washington to confer with able, informed officials within this agency who have the spirit of patriotism and cooperation sufficient to utilize the services of these countless American businessmen without whom our Government cannot hope to meet the great demands now arising for powerful weapons of defense.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

PEACE

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, a little girl 14 years of age came to Washington a short time ago. After she got home she wrote this letter. I will read to you the last few lines:

It is getting late and, as I am a Sunday-school teacher for the third-grade girls, I have to study my lesson and finish my letters. Send all my love to everyone in Washington, and if you see Mr. Truman say just what he said to everyone, "That we are nearer to peace than we ever have been before."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

NEED FOR ADEQUATE AIRLIFT LEGISLATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, we should have more transport cargo planes in this country. The military has stated that their minimum requirements figure for M-day is the equivalent of 2,000 C–54's, or a smaller number in larger-type planes. As against this requirement we have presently in military and civil hands no better than 800 aircraft of suitable type, and even that figure is stretching it a great deal because it includes a great many aircraft which would have to be modified before they would be suitable for military use. By simple subtraction anyone can see that we are short by at least 1,200 C–54's, or their equivalent in larger planes.

At present our Marines and other supplies are going from the west coast by boat. This means that our effective force in Korea would not be felt for at least 3 weeks. We must develop sufficient airlift so that we can make ourselves felt immediately in Korea as well as in other parts of the globe. Let us not forget that the Russians have a submarine force five times the size of that with which the Germans started World War II.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come for the Congress to consider some really adequate airlift legislation. At the very beginning of the Eighty-first Congress on January 3, 1949, Senator JOHNSON of Colorado and I introduced what has become known as the air merchant-marine bill, H. R. 448 and S. 237. This bill has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It provides for development and procurement of transport planes suitable for commercial use and readily adaptable for military service. These planes can be operated in the domestic and import-export trades in peace and be available for instant military use in time of war.

Now that the Korean crisis is here with us, I urge that members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee dust off this piece of legislation and have a good look at it. It is not a perfect bill by any means and there are a good many amendments that ought to be made in it, but we should get an airlift bill reported onto the floor of the House as quickly as possible. We have already been caught short without adequate means of flying our troops and supplies and we do not want to be caught in an even worse jam by failure to act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOWELL (at the request of Mr. ADDONIZIO) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. WHITE of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper editorial.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. SHORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in three instances.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a statement by the Secretary of Commerce of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Theodore Roosevelt, III; and in another instance to include an article by Paul O. Peters, on Federal Government Spending.

Mr. LECOMPTE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. WOODRUFF asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances; in one to include an article by Karl H. Von Wiegand of the Baltimore-American, and one by Leslie Gould of the New York Journal-American; and in the other, to have reprinted as an extension of his remarks the speech he delivered on the floor of the House on March 13, 1945.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an article on slave labor in Russia, notwithstanding the fact that it will exceed two pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $191.34.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in four instances and include newspaper articles.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and in each to include extraneous material.

Mr. DONDERO (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances.

Mr. HALLECK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. FALLON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a resolution.

Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. RANKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a letter and a statement from the Tennessee Valley Authority.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 740 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 day, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the Defense Production Act of 1950. This is a flexible rule and was drawn in such a manner as to permit the House to work its will as to the degree of controls it deems necessary to establish. It was drawn in anticipation that one or more substitutes would be offered for consideration, and it was the thought of your committee that such substitutes would be germane and in order under this rule. There is, of course, a parliamentary limitation under this rule or any other rule on the number of complete proposals that may be pending at one time.

Your Committee on Rules has attempted to call up this question in such a manner that there could be full and complete consideration of the problem of economic controls.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, the Defense Production Act of 1950 is the issue, but the problem of the hour is a contest in which the world is the prize, a struggle between freemen and slaves under dictators. You and I have a staggering responsibility in the outcome.

I cannot and do not attempt in this short time to analyze the provisions of the Production Act of 1950 or the other proposals that will be made, except to say generally that H. R. 9176 provides for a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorizes the requisitioning thereof, provides for financial assistance for expansion of production capacity and supply, strengthens controls over credit, and regulates speculation on commodity exchanges. The purpose of such controls, simply stated, is to facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security and, at the same time, to hold our civilian economy upon an even keel.

Reasonable minds cannot differ, Mr. Speaker, in the conclusion that we must establish controls. The issue is the extent to which we shall go in this direction. To me, sir, it is a challenge to rise above the mediocrity which normally is so much a part of us and to not only cope successfully with the brutal force of our enemy but to meet his cunning and devilish scheming. I am sure no one of us fails to understand the difficult military undertaking in which we are engaged, and the decision of this hour must be made in the light of the requirements of victory for our forces on the field of battle.

The decision to win the campaign in Korea has been made. We will win, but the extent of the men and materials necessary to accomplish this still is a matter to be determined by future military developments over which we have no control.

Economic controls of the nature contemplated generally, sir, are opposed to and contrary to our way of life and are tolerated by Americans and their representatives only at a time and to the extent necessary to meet a challenge to our national security and welfare. Through the character of our people, their love for freedom and independence, we are a great and powerful nation. We have the moral, economic, and political strength to survive in the war against communism and the character to accept that which is necessary to win.

It is therefore, Mr. Speaker, not a question of whether the American people are ready to accept controls, or whether it would inconvenience them in their daily lives, or whether they would be harassed in their business and normal transactions. It is, on the other hand, a question of what is needed at this time to win our fight against an unscrupulous enemy.

Therefore, today you and I decide to what extent controls are required by the present situation and the foreseeable future. This is not an easy decision. It requires calm and deliberate thought, based upon the best information available. It requires an understanding of the American people and of the enemy. It requires a knowledge of our capacity to produce and it requires a devotion to the principles of American freedom. It is, sir, in my judgment, a decision that will affect the lives and character of Americans for generations to come.

The courses open to us are limited. We may authorize no further controls under the assumption that the President has sufficient power to cope with the present situation. In the light of information available, this would be a foolish and foolhardy attitude, and could well result in great harm to our national security. On the other hand, we may proceed with partial mobilization and such controls as are necessary to meet the present situation and the foreseeable future; or we may throw caution to the wind and authorize a complete economic regimentation.

The President of the United States, in his message to the people and his message to the Congress transmitting a report on the situation in Korea, was forthright and realistic and in my judgment used admirable restraint in his requests for power and control over the economic life of the Nation. He has subsequently displayed the high qualities of good leadership by asking only the minimum power which he, being fully advised, feels is necessary to meet the issue at hand. It should be most heartening to the people of America, yes, the free people all over the world, that the President has not grabbed at power as he might popularly have done, nor has he asked the American people to subject themselves to controls and regimentation beyond that point which the situation demands. It is strange, indeed, that so many people, both in and out of Congress, who have been most vociferous in their condemnation of regimentation and Government bureaucracy, now stand in the forefront of those demanding complete economic controls.

Upon what facts, Mr. Speaker, may one rightfully say that we should have complete controls? The production capacity of America is at its greatest peak of our history. With few exceptions, I am informed, no shortages now exist and none are anticipated in commodities that make up the ordinary life of our economy. In spite of the fact that too many people have bought too much of what they did not need and could not afford, the rises in prices are unwarranted and have been dictated by speculation, over-extension of credit, hoarding, profiteering, and unwarranted profit-taking on inventories. A continuation of these elements will demand complete price and wage controls and I am certain that the President will promptly ask for them and the Congress will promptly grant them, for such practices are frowned upon by all decent Americans and cannot and will not be tolerated long by this Government.

However, Mr. Speaker, we must not in our enthusiasm to meet the military demands promptly and adequately, overlook our great responsibility to maintain and insure a free and independent America. Stalin and his stooges subject their slaves to complete bureaucratic dictatorship. They detest the freedom and independence of Americans and would with glee have us subject ourselves to the same type of low slavery. They would, I am sure, be pleased to lose a battle if they could win the war of complete regimentation of the lives of Americans and our economy.

Controls that are passed today, not in the light of the foreseeable military situation, could well do more harm than good and could result in more confusion and chaos than stability. The President has requested, upon the advice of such outstanding Americans as Stuart Symington and General Bradley, the prompt passage of provisions set out in H. R. 9176.

"This act," said Stuart Symington, "facilitates our support of the United Nations by taking steps to meet effectively the economic programs required for the support of our fighting men in the field. The area," he said, "in which it is planned to work in this act, is one in which it is necessary to set a pattern which will permit spacing, not only for the steps that have to be done now, but also for any possible additional steps."

Mr. Speaker, the temper of this House appears to be such that it will enact not only the recommendations of the President as outlined in H. R. 9176, but will also authorize additional controls over wages and prices. If this is done it should be in such flexible form that the President will not be required by law to set up a great many new agencies, transfer functions from existing departments, or create numerous boards and bureaus. He should be permitted to utilize the present Government departments.

If further economic controls become necessary this Congress is available to enact the needed legislation. We cannot rightfully meet our responsibilities nor properly discharge them by creating a ripid, all-out economic dictatorship and throwing it into the lap of the President. Legislation worthy of the American people and in the tradition of this great body must be based upon reliable information. To this date, so far as I am informed, no information has been placed before any committee of this House to justify enactment of complete economic controls.

We now live in a world and will for years to come where we must react calmly and realistically to crisis and danger, and we must keep in mind always the preservation of our way of life, even as we meet the enemy on the field of battle, for victory at arms is indeed costly if we must pay the price of losing our own way of life through overregimentation and economic dictatorship.

Mr. Speaker, let us take the wisest course, not the easiest course. Let us take the sanest course, not the political course. Let us do that which is necessary to win against the enemy, but let us be reluctant, or perhaps, better said, let us be thoughtful before we radically change our way of life. For it is that, and that alone for which we are fighting.

Fear and confusion have no place in our lives today. Our course is clear, our capacity to create is unlimited. Our ability to meet the demands of the hour cannot be questioned. Our source of information is uncensored, and the only fear that any American need have is that he will not discharge with all his heart and mind his obligation as a freeman.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, as always, my good and able friend from Texas has given a very enlightening and good address. He has explained the provisions of this rule which are very flexible.

There are five titles to the bill as well as subtitles. There are many sections. The rules, as he has mentioned, makes it possible for anyone to offer practically any amendment that I believe will be found germane.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the easiest bill that has been before the Congress during the 18 years I have been a Member. We look with reluctance on another OPA which this bill provides for. We know when this bill is passed we are going to have another OPA. We are going to have bureaucrats running around the country like we did back in World War II days. We know that we are going to have controls, regimentation, bewilderment, and confusion among practically all of our people as we did in the OPA days. I know though, if we do not pass this bill there is going to be inflation, which means that the people will have lessened their life savings, that they will have lessened the face value of their insurance policies, that they will have lessened their income. So the question is, Which is the hardest dose to take?

Already the indexes show that during the past 6 weeks prices have risen from 6 to 11 percent on many commodities. The President, Mr. Speaker, has asked for these powers. He wants these powers and he has requested them. He sent up before the Committee on Banking and Currency four administration men, but he did not bring in anyone from agriculture and small business. He sent up four administration men asking for these many stringent powers. It is going to be up to the President of the United States to decide just what he is going to do, and the people of the country, like back in 1946, are going to be the judge of whether the President of the United States, after he asked for all these unusual powers, is going to administer those powers wisely. Frankly, I feel that the Congress has certain responsibilities and that we should clearly write the rules of the game and let the executive branch do the administering.

Just a little while ago we heard the address by the Prime Minister of Australia. He made a splendid speech. He made a speech of encouragement. But, just last week when I was back in Illinois there was no question about the people of the United States being in a state of bewilderment and confusion, as evidenced by the remark of my good friend from Texas a few minutes ago, that most of the boys in Korea did not know what they were fighting for. My people back home, and I talked to many, want to win this war, there is no question about that, but the great majority of the people in northwestern Illinois, as well as I am sure the people in your districts wonder why we are in this war in the first place. There is no question about that being in their minds.

As I picked up the morning papers I saw the headlines "United States Pours Fresh Troops Into the Sagging Lines," I remembered the remarks made by both Members of this House and the other body when the United Nations was formed, and I took this language from addresses of many distinguished men, and one was that after we organized and formulated the United Nations, before anyone will make an aggression, they will stop, look, and listen, because they know that the troops of 52 nations will be in there fighting side by side.

So I say to you, Mr. Speaker, in picking up these headlines this morning reading "United States Pours Fresh Troops Into the Sagging Lines," where are these 52 nations that are supposed to be fighting side by side with the few thousand boys we have in Korea? I say to you Members of the House that the United Nations has a test case right before it now, and our people are wondering why the people of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and all the other places are not in there fighting as promised by these statesmen of both Houses when they said that any aggressor nation will stop, look and listen, and that you can depend on the troops of 52 nations to fight side by side against any aggressor. I want to back the United Nations but I feel they should move faster in this crisis; otherwise, they will lose much prestige.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this, I know that we are going to win this war, but this Nation of ours, which now has a debt around $260,000,000,000 and pouring out military aid and sustenance to people all over the world, is standing alone when we need these other countries the most. Why are not their troops and their flags flying along that sagging line which now exists in Korea?

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, for many reasons I hesitate to make an expression on this measure. I have such little patience with weakness in time of stress that it is difficult for me to exercise restraint when confronted with the timidity and the hesitation that is reflected in the bill which the pending rule is intended to make in order, for the measure does not reflect the strength that the needs of the moment demand. However, as between the measure and nothing, I will, of course, take the bill, but it is my opinion that it is not quite an honest treatment of the problem with which it deals, that it does not go far enough, that for some reason it would repeat the same mistakes we made at the beginning of World War II.

I cannot see that it is possible to control the price of a commodity without at the same time controlling the price of the principal elements of cost that enter into production.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of the bad advertising the Congress has received in the past several years and the studied effort to undermine it in the estimation of the public, I say to you, sir, that at this hour of world anxiety and world stress the people of this country are looking to the Congress as their main hope of salvation. In their thinking, Mr. Speaker, as regards the safety of the Republic, the people of the country are at least 5 years ahead of official Washington. My people do not mind bleeding and dying for the flag, but if they must bleed and die they want it to be under a leadership that they trust. They are troubled, Mr. Speaker. They do not have confidence in, nor do they trust, many of the people playing important rolls in this tragic era.

I make no criticism of any particular individual. I do applaud the President, however, for the realism he manifested when he took cognizance of what was going on in Korea. For dissembling I have no patience. We speak of waging a war of resistance against the aggressions of North Korea. Neither the press nor any individual in the Government exercising power has manifested a willingness to tell the people of the country exactly who it is we are fighting.

Mr. Speaker, we are obliged to take action. We are obliged to do something of the character that is here proposed. But let us not go just halfway. Let us not be hypocritical about it. Let us realize what conditions demand, and let us do the whole job and do it now. This idea of running away from the responsibility of imposing some sort of control over labor is cowardice which deserves the scorn of the patriot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, perhaps no piece of legislation, in my time as a Member of this body, has given me as much concern as the one which will soon be before us, and the questions involved in its consideration.

I listened with a great deal of attention to the explanation of this measure when it was brought before the Committee on Rules yesterday. This bill was reported by the House Committee on Banking and Currency. There were two or three sessions of that committee given to consideration of this measure during which time only official spokesmen of the administration or the Government were heard. Not a single representative of American business or industry, not a single citizen speaking for the general public, had an opportunity to express himself on this legislation before the Banking and Currency Committee. Let me say, in explanation, that the legislative committee, as was pointed out, seemingly deemed it necessary to move rapidly. The bill was explained before the Committee on Rules by, I think, two, or perhaps three or four members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, who were heard only briefly.

As I have studied this measure it either goes too far, or it does not go far enough, according to what the true situation may be in the world today. If, as the President has publicly stated, we are engaged only in a police action in Korea, then this bill now before us goes entirely too far. If, on the other hand, as many Members seemingly believe, and as I have heard some Members express themselves, we are already in the beginning of world war III, then this bill does not go far enough.

If we are to have a mobilization of only about 10 percent of our manpower and our economic power, as is claimed by some of the spokesmen for this administration, then the bill before us goes entirely too far, and confers upon the Chief Executive great and unusual powers, privileges, and authorities which no President should have under such circumstances.

If, on the other hand, we are to have 100 percent mobilization of our manpower and economic strength, as a necessity to safeguard our liberty and freedom, then the measure does not go far enough.

It seems to me, of course, the President of the United States should know whereof he speaks. But I am not unmindful of the fact that the President, when he speaks, does not always give us his own thoughts and ideas, but only passes on to us the information, thoughts, and ideas his subordinates have given him. While it may be his voice we hear, he may be expressing the ideas of those who advise him. I most reluctantly must say on this floor that I do not have the greatest confidence, faith, or respect for the abilities or opinions of some of his advisers.

I wish to point out to you, if I may, that we are being called upon to vote upon this measure at the very moment when it is impossible for any of us to tell what the future may hold. I wish it were possible for us to know now, or tomorrow, when we vote on this bill, what is going to happen in the United Nations Security Council meeting at Lake Success in the next 2 or 3 days, or what is to happen on the Korean front, where our boys are fighting with their backs to the sea.

I realize and appreciate fully that every Member of this House is a patriot at heart and wants only to do that which is best for our beloved country, and that which will best aid and support those brave fighting sons of America now on the battle line to the limit.

We should give the President of the United States only those powers which he needs and must have to meet the present emergency, if he is right in his judgment of the situation which confronts us, and not give to him the powers contained in this bill which would permit him to put into effect some of the socialistic plans and schemes which have been before these bodies of the Congress time after time throughout the years. But, if this is all-out war, if it is a battle for our survival, then we must confer upon the President full and complete powers to regulate and control, not only production, allocation, distribution, and pricing of goods and commodities, but also wages and almost every other activity within the realm of thought.

We must remember, when we cast our votes and reach our final decisions on this measure, that if we give the President the all-out powers contained in either this bill or suggested in some of the other bills which will be offered as amendments, that not a single individual in this House will live long enough to see those powers restored to the Congress and to the people.

Let me say, with all the emphasis at my command, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE] was entirely right, when he said you can vote away your liberties and your freedoms much easier than you can recover them.

Let me say to you, the hour and the time is near when we, the representatives of the people in Congress assembled, must decide whether or not we will take every step possible to protect, here at home, their liberties and freedoms, and to make sure that dictatorship and totalitarianism do not win out here at home while we are attempting to destroy them abroad. Let us remember we have within our borders here in the United States those who would destroy us from within, as well as we have enemies abroad who would destroy us from without. Let us remember that more nations have been destroyed by enemies from within than have ever fallen before a foreign conqueror from without. So let us be certain we do nothing here which will destroy at home the liberties and freedoms we are attempting to extend to the other peoples of the earth through the strength of our military forces. May divine providence give us the wisdom and the courage to act wisely and well in this hour, is my prayer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

(Mr. MADDEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, we all realize that today the Congress is confronted with a great problem. This bill calls for the protection of large and small business which must have essential and in most cases scarce material in order to continue their normal business in this critical period. There is no question that it is the duty of the Congress to pass this legislation, considering the orders for war production which has already taken place in the 5 weeks since the trouble started in Korea.

I have had at least half a dozen requests from my district for legislation to control allocation of critical materials. In fact, one company engaged in the filing cabinet manufacturing business which uses considerable sheet steel, has already informed me that it will be impossible for them to obtain steel to continue his line of business unless some kind of regulation and protection is made for the small manufacturer. I merely mention this as one of perhaps hundreds of instances where the small-business man, the small manufacturer, is going to be closed out of business unless H. R. 9176 is passed by this House and enacted into law.

I mention another problem that exists not only in my district but also in probably every congressional district in the United States, possibly more so in my district than others because mine is a great industrial area: I have had numerous letters, and telegrams complaining about the increased price of meat, groceries, and clothing has already gone up unreasonably in price in the five weeks since the trouble started in Korea. My friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] mentioned that the cost of living had gone up between 6 and 11 percent. A spot check taken in my district showed that costs of meats and other provisions, which you buy in the grocery store, like coffee, sugar, eggs, bacon, milk have already soared to unreasonable heights. Clothing, hardware, and other necessities have also gone up. A few spot checks reveal prices have gone up between 9 and 11 percent since the trouble started in Korea. This means that the wage dollar of the man who works on wage or salary has gone down between 9 and 11 percent in five short weeks. What is going to happen to Mr. Worker who gets his pay check every 2 weeks, or every month and goes into the grocery store or clothing store to buy life's necessities. If this condition continues unchecked until Christmas, the take-home purchasing power pay of the average family man will be almost 50 percent less than it was when the trouble started in Korea. This is a problem Congress has in its lap, and it is our duty to decide what steps should be taken in order to circumvent an economic catastrophe.

The profiteers of this country are taking advantage of this war situation without any reason whatsoever. I remember after World War II that one of the great powerful propaganda and lobbying institutions of this country that came to Washington asking that price controls be released. That institution was the National Association of Manufacturers. If that organization would cooperate with the consumers in America at this hour they would contribute a great deal toward curbing profiteering and the unreasonable rise in the cost of living that has been going on in the last 5 weeks. Up to this hour we have not heard one word from the National Association of Manufacturers calling upon its members to keep prices down and curb this disgraceful profiteering. Congress must act now on curbing wartime profiteering before we lose the war at home through unnecessary inflation. The consumers need help. Laws will not solve all of the economic troubles that are going to confront us. Organizations representing industry and business and labor must work in harmony and help keep down this unreasonable rise in the cost of living.

Mention was made here by one gentleman—I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] questioning what we are fighting for. He said that "The boys over there do not know what they are fighting for." Remember 15 years ago when Italy went into Ethiopia. If we had a United Nations organization 15 years ago and had stopped Mussolini at that time and if we stopped Japan when it went into China 13 years ago Hitler would have never marched on Poland. World War II would have been prevented. The fight in Korea may serve notice on Stalin that the free nations of the world will fight to stop aggression. A victory in the Korean fight which we are now engaged in may prevent world war III.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER].

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is made in order by this rule and that is being discussed by the House at this time is a very extraordinary piece of legislation, taking into consideration the circumstances under which it is presented to us. We are today suffering from what the gentleman from Illinois has recently described as a rise in prices, due to a number of things. The principal one has been a great demand caused by people who are afraid of scarcities, who want to get into the market and are buying excessively at this time in order to hoard and to increase their inventories. But even before the Korean issue we were beginning to suffer from an inflationary trend in this country as the result of excess credit.

We have today something like $40,000,000,000 worth of mortgages outstanding on real estate. We have built up at the rate of $500,000,000 a month consumer credit for the purchase of automobiles, refrigerators, television sets and so on, all of this an artificial priming of the pump, giving people more purchasing power with which to buy commodities which are not in sufficient supply. That automatically has forced prices up. This situation has been accelerated by the terribly serious situation that we face in Korea.

The bill that comes before us does not in any way meet the situation. There is not a single thing in the bill which today could stop an immediate rise in prices. There are some very drastic, and in some respects over-drastic, provisions in the bill with respect to the curtailment of credit, particularly on real estate, which might result in the violation by Government action of every contract entered into between the sellers and the veterans who are building small houses.

However, that is not the essential issue. The essential issue is whether or not the economics of this bill are in any way sound. It provides for allocations, and we are told that allocations are the prime necessity of the moment in order that there will be sufficient steel, aluminum, and so forth for war matériel. The minute you begin to allocate any commodity because it is scarce, and that is the only reason for allocating it, you have to take it away from somebody who has a demand for it and give it to somebody who is going to turn it into war matériels. The minute you take it away from a person who has a demand for it, at once the product that he was going to make, be he a small manufacturer or large manufacturer, is going to be in scarce supply. At once the price of that supply is going to go up; at once everybody who wants it is going to try to purchase it before anybody else; at once everybody is going to try to hoard it. So it follows immediately the minute you monkey with our economy by allocating—and I think allocating is essential—you at once have to follow that up with price controls and rationing, and there is no use kidding ourselves that we can do a piece of this thing without doing the other thing. If we begin doing a piece of it, as provided for in this bill, merely allocation, we are going to dislocate the economy of this country to a point where, when we have to come to price controls and rationing, we will have to be backtracking in a very unpleasant and difficult way, and we will have to recognize a lot of inequities which have grown up in the interim period. As I see it, the problem we are facing today, as it has been outlined by some of the previous speakers, is whether we believe we are now moving into a war economy, where we have to do on the home front a number of unpleasant things that we do not want to do, but have to do in order to keep and balance our economy for the long pull, or whether we are going to take this situation lightly and say we can build all the war necessities on top of our normal civilian demand, and get away with it. My personal view is that we cannot do that; that we have to make up our minds in the next 2 days which way we are going.

There is one thing, however, in connection with this bill which I resent bitterly. As I pointed out at the outset, there is not a single urgent matter taken care of in this bill. We have a lot of credit controls today available to the Federal Reserve, and the Federal Reserve has been dragging its feet like nobody's business in exercising existing powers it now has to contract the credit of this country. We have allocation powers to take care of the more urgent war necessities, so that there is nothing immediately needed in this bill; nothing that will meet this situation of rising prices about which complaint has been made. Yet there was not brought before the committee that produced this bill a single representative of business, a single representative of labor, a single experienced person in the direction of our entire economy. Everyone of the witnesses was an individual who had no personal experience whatsoever in the handling of our economy. General Bradley may be a great man and a great military man, but I do not think a single Member of this House would expect him to give expert testimony as to how we are to conduct our own internal affairs from the point of view of the direction of our internal economy. No one was drawn on to try to point out the simple economics of this picture. You just cannot do this thing piecemeal, and if we attempt to do it piecemeal we are going to have chaos which will be infinitely more difficult to rectify at a later date when we are forced to resort to price fixing and rationing. It seems to me if we are going to do the right thing, we are going to give to the President of the United States the powers to institute controls that may be very painful to us, controls we will have difficulty of getting rid of later, but controls on the domestic front that will maintain a stable situation in order to give proper backing to those boys overseas.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, in all my 16 years in the House I do not believe I have seen the House of Representatives approach any matter of great importance and consequence in the state of confusion that exists here at this time. I understand that when we are in trouble, to talk about confidence in the leadership may be rocking the boat, and some may not think it completely patriotic. However, I think that some things have to be said now and then if we are to bring order out of confusion and chaos.

First of all, of course, I can understand why the people of the country are confused and why we are confused, because it was not long ago that we were all told that Korea was outside of the perimeter of the defense of this country; that our troops should be withdrawn; that it was of no strategic importance to us and could not be defended anyway.

Then, overnight, with apparently no one understanding just what was expected of us, no one knowing just what the job might be, we are all at once at war in Korea.

In like manner, it was not so very long ago that we were being told from the White House that there was no necessity for any sort of even stand-by control over prices and wages, that all we needed was some power about allocations and requisitions and some other things; let all the rest of it go. Here we are today. A headline in the paper says, "Truman drafting own stand-by control plan." Why, I say, how can anyone deny that there is a state of confusion, and how can he question from whence comes most of that confusion?

Let us just take a look at this. Here we have before us a bill that does not deal with prices or wage controls at all. It has to do with allocations and restrictions and some other things. No one has yet contended successfully, so far as I know, that there was any emergency or is now any emergency in respect to the matters covered in the bill pending before us. Who has indicated that there is any lack of steel for a defense project now in being? No one. Who has indicated any important necessity for allocations? No one. For requisitions? No one. Yet on that bill, not on price and wage control, mark you, the committee did not hear a single representative of industry, of agriculture, or of labor.

This is a most important matter which confronts us. Certainly to legislate properly upon it we should have the advice of the people who know most about it. Again, I say there was no emergency and is now no emergency in respect to the provisions of the pending bill.

I am not so sure but what if I had been a member of the Committee on Rules, although I can understand the pressures that are exerted in a time like this, it might well have been said, "Since there is no emergency, take this back to the committee and study it and find out what we really need and what is good and what is bad."

If there was any emergency and if there is today any emergency it is that which arises from increases in prices of the things that people have to buy. If there is any necessity for immediate action, it seems to me to be clearly in the field of price and wage controls. Yet there were no hearings on that feature at all, none at all. There are no such bill or proposal before the committee.

So here we are. I have no doubt but what the folks on the Democratic side in the majority on the Committee on Banking and Currency probably have in their pockets this bill that we are told has been drafted downtown. I do not know how soon it will be forthcoming. Whenever they trot it out, we will have to take a look at it.

Of course, if the administration knew just how serious this threat to our national security would develop to be, if they had foreseen, as I say competent people with all the inside information should have foreseen, the circumstances that would here confront us, why did they not come up here immediately upon the development of the situation in Korea and say, "Freeze everything for 30 or 60 days, you people in Congress, Let us call a halt to any increases. Then you take the time to look around and see just what we need." There, again, that has not been done.

In respect to the pending bill, I think there should have been hearings on the propositions advanced in it. I would still like to see such hearings.

I think it is quite apparent we are not going to have them, so probably about all anyone can do at this juncture is to say for the record, with all the power at his command, that before those broad powers contained in the provision of the pending bill are put into effect, the people who will be affected by them and who will have to live with them and who will have to do the job of production which this country must have if we are to be successful, be consulted step by step in order that wrong and damage not be done.

As a matter of fact, the provisions of the pending bill go much further than, in my opinion, they need to go. There is a lot more there than meets the eye.

As to price and wage controls, apparently we are going to have that in this bill too. I do not know whether it is going to be the Deane substitute, or the Kunkel substitute, or whether it will be the Spence substitute. I do not know. I do have some convictions about what ought to be in it. If we have price controls, are we not going to have to have wage controls right along with that. I know for many people that is not very good music. Many people are not very happy about it.

Whether they are going to be stand-by controls, or immediately effective, I do not know. And what is to be done about prices to the farmer. Many of his prices are now below parity. If I knew just what the Truman administration people were proposing, I would have a little better idea about what we might expect. Whether they are going to be across-the-board, or just some selective items, I do not know. I think it is a fortunate thing that many of us here served through those difficult days when we were struggling with the problems of price control, rationing, and wage controls during World War II.

The Congress never faced a more difficult situation than that which confronts us today. We have not been adequately informed to meet it. But I hope, and as a matter of fact I am sure, out of the collective judgment of the people who now constitute the House of Representatives, we can come up with the right answer even though we have not had the sort of assistance, help, and information that we should have had.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all have troubled and perplexed souls today over this momentous question which we are called on to decide. I suspect when we search those souls, we would find first that as free Americans living in a great democracy we are fundamentally and basically opposed to regimentation such as controls bring about. Then I think we would find when we searched a little further and read the press reports of the boys who are dying over there, we would feel it incumbent upon us as patriotic Americans and liberty-loving people, to give them every support we have at our command.

The question seems to be whether we are going to have a limited control bill such as has been brought in by the Committee on Banking and Currency by the narrow margin of one vote, or whether we are going to have an all-out across-the-board control law.

Again, our individual souls are going to be put to the task of deciding, tomorrow possibly, which horn of the dilemma we will take.

To arrive at a proper conclusion—and certainly I do not profess to have the proper conclusion or analysis—I think we must try to analyze the situation as it presents itself.

Five years ago this month, Mr. Speaker, a small band of us in this House spent 2 weeks in Russia during our 2 months' study abroad of economic and political conditions. Some of that time was spent in the Kremlin in conferences with that man of mystery, Mr. Stalin, with Mr. Vishinsky and Mr. Beria, and other members of the Politburo. We saw the regimentation of those people first hand. We came out of there with certain conclusions. Among those conclusions I recall three most distinctly. We wrote them into our report to the Congress in the form of recommendations for the administration and the Congress to consider.

No. 1, that in our judgment Russia did not want war with us any more than we wanted war with them.

No. 2, that Russia was determined, through Stalin and his little band of fellow conspirators, which made up the politburo, to gain world control and domination using communism as a front. That to do this she would do everything within her power to prevent our attaining the one goal in which we were interested, namely, world peace. That she would accomplish this by using every means within her power to bring about world chaos and confusion, placing a hurdle here, an obstacle there, and a barrier elsewhere.

No. 3, that the United States, Great Britain and the other allied powers must abandon our Chamberlain-like appeasement policy and adopt a firm policy in dealing with our late ally, Russia. Further, that firmness and power is the only language that Russia understands.

To implement those recommendations, as chairman of the Postwar Policy Committee, I introduced a resolution in the beginning of the Eightieth Congress which would declare that, among other things, as our policy.

Unfortunately, it would now appear that our prediction proved only too true.

There appear to be many lines of thought and speculation as to whether this is a police action or whether it is the beginning of world war three. If my analysis of the situation is correct, it is not necessarily either. It could well be a part and parcel of the Communist plan of confusion, chaos, divisions, and destruction.

I point out to you in substantiation of this that in all of the countries which have been taken over by Russia since the closing of hostilities and brought into her orbit of influence not a single Russian gun has been fired by a Russian soldier. Czechoslovakia and all of the others have been taken under the iron thumb and behind the iron curtain through the simple process of bringing about division, confusion, chaos, infiltration and finally revolution. Moreover, it is generally conceded by all military authorities that Russian arms could march to the English Channel almost overnight. Again, is there one here who doubts that Russia yesterday or today could prevent the landing of our troops at Pusan if she were ready and willing to risk all in an all-out warfare with this country and our allies?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield to my distinguished friend and colleague.

Mr. COX. You know Russia can also return the North Koreans to the area that they formerly occupied.

Mr. COLMER. Yes, permit me to say to my devoted friend that in the present situation she can do almost anything that she wants to do, and I might add that Russia today and ever since the war ceased has been calling the signals and pulling the strings.

Again, if I am correct about it, terrible as the thought may seem, somewhere along the line we may have to take the initiative rather than to be strung in Russia's own pattern all over the world at every point so that we will not be strong enough at any one point to resist them. Russia so wants to weaken our economy that she can make us ripe for a revolution in this country and then take over as she has done in other countries.

Now, again, on that premise, if we are to be confronted with one incident after another, then we are in war, to all effects, and we ought to do something about it.

Yes; the President and his advisers who make our foreign policy might well consider reluctantly, I grant you, but nevertheless they may be forced to consider the necessity of our taking the initiative rather than playing into the hands of the master minds of the Kremlin. At least, we must be prepared for such an eventuality.

No, Mr. Speaker; it is my thought, for whatever that is worth, that this is not necessarily the beginning of world war III. When the Korean incident is settled, one way or the other, then Russia will start in another area of the globe to bring about further confusion with another incident, possibly Iran, Greece, Turkey, or who knows where? Then, when that is settled, another incident somewhere else, and perhaps two or three incidents at the same time in different parts of the globe, always using her puppet nations or agents—all in furtherance of obstacles, destruction, confusion, and chaos—all leading to her one objective—world revolution.

Therefore, permit me to say to you, my colleagues, that the world picture is not a pretty one. And the coveted goal of peace appears to be years and not months away. It may be later than some people think. Therefore, if we are going to mobilize our efforts it should be on an all-out, across-the-board basis. We must avoid the pitfalls and errors of the past. We found out in the last war that we could not have partial controls. If you are going to regulate the prices of commodities, then you have got to regulate the price of the chief cost of the commodities, labor. Some people in this country, some people in this Government do not want that; but you cannot eat your pie and keep it too. If we are going into this field, then we ought to go all out and see that everybody bears an equal portion of the burden.

Mr. Speaker, we face a very serious situation, as I said, one that calls for the most patriotic careful thought that we can exert and that we can practice. I do not think this is any time to blame anybody here or there, in this position or that position; for what has occurred or for what might occur. As the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Armed Services said here so aptly the other day, regardless of who got the ox in the ditch, it is our obligation and our burden to get the ox out of the ditch.

Mr. Speaker, in my humble judgment, for whatever that is worth, we are in for many more Koreas, many more such incidents, unless as I intimated a moment ago we are driven to the initiative. God forbid that coming events will make that necessary.

In the meantime there is no place for selfishness, greed, a business as usual policy, or politics as usual. The American boys who are fighting and dying on the Korean Peninsula find this to be war regardless of what others may call it. We can do no less than give them and their loved ones our all-out support.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9176, the Defense Production Act of 1950, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the time is divided equally between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], and is limited to 1 day; so debate will conclude when the Committee rises this afternoon.

The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it is purely coincidental but it may be significant that the last two digits in the number of this bill are "76." It evinces the spirit of 1776.

Why are we in Korea? This Nation was dedicated to the principle, and it is self-evident, that all men are created equal, endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights. Among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the Government. It did not state that all men are equal financially, equal intellectually equal morally, equal in strength, but that all men are equal. All men of whatever race or religion or wherever they may reside are endowed with equal rights.

It was in performance of that principle, and adherence to it, that with the aid of the United Nations we sponsored the organization of the liberal government in Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel. They established a free government there, a government that was dedicated to the same principles to which our Government has been dedicated.

Koreans are a homogeneous people of one religion, of one race, with deep attachments to one soil. It was not long after the Republic of Korea was established that it was brutally attacked by the Communist people of northern Korea. This uncalled-for attack demonstrates that two ideologies cannot exist together in a peaceful world. We had to go to the defense of the Republic of Korea because we were committed to it.

We have to see that these little nations that are speaking for the liberty and the independence of the people shall not be destroyed, not only for their interest but for our interest.

Russia selected a theater of war that was well adapted to her. By reason of the remoteness and inaccessibility of the country it has placed a great burden upon us. But we have got to see it through.

There has been some talk about the confusion that exists in this bill. There is no confusion on this side. We reported this bill by a vote of 20 to 1. The only confusion that has been brought about has been due to amendments that were proposed in committee, and I presume they will be proposed on the floor. The President must deal with the great responsibility that is upon him. He must deal with a responsibility that few men have placed upon them. He wants this bill. He wants the bill as reported by the committee. He wants that bill because he thinks he can accomplish the purposes that are desired to be achieved by it.

They ask us why we did not invite great numbers of people to testify. We did not invite them because if we had opened the door there would have been hundreds who would have wanted to come in and most of them would have testified against the inappropriateness of restrictions being put upon them. That is natural, of course. The interests wanted to come in, but we did not let them come in because we were told that expedition is necessary.

Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and we did not want to do anything that would prolong the rise in prices that is now taking place. You talk about controls. We do not like controls and the President did not want to put any more controls on the people than he thought were absolutely essential to accomplish the purposes which he was trying to accomplish. Was that not natural. Yet, when were in the committee the constant complaint and criticism of the minority members was that these controls were too stringent; that these controls might make him a dictator; that he might use them for improper purposes, and there was an endeavor continuously to whittle away the authority that had been provided him in the bill. Then, without any forewarning, without any opportunity to consider it, an amendment was offered by the minority that gave him absolute power over prices and wages; powers that he did not ask for. Of course, there is confusion, but there is no confusion on our side. I can say to you now that the President wants the bill as we reported it. He wants to take this step by step. He feels that these powers are sufficient at the present time. He feels that if he needs more powers we will grant them to him. And, of course we will. What is wrong with that? If the President had asked for these powers I can see the reaction there would have been to that. They would say, "We are only in police action in Korea, and he is asking for despotic powers contrary to the principles of our Government."

Now, I like a little consistency, and I would like to see more consistency than I have seen in the consideration of this bill. Who did we ask as witnesses to come before us? Mr. Symington of the Security Resources Board, a very able man and a fine administrator, who knew of the resources of America, gave us an over-all picture. We had Governor Evans, of the Federal Reserve Board, who read a statement from Chairman McCabe, and we had that able Secretary of Commerce, splendid lawyer and outstanding administrator, the Honorable Charles Sawyer, who gave the benefit of his expereince. He ought to be the person that will control these things, because it is largely connected with his Department. Then we had that great man, a distinguished citizen and great general, Omar Bradley, and he painted the picture of what is going on in Korea, a picture that made every member there believe that expedition was necessary. What ought we to have done? Under these circumstances ought we to have listened to the requests of 100 or maybe 200 people who represented various phases of industry and activities of the United States and let them come before the committee to express their views? Should we have done that? Should we be condemned because we sent for the top men in the Government of the United States who had conferred with those who were most familiar with this subject? Or should we have opened the door and let them all testify, actuated by special interests they had? I realize everybody ought to have fair treatment and I realize that that is a right in normal times to come before the committee, but it was just a matter of expediency and necessity that these hearings were closed.

Now we brought a bill to you that the President wants. He is responsible for it. He says, under those powers granted, he could control the conditions that exist today by allocations and priorities, by requisitioning commodities, materials and facilities, by expansion of production and supply and by the control of credit and speculation on commodity markets. That is what he said he wants, and we provided for it in the bill. Can any argument be made against that? When the very fabric of our Government, when the future prosperity and happiness of our people may be at stake, must we open the doors and let all testify?

The President did not want total mobilization, he did not want to regiment our economy. He wanted to do as little of it as possible. Yet he is criticized for that. He is criticized for that by those who want to give him a power he does not want. Why do they want to give it to him? May be it will not result in political advantage as they seem to think it will if we give it to him. I know the President will exercise any power that is given to him with a patriotic spirit that is worthy of the President. I know he has only one object in view, and that is to bring about conditions that will bring happiness and prosperity to all of our people.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Under the requisition authority which is contained on page 30 of the bill I notice the President may seize property or the use thereof. May I ask the gentleman on that point, first, whether it is designed to enable the President to operate any plant he seizes?

Mr. SPENCE. Of necessity I think he could operate it. There would not be any point in seizing it if he could not operate.

Mr. JAVITS. Can the gentleman tell us what is contemplated as to terms and conditions of employment?

Mr. SPENCE. There is nothing in the bill in regard to the terms and conditions of employment. If the President seized a plant he would have to negotiate as to the terms and conditions of employment. Under our Constitution and form of government there is no power to make a man work if he does not want to work. You have seen that. You cannot enjoin a man to work. Of course, the President would have to make arrangements with the employees as to the terms and conditions of their employment.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPENCE. I earnestly ask that the House not be stampeded by the statement that so much confusion exists, when there is no confusion, and vote for the bill that was reported by your committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I can readily understand why many people would like to have but little confusion in respect to this bill. I think if there is an understanding of the bill there should at least be concern for the domestic economy. If there is an understanding of this bill and the powers which it creates, then I think the confusion can be excused.

Confusion in respect to this bill and the thinking in respect to this bill is due, if it exists, to the fact that this bill as reported out of committee goes ever so much further in the granting of authority and power to control our economy than has ever been given to the President of the United States during any of our wars.

It goes ever so much further in the granting of powers than we went during the Second World War.

I have a great deal of respect for Mr. Symington, but Mr. Symington was unable to give us any information in respect to the details of this bill. As a matter of fact Mr. Symington made the statement that there are no greater powers in this bill than we had delegated to the President during World War II. So perhaps the confusion might be due to the fact that the sponsors of this bill apparently do not know what is in it, because within 5 minutes after he made that statement it was pointed out in the committee that this bill gives new and most unusual powers to the President over and above what he had during World War II.

The Federal Reserve admitted that this bill grants to the President powers which he never had or which the Federal Reserve never had during World War II.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I certainly do not want to interfere with the very splendid statement that the gentleman is making, but is it not also true that the powers granted in this bill go much further than the message indicated they would go? I refer to the message of the President which was addressed to the Congress seeking the enactment of some such legislation as this.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and I shall point that out.

Now, I want to point out some examples wherein this bill gives the President more power than he had during World War II.

In the first place, it gives him power to control the commodity exchanges, which he never asked for in World War II. It gives him the power to take any property, which, in his own opinion, is necessary for national defense. He did not have that authority in the Second World War. He could take it only for the production and distribution of materials of war. Theoretically, under this bill the President could make a finding that a rocking-chair factory was necessary for the national defense, and could take that rocking-chair factory and close it down. He never had such authority as that during the Second World War.

In respect to corporations which we authorized to be set up in the Second World War under 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the activities of those corporations were limited to the production, storage, and distribution of war supplies. There is not that limitation in this bill.

During World War II the President activated the sections of the Trading With the Enemy Act of 1917, under which he controlled, through the Federal Reserve, consumer credit. The President's control of credit in the Second World War was confined to consumer credit. This bill gives the President the power to control every dollar of credit which is issued by anyone. It gives the President the power, which has been sought on many occasions but always denied by this Congress, the power to control the lifeblood of the American economy, which is credit. If those provisions remain in this bill, then the President does not need any other authority. He has got a shackle hold on America that this Congress will have to release. Otherwise, there will be such confusion and uncertainty as to effect the economy during this time of stress, when it should be stabilized, even more than it was wrecked by trying to enforce an equally bad Price Control Act, which this Congress passed in 1946, after the President had vetoed a bill which would have authorized the gradual restoration of the liberties which we have been talking about here today, and the gradual elimination of price controls, without too much shock to our economy.

Why does the President want the power to control all credit? I should like to have someone explain where I am wrong.

The President is authorized to control consumer credit. There is not any reason why he should not have that power; as a matter of fact, he has the authority at the present time to control consumer credit. All the President has to do is to declare that an economic emergency exists, and he can reactivate consumer credit by that proclamation under Regulation W, or whatever you wish to call it, just as effectively as he could do it under this bill. The only reason that provision is in the bill, of course, is that the President apparently does not want the responsibility of declaring an emergency; he wants the Congress to take the responsibility of declaring the emergency. Well, there will be no trouble about that; we will not quibble on how it is done; there is no reason why we should not legislate to give him this power if he wants it, to reenact the power that he already has.

During the Second World War the President never sought the power to control real-estate credit; it was never given to him because he never asked for it. The President under this bill can stop every dollar of real-estate credit; he can tell the banks that they no longer shall take mortgages on real estate; he can stop the Federal housing program notwithstanding the language on page 40, line 19. He can prevent the operation wholly or partially of the Veterans' Administration guaranty of veterans' mortgages. He already, by Executive order, has increased the amount which the veteran has to pay. He can stop the FHA program completely or partially; he can stop the operation of the Federal National Mortgage Association. He can do anything he wants to do in respect to any credit. You will find the definition of credit on page 42 of the bill; you will find the definition of real-estate credit on page 41, and also on page 41 of the bill you will find the definition of consumer credit. Of course, if the credit mentioned in the definition on page 42 applies, as some of them may tell you from now on, only to consumer credit, then there would be no necessity of having that definition in here, for the definition of consumer credit, of course, would apply to that. The definition of credit on page 24 must be read in connection with subsection (b) of page 39 in which it states:

No person shall extend or maintain any credit—

It does not say "consumer credit"; it does not say "real-estate credit"; so it must mean all other credit; it cannot mean anything else—or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section.

That section would reach right down to situations between individuals. I just want to show you how far reaching this bill is in that respect. I will not use this as a ridiculous example but as an example which can become very realistic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we may assume for the purpose of this example that I go to you and borrow $100. I say to you, "I will pay you $50 next week and I will pay you the other $50 the following week." If you lend that money to me and I accept it other than in accordance with the regulations of the President, you and I may go to jail for a year and be fined $5,000.

Now, is there not justification for a little confusion in people's minds when you ask for that kind of power? It was asked for in 1935, Mr. Chairman, and we denied it. It was asked for again in 1939 and we denied it. It was not even asked for as a part of the controls during the last war.

Surely, even though we might expect, as many of us do, that Korea is merely the start of a series of incidents which will eventuate in a world war, the drain on the American economy and the necessity for powers to control the economy will be no greater in the event of a third world war than they were during World War II.

I am in favor of giving the President all of the powers that he had during World War II. No more. These things were threshed over hour after hour, day after day, from 1941 to 1946. These are not new questions; these are not new problems.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be a party to the possible socialization of America in the name of an emergency. If we must socialize America to meet an emergency, then, of course, there is a tremendous weakness in the democratic form of government and I shall not acknowledge that there is any such weakness in a republican democracy as would justify the change of this form of government to that of a socialized state under a dictator. We have always fought our wars under and not in spite of the American Constitution. We have been successful up to the present time in saving the American system after each of our wars and restoring the liberties and freedoms temporarily taken from the people to the people. And we will do it this time unless we give the President such new and unusual powers that in the use of those powers he will destroy the foundation of our Government, which is the American economic system. You destroy the American economic system and you will have effectively destroyed America. I shall not be a party to it. But, I shall give the President all the powers he needs to stabilize our economy during world war III and this threat of world war III. We should give him power to allocate; we should give him the power to exercise priorities and the distribution of all materials; we should give him the authority to even take plants as he was given the authority during the Second World War when it became necessary to take those plants or set up new plants for the manufacture of war goods; we should give him the authority to control prices; we should give him the authority to control the costs of production, including wages; we should give him the authority to ration consumer goods as a means of stabilizing the economy in order that war production might go forward. We should give him all the powers he needs, but no more.

Up to the present time there has been no use whatsoever of the powers which the President has today to prevent inflation; inflation in the real-estate credit field, inflation in the consumer-credit field, inflation due to credit expansion. I asked the representative from the Federal Reserve Board whether this was a currency or a credit inflation. He said this is a credit inflation. Well now, if this is a credit inflation, and I think we all agree that it is a credit inflation, the way to meet that problem is not by these little more or less inconsequential but irritable consumer credit controls. Trying to control the velocity of credit by controlling consumer credit is like trying to prevent the inflation of a child's balloon by resting your finger lightly on it; it means about just as much. You have to get to the source of that credit.

Now, what is the source of that credit? The source of that credit is, of course, the banks. Without the banks there can be no consumer credit, and there are orthodox methods set up for the control of credit. Do you know that the Federal Reserve Board today has it within its power to make it impossible or rather, impracticable, for a person to borrow a dollar anywhere? The Federal Reserve Board could put a rediscount rate on loans, sufficiently to dry up every dollar of credit in the United States, and instead of that they are maintaining credit almost as cheap as it ever has been in the history of the United States. The banks can go to the Federal Reserve banks and get their money at 1½ percent. Six or 8 months ago it was 1 percent. They raised it to 1½ percent. Why do they not raise it to 7 percent if they have to? It was up to 7 percent in 1929.

Why do we deliberately keep money cheap and credit cheap, and then wonder why we have high prices? Why do we continually talk about consumer credit controls when we have it within our power to stop all credit, consumer and otherwise? Why are we talking about giving the President in this bill control of credit, when ever since 1913 under the action taken by this Congress there was set up the Federal Reserve Board as the agency for the control of credit, and we gave them the machinery with which to control credit? We do not have to give the President these new and unusual and autocratic, perhaps, powers.

As late as 90 days ago FHA reduced the interest rates on real estate mortgages from 4½ to 4¼ percent, to make real estate credit easier. Why now give the President further authority to control real estate credit, until he has used the authority he already has, and now is the time to do it? In other words, these credit controls should not be given to the President or anyone else until the power and authority which he now has and the authority which the Federal Reserve has is fully utilized. Then if these powers are not sufficient to do the job we can give consideration to giving more power.

Why does the President insist on keeping the gold reserve behind the issuance of Federal Reserve notes at 25 percent?

It was reduced from 40 percent to 25 percent. Why does he insist upon that when the restoration of the gold reserve behind Federal Reserve notes from 25 percent to 40 percent would freeze that much of the gold base upon which so much of this credit is predicated? Why does he insist upon keeping the gold reserve behind deposits at 25 percent, when it was traditionally 35 percent up to the time we reduced it to increase the volume and velocity of credit?

Why does the Federal Reserve, or the Treasury, which dominates the Federal Reserve policy today, insist that Government bonds be supported above par? We agreed with the people to pay them par. We never agreed with the holders of these bonds, most of which are in the banks, to pay them more than par. They are being supported today by the Federal Reserve at above par, which is admitted to be inflationary.

Why does the President want these unusual controls? We should not give him these controls until he has used those credit controls which we already have given him in an attempt to stop prices from going any higher.

There is a job that has to be done here and the President should have the authority and he should have the responsibility to stabilize our economy. So we should give him all of the powers he had during the Second World War, but not the powers in this bill.

I have been asked what could we do by way of amending this bill to do that? That would confound the confusion to a point where we would not know where we are going. I think the better plan is to wrap it all up in one package and read it all in one program. We will give that to the President and then say to him, "Mr. President, here is the authority to stop prices from going higher, which added to the authority you now have under existing law should be sufficient to do the job. If it is not sufficient to do the job after you have tried it, and if it does not go far enough, come back and show us wherein you need additional power, and we will consider giving it to you." That is my idea of what we should do at this crucial moment.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has worked assiduously under the most trying circumstances to try to get such a program together. I hope it will receive the attention from the committee that it deserves, because it is a good program. It is the program under which the job was done during World War II, and it is the program that will authorize and empower the President to do a similar job during this crisis.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

(Mr. BROWN of Georgia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting the bill reported by the committee by a vote of 20 to 1. I am not supporting the proposed substitute to place controls on the prices of every commodity produced in this country. I am not for the amendment which I hear will be introduced by some Member on my right to give these controls to the President of the United States to use when he wants to.

I am standing by the committee bill.

I am surprised at some of these speakers who start out by saying that the bill goes too far and then before they finish their argument they say it does not go far enough. When you put price controls on every commodity produced in this country, it will be a generation before you get them removed. Therefore, this is a time for sober thinking. I know back home the people are dissatisfied, but this is a time when men must keep their feet on the ground.

Here we are being urged under a wave of hysteria to control prices on commodities when there is an abundance of foodstuffs everywhere, enough for our Army and enough for our civilians. We have over 450,000,000 bushels of wheat; over 900 bushels of corn; 7,500,000 bales of cotton; plenty to eat and plenty to wear, and yet some want to put on controls. Why do you want controls? In World War II we removed controls as soon as we had a surplus of any commodity. Here in peacetime, before we have declared war, some are advocating placing controls on every commodity in the United States, and the record shows that we have an abundance of everything to feed and clothe the people of this country.

I say to you again, not in your lifetime or in your generation, when you take this step to put controls on every commodity, will you live long enough to see them done away with.

Take rent controls. Even 6 years after the war you still have rent control.

This is a serious question, and I hope nobody in this chamber will try to play politics during these trying times. I feel that all want to win this Korean struggle. We all feel keenly about backing and protecting our boys, and we want to do everything we can. If you put on controls you cannot do it so quickly. It will take from 6 to 7 months before you can get controls and have them administered properly, under the proposed Kunkel or Deane substitute. Then we will either be off the Peninsula of Korea or we will run them back across the thirty-eighth parallel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Now, there are two schools of thought. One is the bill reported by the committee. And they talk about this bill being too severe. I am surprised at any one talking about this bill being too severe. It gives authority to do what? To allocate the materials of war, and why? Because some of those materials are scarce. Steel is scarce. Copper, lead, and other critical materials are scarce. We have a sufficient supply of steel, I understand, to supply the needs of our country at present, but this critical material is not strategically located so as to meet our civilian needs and to supply our armed forces. Who objects to taking some steel away from the automobile factories of this country in order to use it to make weapons of war to back our boys, and take them off the shores of Korea, or any other spot in the world? That is one commodity of which there is a scarcity. The bill allocates it. It is true that every one who uses critical materials will have to give up something, and I believe every one wants to. Of course the bill puts some restrictions on credit, but principally on installment buying.

The chief purpose of this bill is to authorize the President to requisition plants and facilities, to allocate materials needed for the Armed Forces, and to tighten bank credit by curbs on installment buying.

The other school of thought is to place controls on all commodities now when we have a reservoir of foodstuffs and staple commodities more than adequate for our present need. Just a few weeks ago many Members were inquiring what we were going to do with the surplus of our agricultural commodities. Those same people today are asking for rationing—yet the foodstuffs are still in our supply stream and readily available. Gentlemen, unless we exercise the due caution which is our duty we will be compounding the scare buying which has been occurring in some areas recently. When we have full production like we have now there is no cause for inflation. When the people back home know that we are sincere and believe that we have enough food, enough clothing, enough of every commodity, that in itself will defeat inflation, and that is the only way to defeat inflation. In the clamping down of controls you will see the wheels of industry stopped, to a great extent; you will see the cultivators and the people working in the fields reduced to a minimum and then you will have failure of production and more inflation.

We must let the people back home know the true situation, that we have an abundance of all commodities, and that it is unnecessary to rush to the market to buy things they do not need. Yes; I know some say "Control everything, control everything"; but they do not understand that we have an abundant supply of everything—more than is required. The object of any control is to defeat inflation, and you have it defeated when the people know that you have a sufficient amount of every commodity.

Let me relate again the chief purpose of this bill is to authorize the President to requisition plants and facilities. Who objects to that? What man who owns a facility or plant for the making of the tools of war would not let Government have it in order to free his son or his neighbor's son from overseas? What else does it do? It provides allocations of material needed for the Armed Forces, and tightened bank credit by curbs on installment buying. I know there are one or two things that could be cut out of this bill; we took three or four objectionable features out of the bill ourselves. I think the real estate section is objectionable. You can cut that out if you want to by amendment. Some people do not agree with me in this.

I do not believe commodity exchanges ought to have been included in the bill. I introduced an amendment to this section, which was adopted, for the purpose of meeting the objections but I understand now that the amendment is not altogether satisfactory and may not be workable. You can cut that section out entirely by amendment. So, if this bill does not suit you, offer your amendments to carry out your objections, but for goodness' sake, do not let this fear that is going all over the country that we do not have enough food, enough clothes, go unchallenged. We have enough of everything on earth except the scarce materials we need for war purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the genleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. And now, as to those who testified for the bill. Here is Mr. Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, a man that everyone has the utmost faith in, recognized as one of the best businessmen in the United States, and when he was appointed to his present job it was heralded all over this country in practically every daily paper in the United States what a wonderful man he was, and what a grand selection the President had made. What did he say? "I want this bill." He helped draw the bill. He said further:

We do not want any controls now; we do not need them now, but we need what is in this bill.

Let me call the roll a little further. Here is the Secretary of Commerce, perhaps one of the greatest businessmen Ohio ever produced, from the great city of Cincinnati. His whole life demonstrates that he was a clean, good businessman and one of the best in the West. What does he say? He says:

We want the curbs in this bill. We do not want, and do not need, and cannot enforce at this time all-out control of every commodity in the United States.

Who else testified? Mr. Evans, a member of the Federal Reserve Board of the United States, another one of the best businessmen in the country.

What did he say? He was for this bill and wanted it passed immediately. Here are three of the greatest businessmen in the country. They are the men who helped write this bill. They were there. Of course, we want to win this war. They testified for allocation of critical materials needed for tools of war and for curbs on installment buying and against price control at the present time. Then the next witness was our great General Bradley whom you and I are relying upon to lead us to victory. What did General Bradley say? He said this bill carries out what we need now. He said that we need this and we must have this.

Mr. Chairman, when it is stated that we did not call businessmen who know about business, may I say that we not only called three of the greatest businessmen in the United States but we called the leaders, some of them occupying positions in the Cabinet, and we called General Bradley who is leading our military forces. Is there a man who will say we could have called any other witness who would have known more what they were talking about than the four we did call?

Mr. Chairman, the situation calls for action, it calls for immediate action on this bill. It is time to quit sparring around. It is time to think and not bring on controls on all commodities when these witnesses do not want them at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman on my right, I am against your bill if you offer it giving the President stand-by authority to put in controls as he sees fit at the present time. If you are going to have controls I would rather see them across the board. I will fight that amendment the same as I will fight the one that will be offered from the left side of the aisle.

I do hope and pray that you will follow these leaders who know more about the situation than we do. If we have to roll back, the whole world knows the situation; if we have to roll back it will not hurt our conscience to roll back because the people of this country know that we will do it if prices continue to go up. But when the people find out that we have passed this bill and that there is an abundance of all commodities, you will see prices go back to their level where they ought to be. When you have controls, let me tell you, let me repeat, you will never get them off in your day or in mine.

We had hearings on this bill and no other bill. We did not have a single witness to appear for or against the proposed Kunkel bill or the proposed Deane bill. If you are in favor of complete controls let us pass this bill now and have a hearing, which can be started any time, on complete controls of all commodities, but our leaders who know more than you and I are calling for this bill immediately. Let us pass it, then if you desire let us have a hearing on the proposed bills referred to and decide at the hearing whether or not we want complete controls on all commodities across the board. Who can justify a vote against this bill in favor of the Kunkel or Deane bills when there have been no hearings at all.

Gentlemen, let me remind you that the outlay proposed at the present time to support our defense effort is $10,000,000,000. It does not require price and wage controls—for the amount is well within the range of normal economic fluctuation in our economy. Our present situation does not now require—in the opinion of our leaders—the capital outlays and the total mobilization which were needed at the beginning of the last war. The authority the President has requested and which the committee bill provides is adequate at this time. Our huge supply of foodstuffs will dampen the price increases caused by panic buying. Effective credit controls can contract demand for consumer durable goods. These are the instruments to use to stabilize our economy. A general freeze in prices and wages will result in untold inequities—unnecessary maladjustments in our economy. In fact, they may well retard the effort we must make at once. If we do not need price and wage controls, why should we risk the chaos that would be the inevitable result. It would take from 6 to 9 months to set up the administrative machinery to work out the chaos and disorganization resulting from a freeze. Does the House desire this result. Or does the House desire to provide the authority which is necessary to support our defense effort now—the authority which will do the job required—and do it in a manner which will expedite the things required to be done. We do not want disorganization now. We do not want to upset our economy. We want to stabilize it. The committee bill does that. Freezing of wages and prices at this time will do just the opposite.

Again I caution my colleagues to give due recognition to the facts of the situation before embarking on a course which our principal advisers tell us is not required now—and one which may well undo what we here today desire to accomplish.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the toughest vote I will have to face in my 16 years in this House will be the vote to reinstate price and rationing controls on the production of goods for peacetime and wartime. I mean price controls and production controls.

In studying the bill that has been reported by the committee, and I refer to that printed matter in H. R. 9176 which does not have lines drawn through it because I am not too clear on what is before the House, I find that section 2 is a proposal which I do not believe I can vote for under any conditions. And I think I shall offer an amendment to strike that section from the bill. That is a declaration of policy which talks about the United Nations Organization and what this country is going to do, and so forth, in connection with that general approach. I do not think it has any place in this bill whatsoever, and I think the so-called policy which is set forth in the Kunkel bill, in the opening statement, is far more applicable to American industry and production and price controls, and what have you, than section 2 of H. R. 9176. I am surprised the committee put that section in this bill. I am not surprised that the administration recommended it.

The bill (H. R. 9176), on page 32, title 3, deals with expansion of productive capacity and supply, and if I understand section 301 it gives the President of the United States, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the right to take the Federal Reserve bank, as a fiscal agency, and go out and expand loans and build any kind of a plant, produce any kind of goods, which comes within the scope of this general approach, as deemed advisable by the President, and in my opinion sets up the machinery to provide a complete taking over of American industry by the Government of the United States through this mechanism here provided.

Section 301 in connection with section 401, control of credit, certainly enables the President of the United States to take over the control of credit through private channels.

Then in section 301 he can create his own credit-making machinery, using the Federal Reserve bank as a mechanism:

To guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution.

In my opinion this will be one of the greatest deterrents to private enterprise doing the job that has ever been laid down by the Congress of the United States.

Over on page 34 you find this language which I think under the political operations of this bill would prove to be absolutely pusillanimous, and it is on lines 18, 19, and 20 on page 34. All of these things can be done "except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms."

Well now, who is going to determine what reasonable terms are? Any of you who ever sat on the board of a large bank, where you determine whether or not credit lines shall be extended for the building of plants, extension of productive facilities, the building up of inventories, the opening of new territories, things of that kind, know what twisting and squirming can be done with language such as that, especially, speaking very boldly, when powers like this are placed in the hands of politicians. I think the bill is just as dangerous along that line as anything can be.

Now we go over to section 411, commodity speculation. I have no idea on earth that the other body will leave section 411 in this type of a bill. I do not think it should be in the bill at all. I think it ought to go out of any bill that we pass which deals with this general subject. Those are some of my own views with respect to H. R. 9176.

Now I am going on to the proposal in general. Here we are talking of initiating price controls. What does that mean? That means black markets.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I call the attention of the gentleman to section 101 on page 29 where there is a proviso at the end that this authority shall not be used to ration at retail level consumer goods for household or personal use. That is a limitation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is true.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Now it would indicate to me that under the general language and authority of the bill, considering the definition relating to raw materials which is found on page 47, materials include: Raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes. It would seem to me that hidden within the privileges of the bill is a provision giving the President power to allocate at wholesale or ration at wholesale and to deal with food products, farm products, farms themselves, or any other institution or manufacturing plant that produces raw materials or goods that pass in interstate commerce.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, I think they do that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Therefore, as I see it, if that is correct, then the President could put into operation the Brannan plan for American agriculture and seize farms if the farmers did not comply with the rules and regulations laid down by the Administrator appointed to administer this act, or he could put into operation any other scheme that might clearly control the production of civilian goods under the authority in this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think the gentleman is stretching his imagination in those observations at all.

As I said a while ago, reinstating price controls and rationing puts us back into the black markets. It discourages production, without question; and it not only discourages production, it prevents production. I have not seen anything in this bill, and if I am not correct in this the chairman will correct me on it, which has anything to do with the control of wages or the prevention of strikes. Is there anything in the bill which would give the President power or control over one of those propositions to prevent strikes?

Mr. SPENCE. No; there is nothing in the bill. We have taken no powers away from him that he has, but there is nothing in the bill to prevent strikes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The other day I voted against the selective-service bill that came through here, and I voted with three other gentlemen of this House. I was not then and I am not yet in favor of putting a small group of our people under compulsion and leaving everybody else free. I do not think the tax rates under the present conditions are as high as they should be. I think we should tremendously increase the tax burdens on individuals and corporations, both normal taxes and excess-profits taxes. I think that would have a great deal more to do with the prevention of inflation, or softening of the force of inflation, than anything in this bill that we have referred to will do. That would also let all of our people make some contribution, by compulsion through tax bills, the same as the boys are making who are being sent up to the front.

In other words, I should like to have the opportunity of voting for something which really has tremendous teeth in it and goes right to the crux of the situation and puts the burden on all of our people.

If we would increase the taxes fifteen or twenty-five billions of dollars a year to pay these new war costs and cut out this deficit financing, you would not have inflation.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman find anything in this bill which outlaws cost-plus contracts?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, sir; I do not. I do not think this bill is efficacious at all along that line.

Mr. GROSS. As a matter of fact, on page 35, under paragraph (b) it provides that the President can continue the processes of the last world war on cost-plus contracts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, sir; that means big profits through war contracts.

Mr. GROSS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It means fantastic profits. It means brutal profits. It means extravagance and waste of the dollars provided by the bond buyers and the taxpayers.

I do not know what the other body is going to recommend to us in the way of a tax bill, but my guess is it will not be more than three or four billion dollars. I voted for the tax bill that went through here the other day before the Korean situation developed, and I voted so in the hope that I would have another vote on a different proposition when it came back from the other body. But now we are considering a proposal to give ten, fifteen, twenty-five, or maybe three hundred billions of dollars additional to be spent in the war effort. So let us put a tax burden on the people and raise some of that money as we go along.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I thank the gentleman. We are in the present situation either because the preceding and the present administration wanted us in it or because they are incompetent to handle the situation as it arose. Where did you get any idea or have you any idea that the present administration would now show any efficiency in administering this program? Where did you get the idea that they are more capable of handling it now than they have handled the other programs that got us where we are now?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not think that I had expressed that idea.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am just inquiring whether you had it somewhere in the back of your head.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not have any such idea at all because I was referring a while ago to the political aspects of this power. I know, as well as you Members know, that under this bill special privileged persons can go and get almost anything they want and reap millions of dollars of profit as a result of the special privileges proposed here.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. With General Vaughan and the rest of those fellows down there at the White House, who have been down there all during these years grabbing off these special privileges and making these profits, where do you expect—or do you expect that the average fellow is going to get a square deal out of that gang or out of any one of them?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No, I do not expect them to.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then why vote for it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me go back to this tax thing again. People will say, "Why, that fellow is advocating a setting up of fifteen or twenty-five billion dollars in the new tax bill." Yes, that is what I am advocating. I do not want to be misunderstood about it. I am advocating that if we are ordering a big dinner party in the name of war, let us pay for it as we go along. That is tough medicine. That is very tough medicine. I am willing to make my personal contribution, up to 90 percent of my income. Who wants to go along on that?

I am talking about myself now. I am willing to give up to 90 percent of my income. I am willing to reduce my standard of living down to the raw bone and just as tough a proposition as any doughboy has to put up with on the battlefield. Who is willing to go along with that? I am willing if necessary in connection with the tax proposal to contribute the Government bonds and saving certificates I have into the pool in order to pay for this game as we go along. Does anybody want to join me on that? That is what I am willing to do as an individual.

I have some idea of what those boys are putting up with. So let us not increase these flames of inflation by going along here with a lot of deficit financing and then trying to wash it off through a pusillanimous approach such as we have here. Let us go right to the heart of the thing and clean it up.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman wants everybody else to go along with him, does he not—that is the bondholders and all the rest of them?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Oh, sure. That takes in all of them who have taxable income. And let us be sure that we write a definition of what is taxable income so that it will be picked up.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman mentioned something about tremendous profits. They announced down here that you do not need 5-percenters to get contracts. Do you think that they are all picked for the chosen few?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Maybe they are.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS].

(Mr. RAINS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal of talk today about confusion with reference to this bill. There is a lot of confusion with reference to the price-control situation in general.

I noted that my esteemed friend from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] said that the committee bill was too drastic and that it would give the President of the United States a shackle hold on the economy of the Nation. Yet in the breath just preceding he said that it did not have any teeth in it, so to speak, and you will note that colleagues of his on the committee offered a more stringent and drastic bill. Thus, the confusion.

The simple truth is that in the Committee on Banking and Currency the bill offered by my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] was presented without ever having even been read. It was not a sincere effort for price control by Republicans in the committee. It was my feeling then, and still is, that there should be some kind of stand-by price-control legislation in this bill.

The other day I had a fair sample of it. A friend of mine down in Alabama wired me that he was in the chicken business and that he had a broiler business which averaged about a million and a quarter dollars a year; that he went around on his chicken runs to get his broilers and he found out that some fellow from New York had been down in that particular section and had paid unreasonable prices above the market, and he closed his broiler plant.

Today, since I have been here I have been approached by men interested in the lumber industry. I was amazed to find the terrific increase in the price of lumber within the last few days. More than that, it is clear that you cannot charge this price increase, this unjustifiable price rise, up to the farmer, because he is not getting it. More than that, I should like to say that you cannot charge it to the wage earner, because he is not getting it. The price increases—and they are terrific—which we have witnessed in the last 2 or 3 weeks have been unjustifiable. It has been absolute, plain, outright robbery of the American consumer. Somewhere between the man who produces it, whether he be in industry or whether he be a farmer in this country, somebody is not doing his patriotic duty in this time of stress and strain. So I would like to see a provision put into this bill whereby the President of the United States can, if necessary, roll back these prices to a reasonable point, because there has been no increase in labor and there has been no increase from the standpoint of the farmer.

I noted in the paper today that four divisions of the National Guard are to be called up for active duty. One of these may be the Thirty-first from Alabama and Mississippi. In the last 3 or 4 days a call to active duty was sent to members of the Alabama National Guard of my district, combat engineers, to report on the 14th. I think when the time comes, whether it is a police action or war, that we can take from the homes of America young men to fight in the battlefields far away from home, we should not quibble about holding down run-away prices.

So, Mr. Chairman, today we are doing a job that I had hoped, and as all of you who served with us in the earlier war days hoped, we would never face again.

I dislike price controls very much, but I think I can tell you because of recent trips to Alabama this month, that the people back home are away ahead of us and that they are demanding a stop to these unjustifiable price increases. So I say, before we get through with this bill, let us give to the President the powers that he needs to curb inflation and let us give him stand-by controls to hold down prices.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, outnumbered and outarmed, but not outfought, American troops are making an heroic stand on Korea. I join my fellow citizens in the deep prayer that, by virtue of their sheer courage, our soldiers may be able to cling to a beach-head until adequate reinforcements in men and equipment are brought to their aid.

The dismal events of the last 5 weeks on that remote peninsula should convince every American that we can no longer temporize with the grave threat of Soviet Communist aggression. Surely, this is no time for business as usual—no time for politics as usual. On our willingness to incur certain small discomforts may well depend the opportunities and the freedoms which we now enjoy. This is a juncture in which America must be able to translate her enormous latent strength into actuality; for, if we fail, the penalty may well be slavery or death.

The war in Korea is but the outward manifestation of an onslaught against freedom which has been in process for many years, and particularly since the year 1945, when our leaders threw away the peace. It is but the tip of the iceberg of Soviet aggression. Beneath the waves lies the great bulk of the forces of communism which, by external aggression, by infiltration, by bribery and corruption, by intimidation and coercion, have captured and enslaved 800,000,000 people. The Korean war is but the outward manifestation of Communist determina- to achieve world domination. We should, therefore, be prepared for a series of such outbreaks in other parts of the earth where the free and Soviet worlds are in contact. There is no easy way out of these difficulties. Considerable sacrifices will probably be required by all freedom-loving peoples in order for us to win through. Given dependable and far-sighted leadership, the people will meet this challenge. We need men and women of vision in high places. For where there is no vision, the people perish.

The week before last, following the President's message on the Korean war, I said that I feared that the President had asked for too little and that I hoped that he would ask for more before events make it too late. This is an important election year. It is also a year in which our country stands at the crossroads of its destiny. It is unthinkable that at this hazardous hour any responsible national or State leader would attempt to tell our citizens anything but the full truth. To conceal, to minimize, to straddle and temporize at this fateful moment, is to place in horrid jeopardy the whole future of the American people. Our immediate objective is to repulse Communist aggression in Korea, to bring peace and freedom to this little Republic, which we helped to create, which we abandoned, and which we belatedly decided to defend, at great cost in American blood and treasure. On our ability to win in Korea may well depend a peaceful world. Our ultimate objective must be peace in a free world. In order to achieve this we must be in a position to mobilize our military and economic strength. We must guard against two foes: Communist aggression and that insidious enemy—inflation.

I am deeply convinced that the people of our country are ready to exert themselves to the utmost in order to bring our power into line with our commitments. I believe strongly that the people understand the nature of the challenge. Workers, farmers, scientists, industry, businessmen, professional men and women, are all anxious to play their part.

The President has asked for only limited controls. The Governor of Connecticut, who seeks to advise the President on this grave issue, cautiously suggests a half-hearted scheme of limited and "voluntary controls." The people of Connecticut, the people of the United States, have, in my opinion, been ahead of the Congress in their thinking, and the Congress is ahead of the President and of the Governor of Connecticut. While our young men are meeting this dreadful threat with their life's blood, we should not seek refuge in dilatory tactics. This is no time for timidity; the future is now.

Our survival as a free people should not depend upon shallow expediencies, based upon paid surveys of public opinion in which a few loaded questions are asked of a minute fraction of our citizenry. This is no time to think of political careers. This is the time to submerge personal ambitions. This is a time for selfless rededication to the cause for which so many Americans gave their lives in World Wars I and II, and for which young Americans are now fighting and dying 7,000 miles away.

Let us then face boldly up to this danger, tell the people the truth and repose our confidence in the loyalty and ultimate wisdom of the people. Notable among those who have sounded the clarion call to action is the distinguished elder statesman, Bernard M. Baruch. Several Members of the Senate and House have also urged stand-by legislation which will provide for the mobilization of American resources for the defense of our Nation. In the words of Lincoln, let us prepare for the worst, even while we strive mightily to bring about the best. The time to prepare is now, not in some hoped-for future, when, our plans unshaped, our strength unmarshalled, we are helpless to cope with the gathering storm.

To that end I urge that the following steps be taken at once:

First. The Congress should immediately draft and enact stand-by legislation providing for the control of prices, wages, excess profits, and for rigid controls of all essential commodities in short supply. These laws should also provide for allocations of critical war materials on a system of priorities designed to insure fair and equal distribution to individuals and to industry, together with a steady flow of military equipment and supplies.

Second. Legislation to implement the program should in each case be drafted so as to permit frequent review by the Congress and should contain termination dates. In each delegation of authority, the legislation should become effective upon the passage of a concurrent resolution, in order that the people's representatives should have a reasonable control over the situation.

Third. In order to minimize deficit financing and combat inflation, taxes on incomes and profits must be increased. Insofar as practicable, the cost of this security program should be met currently and not postponed. This is desirable in order that we should not place a heavy burden upon future generations.

Fourth. Of vital importance to our Nation is the question of civilian defense. In accordance with a statement which I made several weeks ago, I again urge the Governor of Connecticut to activate without delay a comprehensive civilian-defense program based upon the lessons learned during World War II, designed to implement the Hopley report and with whatever accommodations are necessary in view of the current situation. The people in the heavily populated industrial centers of our State should receive adequate protection. Safety of life and property must be assured.

Fifth. Communists and subversives should be required to register at once and reasonable restrictions should be placed upon their movements. It is unthinkable that we should be helpless to fight the enemy at home even while we are making sacrifices to combat the enemy abroad. Freedom does not include the freedom to destroy freedom. We cannot in all conscience draft Americans to fight against communism abroad unless we take the necessary steps to combat Communists at home.

Sixth. The Congress should remain in session during this critical period in order to provide the necessary authority and funds, and in order that funds appropriated by the Congress for defense purposes should not be impounded contrary to Congressional intent.

This crisis requires that we have in high places men and women who will inspire public confidence, and who have proven by their actions that they understand the nature of the Communist threat.

The confidence of our people has naturally been severely shaken by the administration's lack of foresight in its foreign policy, the ineffective weapons, and the poorly equipped troops, which were thrown into the Korean battle against staggering odds.

These restless events are far vaster than any individual or group of individuals. They are no respecters of persons. Those who were associated with the gross miscalculations of the past should be replaced by men and women of tested capabilities, who can and will do the job. General MacArthur said recently that in life there is no security; there is only opportunity. We Americans are today faced with a dire threat and with a heavy responsibility. We can take heart from the sure knowledge that our opportunities for useful service and for dynamic leadership are equal to these responsibilities.

Let us then grasp the nettle and plunge on to victory.

(Mr. LODGE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I got into the Congress because when I was in the Pacific theater and in the Atlantic theater in the course of the war as a staff officer—not as a foxhole soldier or a hero—I hasten to add, but one of many others who served similarly, and saw what the men who were the foxhole heroes endured, I decided that if there was something that could be done about a better and more peaceful world I ought to do it. I do not think there was ever a time in my 4 years of service in this House when I felt that I was more completely carrying out my resolve and desire than this afternoon. Today we are sending men out to fight, and we are sending men out to be wounded or die, we are sending out men also to stand the agony—and anyone in the House who served in the last war will agree with me in that—of long stretches under the fear of dying or being wounded. Now, under those circumstances it is no surprise that I think the American people are way ahead of their leaders in the things they are willing to do to defeat this Communist menace as we see it in Korea. For one thing, Korea has shown to the world and certainly to the people of the United States that the Soviets will resort to thinly disguised naked military aggression to effect their purposes. There was a lot of doubt about that before Korea. Would they try to infiltrate? Would they try to take over labor unions? Would they try to take over political parties? Would they try to foment general strikes? No one can be unclear on the point now. If they deem it necessary to their purposes they will go ahead with naked military aggression very thingly disguised today, tomorrow perhaps undisguised.

Now the American people have to choose, and the two available roads are very clear. First, they may proceed by imposing upon themselves the same restrictions and the same disciplines which they did during World War II in order to enable us to engage in a vast effort of preparation an effort in the magnitude needed to fight both on military fronts where necessary, as in Korea, and on economic fronts where essential in order to win this ideological struggle in which we are engaged. For we must not alone defend freedom, but we must also convince the peoples of the world who are still free that ours is the best system, that it is better than the Communist system and that it can produce infinitely more in goods and services and distribute them fairly. Or second—and this is to be emphasized—they may proceed to undertake a preventive war against the Soviet Union. It must be clear to all that the American people do not want a preventive war, but that they do want to sweat this one out—and win, and that therefore they have chosen the road of military defense and economic offense. This leads us to this one conclusion in respect to this bill; we have got to have not only what this bill provides, but we have got to have more—and that is the important point the American people understand—we have got to give the power to effect rationing and price control. We may have to give the power, too, of wage control, but I hasten to emphasize, we cannot consider wage controls without the corresponding imposition of excess profits taxes.

The American people have got to understand that if we want to do this job without a preventive war against the Soviet Union it has got to be done over a long time, that we are considering flexing our muscles today not for 6 months or a year but that we may have to remain in this posture, anywhere up to 10 years, yes, maybe for even longer. I think this is the most solemn thing that in this hour, this very critical hour, we have got to make clear to the American people.

I would remind those of my colleagues who feel that this bill is inadequate that the American people are deeply resentful of the fact that cost-of-living prices especially food prices are today at probably the exact peak they attained following the world war, that peak being attained in 1948; and they are still going, and going, and going; apparently there is no way to stop this spiraling cost of living except by intervention of the Government; hence the American people, in my opinion, are fully prepared for the intervention of Government by the imposition of controls. But it would be a sad travesty on our responsibility which we owe to them if we did not make it clear to the people that if they do want these controls and are willing to accept them—and I believe they are—they must be prepared to live under them for a very considerable period of time, in my opinion, probably as long as ten years. And that this is necessary if we are to win this struggle with the Soviet Union without a preventive war which will completely shatter the world, and which I believe the people do not want.

Now, one further thought, and this comes from my experience in my own district. Perhaps other Members will check it with their experience in the districts they represent. The people of America are very troubled about this situation and they look to us to act decisively in respect to it. I believe every incumbent in the Congress will find that what he does between now and the time that Congress recesses or adjourns in respect to this situation will be viewed most importantly in the eyes of his constituents.

The American people consider this as a time of crisis. They want us to take a heavy responsibility and to make, if necessary, onerous decisions. In my own view, they are willing to back us up if we act decisively. But if any show fear, if any do not believe the American people know the extent of the sacrifice that must be made, if they feel any are not ready to have faith and confidence in them in calling upon them for the full share of that sacrifice, then I believe they will repudiate those who show that fear at the polls this coming November, because they will feel that when faced with difficult decisions in an hour of trial those—and I believe they will be few—failed to measure up to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, it is never possible to deal with so complicated a problem in a one-package bill. The temptation is to attempt it, but it would be utterly impossible. For example, no matter how earnestly we might hope to control inflation, and we do earnestly hope to control it, we do not know what the final outcome will be until we reach decisions with reference to taxes, whether or not we are prepared to increase taxes, whether or not we will consider excess-profits tax proposals, or what we will do with reference to the sale of commodities by the Commodity Credit Corporation to release pressure in particular areas. No; it just is not possible for us to prepare all of the answers in this legislation.

I commend the gentlemen on my left who have attempted it, I am sure in good faith. They think that by adding the substitute to this bill that might be done.

The point I would like to make, and I remind my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania of this, is that there is a danger that ill-considered price and rationing legislation actually will discourage production. The price mechanism under the American system of free enterprise is often the greatest incentive. To withdraw it entirely might defeat its very purpose. So the thing for us to do, it seems to me from the thought I have given to this matter and listening to the testimony presented to our committee, would be to pass the committee bill in very much its present form.

Mr. Chairman, this bill was not hastily considered. For the time we had it, it was well considered. It was reported by the committee with only one dissenting vote. The committee considered the bill objectively. We deleted, for example, the first proposal to increase the reserves for building and loan associations. We deleted section 412 with reference to the Commodity Credit Corporation's power to sell commodities for less than parity. We made certain changes in section 411. The committee did a good job considering the limited amount of time we had.

The bill does include rather sweeping powers on the part of the Executive. The Congress has just given power to local boards and other agencies to take from American homes hundreds of thousands of men that will be necessary to win this war. I think sometimes that we are unnecessarily timid in an economic problem and fail to realize that the proposals are quite consistent with the sweeping powers we give to military authorities.

What are the three principal things in this bill? Surely no one can say we ought to hesitate about these three things. First, allocations and priorities; second, the requisitioning of plants and commodities and things that are needed and, finally, the V-loan program, involving the lending of money to little businesses and others that might participate in the stepped up military program. Those are the three principal objectives of this bill.

I regret to disagree with my good friend, the able gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], when he speaks of the real estate provisions of this bill. Not long ago this House decided that there had to be some restraints, a modification of policy as to housing construction, and that is tough for a lot of people. But, we are deciding now that construction materials must go into armaments and into plants needed in the military program. It means sacrifice on the part of many people, but it is necessary because it has been in the construction industry, perhaps, that we had our most powerful inflationary pressure. Related is the whole problem of real estate credit. For that reason it seems to me the provisions of this bill ought to stand pretty much as they are reported.

Another thing, if I might close on a positive note is that the stakes are high. I think that in the consideration of this bill the defeatist attitude is dangerous. The suggestion was made, Mr. Chairman, that this is either a policing action or start of a third World War. That is not necessarily true, it seems to me. It is, perhaps, technically a policing action; we do not want to quibble over words, but it need not lead to war. The best chance to escape a general war is to regard it as a phase of a long-range defense policy that encircles the globe. If our dedication is complete and if we act wisely in this respect, without tension and without panic, I am convinced that we can make the Korean operation an effective means of averting a world war.

Mr. Chairman, the other day the mother of General Deane came home. A reporter asked a question about her son, Did she still hope to see him? This lady, 70 years of age, the mother of one of our great fighting men, one of our leaders, said, "I still have hope that I will see my son, but I must remember that this is a period in which personal sorrow and adversity must be borne without complaint." And she added, "the suffering that comes from living in an unfree world is such that we ought not to hesitate to accept any of the denials and deprivations that go with our military program." Those were the words of the mother of a man reported missing in action. It ought to be the spirit of the whole people, and I think it is.

I agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RAINS]. I wish we heard his voice more often. I agree with him that the people are ahead of us in their thinking on this point. I think they are. Nevertheless, it is a time for calmness on our part. It is a time—I hope this does not sound like scolding, for that is not in my mind—this is a time to drop the incriminations, the tendency to say, Who is to blame for our difficulty?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have heard several Members express the opinion that the people are far ahead of the Members of Congress, most of us, in their recognition of the world situation and its relation to ourselves and to our country. I think I can give testimony to that effect, because I was majority leader of this body in 1940 and 1941, and again I am majority leader in the present world situation. I am very proud of the state of mind of America today? It is entirely different than it was in 1940 and 1941. I can vouch for the fact as well as can other Members who were here in 1940 and 1941, for the changed public opinion. But, I can particularly say that as majority leader it was my duty to participate actively in the passage of the defense legislation in those days as well as now. I think the American people are to be complimented. I might also say as majority leader that we can point with pride to the membership of this body; I am not necessarily comparing it with the other body but in this crisis and all through the past months the membership of this body has responded.

There is a profound recognition of the world situation. I think the Members of this body recognize that our people are insisting and demanding that we enact legislation that will not only meet any challenge against our Government and our way of life but will affirmatively operate to assure a continuance of our way of life and everything we believe in, not only for ourselves but for the peoples of countries to whom it is now denied. So I think I can testify and be a witness to the fact that the American people today are strongly demanding, they are not only in favor of but they are demanding the passage of legislation that will not only be for the national interest of our country but be the best assurance for future peace. As far as this body is concerned, there is a profound recognition of that public opinion.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am very grateful to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, for this comment.

Mr. Chairman, I am very happy, of course, that the gentleman from Massachusetts interrupted because he did buttress one point I wished to make. But it seems to me we can leave out of consideration any thought of who is to blame for our troubles. We have all made mistakes. There have been times when I would like to recall two or three of my own votes. I did not have the enlightenment needed when I cast those votes and they would be different if they were recorded today.

This brings to mind an old Sunday school lesson, one that I recall came to me in a little Baptist church down in the foothills of the Arkansas Ozarks. I recall it today as having a certain timeliness.

The Israelites were involved in a war with the Amalekites, and while they were in a campaign they left their women and children in the town of Ziklag. The Amalekites bypassed them and came to Ziklag and destroyed the city. They carried away the women and children and burned the city to the ground. According to this Old Testament story, when the children of Israel returned they found their city in ashes. Then, the story is, they wept, strong men wept. The king, the beloved King David, wept until, the Bible says, he "had no more power to weep." Then it was found that the people were saying, "Who is to blame?" Some said, "King David." They talked of taking his life. Hours went by before it occurred to them that no one of their own number was to blame, that the Amalekites were the ones to blame.

So it is not the Democrats or the Republicans or the Executive Department or the Congress who are to blame, though there are some who would blame the Congress. The blame is upon an evil idea. Partly to blame are those deceived and deluded people of Russia and the satellite nations who are the victims of an idea but primarily the offenders are a power-hungry group who would overrun the free world, the rulers of the Kremlin.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in this legislation and in all the legislation we consider we must remember that our enemy is not over here. We must try a little harder to work in that atmosphere of unity which brings us to recognize that an evil idea must be put down.

I really believe we are on the verge of great victories for a free world. In a sense it is fortunate for us that we have been alerted, for we were in danger of allowing aggression to take place here and there in little isolated spots, adding up finally to the loss of freedom everywhere. But the Korean aggression has aroused the free world. I insist again that our people are prepared to accept the sacrifices, among the first of which are those in this bill. Others will come.

If the Banking Committee does a good job, whatever happens as to the stand-by authority for the President, we must continue our work on control legislation. It is not completed. The people of this country must be given every evidence on our part that we are working in wisdom and unity and in the spirit of sacrifice ourselves to stabilize our economy and make it possible for military plans to go forward.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] such time as he may require.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, every day that the Fair Deal politicians in the Pentagon keep Gen. Douglas MacArthur from invoking censorship on radio and news dispatches from Korea means another day of greater danger to America and swifter death for our soldiers fighting there.

Several instances have been publicized already of how lack of censorship is playing into the hands of the left-wingers among our press and radio reporters and of how the North Korean Communists are benefiting by it.

One of these was most unfortunate. Several days ago it was purposely disclosed by the Information Section of the Department of Defense that we would have reinforcements in Korea in 18 days. This announcement was made purposely to confuse the enemy for it had been planned to have reinforcements in Korea in half that time and to have them in line fighting before North Korean Communists would know about it.

No sooner had the troops landed—the Second Division—on Sunday, July 30, than did Bill Costello, a CBS reporter, disclose the fact to the American people and, of course, to every Russian spy or radio monitor on earth, thus making it possible for the North Koreans to be prepared to receive the Second Division.

Not only this, but Costello and other radio commentators and news reporters pointed out that the troops were from Okinawa, thus disclosing to the North Koreans and to their wily Kremlin masters one of the strong points of war preparation in the Pacific area.

Such tragedies as this are commonplace in any war where strict censorship relating to military matters is not imposed. It is essential that the Fair Deal politicians in the Pentagon must forget their politics in these critical times and do those things that must be done if we are to win the Korean war and save the lives of our soldiers who are fighting there.

Censorship is one of the most important phases of fighting a war. MacArthur should be given the authority to establish censorship in his discretion without delay. This Congress should insist upon orders to that effect.

In my opinion, broadcasts such as those made by Bill Costello Sunday night regarding the arrival time of the Second Division in Korea could be classed as giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] 25 minutes.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, having served on the Committee on Banking and Currency all during the last World War, there were certain things which were impressed on me very strongly. A main one was that if you had any kind of freezing of prices and wages, it had to be done at a time when the prices and wages had been determined by ordinary, natural, economic causes and free-collective bargaining. I feel if we postpone action on prices and wages and services and on rationing, which is a necessary part of allocation—in fact the power to ration is included in the power to allocate—I feel if we let this time slip by, we will then be faced with the situation where the only remedy will be selective-price controls and selective-wage controls, if there are any wage controls. It will be then too late to balance and stabilize our economy.

In the back of everybody's minds must be the question: How serious is the world outlook and how serious will it become? Let us look at what we will surely be called upon to do now in the light of how much it may affect the economic conditions here at home and the future economy of the United States. I think we should first study and decide what is the best that can be hoped for judged in the light of the facts now at our command.

Even if the Korean operation is localized in Korea, it will require the establishment, which has already started, of a 5,000-mile line of supplies to Korea. Assuming—that we will hold the beachhead at Korea—it will require the landing of enough troops, military equipment, and supplies of various kinds to recapture South Korea by driving the North Koreans back to the thirty-eighth parallel.

At that time it will be necessary to make a decision on what further should be done, that is, seek to establish a unified Korean nation. It is necessary to replace the equipment taken out of Japan. It is necessary to send new and additional equipment in much larger volume than in the past to Japan to be there to protect that island in the future. It is necessary to activate certain units of our Navy to take part in the protection of Formosa and other islands in the Pacific. It is necessary to activate large parts of our merchant marine to transport these ever-increasing supplies. We must also establish sufficient forces here in the United States to meet any additional threat which might break out in any other point in the world such as Yugoslavia, Greece, Berlin, or any of a number of other places.

In my judgment all that is a large order. It is going to place a strain on our economy which will reach far into the future. Therefore, we should take steps to meet this coming strain at a time when we can set up a stabilized economy as far as a stable natural economy can be set up under price control.

My good friend from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] and others have mentioned that the price mechanism is a delicate thing, that it might disturb distribution and production to have controls. Price controls are always a poor substitute for the delicate natural operation of the price mechanism. That is true. But under the powers contained in my bill and in the administration bill and in other statutes already on the books, there are sufficient powers to assure production. When you come to the adjustment of distribution, when you come to channeling goods from one place to another, from the time when the raw product is marketed until they are manufactured and until finally they are sold on the shelf, in order to have those adjustments somewhere near accurate and effective to start, they must be made at a time when prices all along the line have been determined by natural causes. Then the natural flow already created will continue to guide goods to the right spot. That is one reason why I feel it is essential to enact price and wage controls at this time.

I have talked a great deal to various Members of the House. My considered judgment still supports the plan to freeze prices and wages by congressional action. But the sentiment seems to be preponderant that this should be done by giving the President stand-by authority to institute these programs. So, when my bill is submitted, I am going to change the policy declaration at the end of the first paragraph to read as follows:

It is further declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security, and to accomplish the objectives of this act that if the price and supply controls are invoked by the President, the wage controls authorized hereunder shall simultaneously be put into effect. It is further declared to be the policy of this act that all of the controls provided hereunder for the control of costs, including prices, wages, rationing, allocations and limitations, shall, insofar as practicable, be put into effect at the same time so that, for a period at least, there will be a general ceiling over the economy and a period of general stabilization during which it will be possible to determine with reasonable accuracy in what ares the continuation of controls is necessary and in what areas controls may safely be released.

My bill can be made a stand-by bill by changing section 4 (a), eliminating the words "There is hereby created" and substituting in their place the words "The President is hereby authorized to create."

There will be a further change in the termination date. While the date remains the same—March 31, 1951—the act can also be terminated any time either by concurrent resolution or by Presidential proclamation. The language is exactly the same as that used in the Spence bill, only the date differs. There are some other changes designed to bring the other powers into line with war and defense needs in conformity with the language of section 18 of the Selective Service Act.

In this bill I have tried to combine wage, price, and services controls, and in addition, to provide as much of the power sought in the administration bill as could be done safely without giving powers that go beyond the present war needs or the authority in these fields conferred upon the President during World War II.

I have cut out the power to control commodity exchanges. Our experience in the last war demonstrated that they were willing to cooperate. In fact very shortly before the close of the war the Secretary of Agriculture said he did not want to have any controls over the commodity exchanges—that such controls were unnecessary.

I have put in the same exemptions that were contained in the old OPA Act; that is, for newspapers and professional services; for public utilities, which are determined by State regulatory rate-making bodies; and for insurance rates, which is also determined by State regulatory bodies.

I have cut down the vast power over credit contained in the Spence bill to consumer credit strictly, eliminating real-estate credit, and also eliminating that broad general grant of credit which would probably permit the President to control even personal loans between two individuals, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] pointed out today. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS] referred to the fact that you should have this real-estate credit, because you might want to use it to channel goods and materials away from building and into some kind of war production. There is absolutely no need of that because my bill gives the full power to allocate and to establish priorities. Hence if these goods and materials are needed the President can channel them under that specific power to allocate. I am sure my bill includes the three propositions that the gentleman from Arkansas just said were absolutely essential plus these two which I think are essential to put into effect now because if we do not do this now, then the time when a natural point of stabilization can be arrived at will have passed.

In my bill as introduced in the committee I had the date line as approximately the present, between July 24 and 28. I have changed that to June 10 and 25; that is the last 15 days in which we had a strictly normal economy. I talked to Mr. Baruch about that specific point and he said that most of the mark-ups which had occurred in the intervening time—and this was confirmed by others with whom I discussed it—had been mark-ups in inventories, so that there would not be much of a squeeze in attempting to make a roll-back to that period assuming this was done soon enough. Of course, every day that goes by without freezing prices, wages, and services adds to the danger. I think the two insertions I have made in the declaration of policy put it clearly up to the President to act quickly with the intention clearly stated that Congress feels that this ought to be done at once. The other declaration reflects the judgment and thinking of most of the Members with whom I have talked on this specific subject. I feel and they feel that you ought to tie wages, prices, and services all up in one package and freeze them all at one time. This is relatively less objectionable now than it normally would be, because most of the major large wage contracts do not expire until after the expiration date of my bill.

The bill is not perfect. I have been trying to perfect it day after day. I am sure that it will go a lot further toward accomplishing the purpose of preserving and protecting the consumer from undue price rises and at the same time preventing the socialization of America than will the administration bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Would it be a fair characterization of the gentleman's bill to say that it includes most of the powers given to the President in World War II but excludes those in the administration bill brought here now which were not given to the President in World War II?

Mr. KUNKEL. That is correct.

There is one thing I should call attention to—the elimination of the power to requisition facilities. The power to requisition commodities, and so forth, is kept intact. Under section 18 of the Selective Service Act the President, under present law, has the power to requisition facilities for war purposes and defense purposes; he has that power already under existing law, except that instead of having the particular power to do it under any circumstances at his own discretion, it is limited to where he does it for strictly war purposes and needs.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does H. R. 9283 make price control applicable only at the wholesale level?

Mr. KUNKEL. No, it covers retail and whole prices and also services and wages. Under the method prescribed in section 206 the administrator can unloose ceilings at the retail level. That section gives the administrative authority to issue the orders, rules, regulations and adjustments needed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under section 206.

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the control on ceilings applicable to services, if wages are controlled, wholesale prices are controlled, retail prices are controlled, why do you not control the charges made by professional people, for instance, doctors, dentists, lawyers? Why should they be exempt?

Mr. KUNKEL. If the gentleman wishes to offer an amendment to do that he may. As a matter of fact, I was trying to make this conform as closely as possible to previous OPA legislation. As a matter of fact, the exemptions in this bill are slightly less. Certain ones were left out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I am trying to get at is the equity of the case. Upon what ground under a condition of this kind should a lawyer or a doctor or dentist or any prrofressional person have his chance to go ahead and advance his fees against the consuming public when everybody else is making their contribution by subscribing to the control? What is the argument in favor of it?

Mr. KUNKEL. The argument advanced is that there is no set fee for services rendered by doctors, lawyers, etc. Therefore it is administratively impossible to regulate their fees. As I say, I hold no brief for that one way or the other. This was taken from the previous OPA Act. I think the exemption of public utilities and insurance is sound on the ground there is State regulation already.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would not argue against that. May I ask the gentleman this question: In the absence of a control on wages, how can production be maintained under price control when wages are moving upward?

Mr. KUNKEL. The only way they can be maintained is by a constant increase in the price by the administrator.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So that you do not then have price control?

Mr. KUNKEL. You do not have price control, no.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We went through all that in World War II in the previous OPA hectic days, because a new production would come into the picture, such as the production of new types of clothing and new types of ready-to-wear, whether house dresses, baby shoes or whatnot; a new processor comes into the picture and he can charge higher prices because he never sold any production at the previous price. So when he came into the picture he would push his prices up and the consumer would have to pay. That is the experience we had, is it not?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And as wages increased, the old processor could not push his prices up because he had a historic background of a certain price level; therefore it was a mechanism that promoted new prices in that field and washed out the old prices. Did it not happen exactly that way?

Mr. KUNKEL. To a considerable degree, yes. There were other phases of it where it was difficult for new processors to get into the field because they could not get allocations under the historic-use features of allocations. So the new man was shut out there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Well, let us take this example: Old processor A is pushed out of business completely. His plant becomes for sale or for lease. A new processor comes into the picture. He makes a differently designed article, and he sells it at a higher price, at $15 a dozen instead of $12 a dozen, whether overalls, cotton socks, or what not. Those were the experiences we had all over the country. Take the case of the house dress manufacturer, the lady at Kansas City, who had worked up there to 3,500 employees. She was selling dresses at from $2.98 to $4.98. She could not sell those for $3.25 or for $5.50. But the new fellow could come into the picture and sell them for $9.98. Now, who was protected? It was the one who slipped in under the wire.

Mr. KUNKEL. I do not think you can handle that problem entirely by wage control.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The point I am making is that the increase in wages becomes a factor because it increases the price of the material as well as the wages that go into the product.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to inquire of the gentleman if he has incorporated in his bill all of the suggestions that were made by Mr. Baruch?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes. I talked to him over the telephone and I also received a letter from him. He suggested a change in the date of the base period, moving it forward to June 10 to 25. I did that. He suggested making it the highest price instead of the lowest price during the base period. Inasmuch as I decided to put the basing period back I thought that was an excellent change also. He also suggested cutting out the exemption for people employing less than eight people. I accepted that. These were really all of the substantial suggestions he made.

As I understand Mr. Baruch's point in respect to stand-by controls, he is still of the opinion, and so am I, that it would be better to do it all at one time. On the other hand, he believes it is much better to have this type of bill on the books even in stand-by form than to let the general principles involved fail because of the rather widespread objection to this one feature.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. Would the gentleman inform the House as to the deletion of rent control from the bill? Does he consider our present rent control bill adequate to do the job, or will we require another?

Mr. KUNKEL. I think it will require some amendments to the rent control law. The one I have in mind as being necessary in order to conform both with the new situation with the policies embodied in the present rent control bill would be to give the Rent Control Administrator power to put controls into effect at the base period level in all areas where there has been an influx of people and a shortage of houses created since June 25, 1950. In other words, he would be given power to control when and where shortages arose since then, but yet keep substantially to the same policy expressed in the rent control bill which the House passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MONRONEY. It is not the gentleman's idea then to leave rent control out of the over-all control?

Mr. KUNKEL. No.

Mr. MONRONEY. Because it would be impossible, I am sure, to do what the gentleman has in mind if you leave that big percentage of the consumer cost of living out from under.

Mr. KUNKEL. Definitely that has to come in. As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has pointed out, in an over-all program of this nature an excess profits tax should be included. The longer that is postponed the greater the inequities resulting will be because you cannot have retroactive taxation. So, that, in my judgment, should be done very quickly also. It should be part of this new tax increase bill.

Mr. MONRONEY. In regard to the questioning by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] I understood you to reply that your bill did not include real estate credit restrictions when, as I read your bill, it carries practically the same real estate credit restrictions which the ranking Republican Member of the Committee on Banking and Currency has objected to so strenuously.

Mr. KUNKEL. Which bill does the gentleman have?

Mr. MONRONEY. H. R. 9283.

Mr. KUNKEL. That is the credit control cutback?

Mr. MONRONEY. As I read the bill, it refers to consumer credits.

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes.

Mr. MONRONEY. But in the definition of consumer credit it means any credit extended to a business enterprise for the financing or purchasing of goods for resale.

Mr. KUNKEL. I think the gentleman left a "not" out in reading that.

Mr. MONRONEY. Yes, I thank the gentleman. In other words this does strip out then any control of credit whatsoever excepting the consumer credit of the regulation W type.

Mr. KUNKEL. If it comes down to a question whether controls are necessary, that is referred to in another section of the bill.

Mr. MONRONEY. I think the gentleman has overlooked a great point of inflation, sales of real estate, which takes rental housing off the market, because previously there was no credit control on the resale of housing, and therefore you lost your housing supply because anyone could sell his house at two or three times its original price. The gentleman does not think that any real controls are necessary at this time?

Mr. KUNKEL. I think we can get along under the existing ones.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am unable to understand, with the testimony that we have that 60 percent of the real estate financing is completely outside of the Federal program, in an effort to control inflation in that field which is highly speculative and which responds first to inflationary tactics, why the entire matter of real estate credit should be held so sacred and be deleted from the bill. I was intending to compliment the gentleman for including it until he called my attention to the fact that I have overlooked a "not" in that section of the bill.

Mr. KUNKEL. I do not think that it should be included. Certainly, if it were, we would have to work it out very carefully so as not to interfere with the VA, and FHA, and limit it along those lines.

Mr. MONRONEY. VA and FHA are already under some type of control. But you are leaving 60 percent of the financing out, which happens to be the part that the National Real Estate Board objects to, at the very time when we are calling out reserve divisions of Marines and the Forty-fifth Division of the National Guard of Oklahoma, which was called into active service this afternoon; yet some way, somehow, the credit on real estate becomes so sacred that it is the thing that is stripped from the bill. I would like a clearer explanation of that.

Mr. KUNKEL. The bill is restricted to consumer credit.

Mr. MONRONEY. Does not the gentleman realize in going so far as to take in wage controls and every other type of control that he exempts this vast amount of inflationary credit simply because someone seems to object to it? If the gentleman is designing his bill to restrict the inflation and the expansion of credit on an unwise basis, we should ignore that. Can the gentleman tell us if this is a part of Mr. Baruch's recommendations?

Mr. KUNKEL. No. All of this part was taken from the Spence bill with limitations placed upon those provisions. It is not included in the recommendations of Mr. Baruch.

Mr. MONRONEY. It seems to me on reading this bill we have stripped out everything that has to do with real estate, including rent controls and including credit controls on the sale of real estate. I am tremendously worried about the situation. If we are going to call this an over-all price and wage-control bill, and yet we find that we have set out one segment of the economy to operate exactly as it pleases——

Mr. KUNKEL. I think the gentleman will agree we have to deal with rent control separately.

Mr. MONRONEY. I just wonder if perhaps that is more important than dealing with the wage thing and dealing with the farm thing, and also dealing with the over-all control of prices. I am in complete sympathy with the gentleman's attitude toward the urgency of this situation. However, the thing that worries me, having gone through this with the gentleman over a period of a great many years, is the fear that in order to get something done immediately that the country seems to wish we will enact a bill that has not been properly considered line by line and page by page, and we will have a bill that, because of language that might not be clear, will not work. I have listened to this debate carefully, but I am inclined at the moment to feel that we should by all means go forward on the credit control proposition, which has been heard, and have the Banking and Currency Committee stay on the job either a week or two weeks to decide exactly what should be done on this matter of over-all controls and rationing.

I see no difference at the moment between the gentleman's bill, with the exception of the deletions from the second portion of his bill, and the bill the committee has studied and reported. I just wonder if it would not be best to have more hearings. The committee has not yet heard Mr. Baruch.

Mr. KUNKEL. We certainly tried hard to get more hearings.

Mr. MONRONEY. Does not the gentleman think, however, that in an effort to stop the first outbreak of fire we had better get there with a few buckets of water and then decide whether it is a three-alarm fire instead of a one-alarm fire?

Mr. KUNKEL. We are trying to get there with five or six buckets under my bill instead of the three buckets provided under this administration bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman feel that his substitute needs any additional provision for management of this whole mobilization effort? All that is provided in the committee bill, and I ask the gentleman if the same is carried over into his bill, is that the President can redistribute whatever powers he feels the various departments ought to have.

In short, does the gentleman believe we should set up now a mobilization production board to parallel the War Production Board of World War II?

Mr. KUNKEL. The Office of Inflation Control specifically is mentioned, to be set up in the executive office of the President. The President can delegate, or the administrator can delegate, powers and duties.

Mr. JAVITS. In other words, you will have the President free to set up a specialized agency under your substitute?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes; and I should think it would be necessary in view of the experience of price control in the last war. We must realize that there are certain elements which only the administrator of price control, or inflation control, or whatever you call it, can take care of. It is a large and tough assignment.

Mr. JAVITS. So the gentleman does contemplate a special agency for that purpose?

Mr. KUNKEL. I definitely contemplate a specialized agency for that purpose, particularly as my bill includes the power to ration at the retail level.

Mr. JAVITS. So that we are talking about another OPA?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes.

Mr. JAVITS. Thank you.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. As I understand the administration bill, there is no provision for price control or rationing or wage control, but the gentleman's bill contains these provisions?

Mr. KUNKEL. That is correct.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. May I ask the gentleman what, in his opinion, will happen to the cost of living if the administration bill passes without the inclusion of the Baruch plan or the gentleman's bill, or some such similar provision to freeze the inflationary forces which are already at work in this country? What happens if we just pass the administration bill?

Mr. KUNKEL. As time goes on, you will have the price structure get more and more out of kilter and more and more dislocated—that is, assuming you accept my premise that we are in a world situation which is going to require a heavy burden on this country even if it turns out most favorably. Of course, if the dangers and difficulties grow, the burdens will increase correspondingly. So that, as time goes on, you will have the price structure getting more and more out of kilter as the days and weeks pass. For that reason I think legislation should be passed at once.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Does the gentleman think that the Truman bill, which we have before us, would really stop the hoarding of sugar and the buying of automobile tires and the rush for whatever happens to be left in the shops without the imposition of these controls?

Mr KUNKEL. No. Until we have some kind of rationing and controls we are going to have this rush. Fortunately the best advice I can get is that most commodities are in good supply, particularly food commodities, as the gentleman from Georgia pointed out earlier in the afternoon; and I believe our supplies will stand up in most cases, that this buying is scare buying. While it is the natural judgment of people on world conditions, it is not indicative of a real scarcity of supplies in the present or near future.

But unless you make plans to set up a plan of action at some time in the immediate future, there will come a point—I do not know when—when it will get completely out of hand.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. My point is that the administration bill does not go far enough for that purpose.

Mr. KUNKEL. The Administration bill does not even contemplate any action along that line at all. Why, for example, there is a proviso in it which prevents any use of rationing at the retail level. That is specifically prohibited in the administration bill. Yet it is a key power, if there is to be any real control of the demand side of the supply-demand equation.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. In other words, the administration was too little and too late on the war front, and now they are being too little and too late on the home front?

Mr. KUNKEL. That is what we are trying to prevent them from being. I do not want to get into a political argument on this. Someone on the other side said there is no use trying to assess blame for what has happened to date. I am convinced from the condition now existing that we had better take action if we want to curb inflation and get out of the tight spot in which we find ourselves.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Does the gentleman admit that rent control and excess profits taxes are necessary to curb inflation?

Mr. KUNKEL. I stated it emphatically. It was not a case of merely admitting.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Would the gentleman say it is necessary that that be done at this time?

Mr. KUNKEL. I think the sooner you put on excess profits taxes the better. They should be put on coincidentally with the present bill. They should be included in the coming tax bill.

Mr. DOLLINGER. The gentleman realizes that rent controls will expire on the thirty-first of this year—on December 31—and that we should do something, either by the gentleman's bill or any other bill to make certain that rent control is enacted?

Mr. KUNKEL. I think you should take that up separately, as I have said. Of course there is not the immediate rush for that because you do have rent control now in effect and will have rent control in effect until December 31. To have placed a rent-control extension title in this bill would have complicated the picture and gained nothing, because rent control is still in effect.

Mr. DOLLINGER. Why could it not be put into one bill? It will help to curb the inflationary practice.

Mr. KUNKEL. If you have a rent-control bill along the lines of all the other rent-control bills that were passed, you will have to give the Administrator power to recontrol where it is necessary, and I think you will have a great deal of trouble with a rent-control bill that did not take into account the policy embodied in the rent-control bill previously passed by the House. I think you would have a relatively simple time if you amended that bill along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I would be glad if the gentleman would give some further thought to adopting the committee bill and then pose that simple issue before the House as to whether or not discretionary power should be granted to the President. For example, the gentleman has deleted this power to requisition plants on the theory that authority is already there under the Selective Service Act.

Mr. KUNKEL. And my bill also includes section 3 of the old RFC Act. That is included in my bill.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. But would you have that difficulty regarding compensation? The gentleman remembers that in the committee we provided that 75 percent of the Government's appraised price should be immediately paid to the owner. I am not sure that your provisions for compensation and appraisal under the other statute would be as liberal as under our bill. I am simply suggesting that the gentleman might give some thought to it, because I think there is every reason for thinking constructively on this thing and getting it in as acceptable shape as we can. Does the gentleman remember what provisions there are in the RFC statute and the selective service statute for compensation?

Mr. KUNKEL. No; I do not, but I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] could answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has again expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of New York. With respect to the authority vested in the President to take over plants under the Selective Service Act, it is my recollection that he is authorized to pay to the plant owner whatever price the President determines to be adequate and fair. If the plant owner is not satisfied, later on he can sue for the difference, but the determination is with the President as to the amount that is to be paid.

Mr. KUNKEL. Then, if there is a dispute, the plant owner gets the full amount of what the President decided he should have. Of course, that is more liberal than the provision in the present administration bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ADDONIZIO].

(Mr. ADDONIZIO asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ADDONIZIO. Mr. Chairman, this is indeed a sad day for me. Little did I think when I was fighting the bloody battles of World War II in Africa and Europe that so soon, 5 years later, I would be called upon to vote money to carry on another war. Neither did I suspect that I might be registering a vote in favor of taking some of the liberties of our democracy away from businessmen and consumers. But that is just what I am going to do and I will do it proudly. I want to tell you why.

Through the courageous action of our President and Commander in Chief, we have taken positive and direct action to eliminate a communistic sweep throughout the world. The action in North Korea may be the start of World War III. Certainly it will be unless we promptly bring the full force of our tremendous might to stamp out the blaze which is now raging there.

Unfortunately, perhaps, we are a peace-loving nation. We have tried to demonstrate this fact by the way in which we have reduced our Military Establishment to a purely defensive level. But our desire for peace has only whetted the appetite of Russia for faster conquests and emboldened her to order the use of military force.

If this move is put down vigorously and decisively we can perhaps discourage the use of force in other areas of the world. If it is not, I fear to contemplate the kind of future we must face.

I, like almost every one of my colleagues on the floor of this House, am eager for the opportunity to vote for each and every measure which will strengthen the security of the United States and increase the insecurity of our enemies. I want to give the administration all the authority it needs to bring the Korean trouble to a prompt and decisive end. If H. R. 9176 does not accomplish that, I shall support any reasonable amendment to achieve that end. I wish to emphasize, however, the legislation we are considering was not dreamed up on the spur of the moment. Three weeks elapsed during which the President and his advisers worked day and night reviewing existing problems, the prospects, and what was needed to deal with them. They tried to figure out ways in which to handle the Korean situation using the normal processes of the free-enterprise system. They hoped and prayed they could avoid the use of Government controls. But they found they could not.

They found that more manpower was needed. They decided they had to draft men and call up reserves.

They found that more munitions were needed—planes, guns, tanks, electronic equipment—all kinds of offensive and defensive weapons. They decided they had to make a limited draft of the products of industry—plant, equipment, and materials.

Recently with almost no hesitation, we lifted the limit on the size of the Armed Forces and extended the period of service on men now in uniform by 1 year. Earlier upon the request of the Commander in Chief, we promptly authorized the draft of men into uniform.

Personally, I would much prefer to draft a sheet of steel, an aluminum ingot, a bar of copper, a machine tool, or any other inanimate object to fight the war than I would to draft a man. And I do not see how any Member of this House who voted to draft men could fail to vote to draft materials.

The President's request for authority to control credit and his requests for tax increases are intended in part to influence consumer spending and decrease demand. Credit controls and tax increases will help to relieve pressures on critical resources and thus aid military procurement. Nevertheless they alone are inadequate to deal with a problem as big as the one before us.

At a time like this the need of the military for things to fight with—things to protect the very lives of the boys we are drafting—must come ahead of the need for the latest model automobile, refrigerator, electric stove, and the other things which make American life so enjoyable. But these things are not the essence of the American dream. We do not hesitate to stint ourselves in the effort to protect the precious intangibles that make life worth living for free men.

And so we have no alternative but to give the President the authority to say whether for example, steel is to be used to make mechanized weapons or mechanical toys. To do this he needs priority authority.

At the same time we give him authority to curtail consumer demands we must give him authority to cut industrial demand. We must give him the power to limit the demand for highly critical raw materials by limiting the quantities of given types of nonessential civilian end products which are produced. To do this he needs allocation authority.

Partly to back up his authority and partly to cut legal red tape involving legal impediments to sale, differences of opinion about values, and foreign ownership, we must give him authority to requisition materials, products, and property needed to support our men in uniform.

Finally we must give him authority and tools with which supplies of things needed for fighting can be increased. These include both materials and facilities. Our small business concerns are in a position to be of tremendous help in this connection. But often they need financial help to finance larger inventories, to expand plants, and to convert to war production. Financial assistance in various forms is therefore needed.

As I study the program proposed by the President, I find it to be a moderate, well considered, balanced plan for dealing with the situation which now confronts us. I am confident that it is adequate to the task at hand. Whether we should grant the President standby authority of a more sweeping nature seems to me to be definitely a secondary issue. If the emergency should become more acute, or if the economic dislocations are even more severe, then I know that the Congress would not hesitate to act quickly and decisively. Thus I have no objection to voting standby powers, but I do not feel that is the critical issue. What is urgent is that we give the President power he has requested so that he can meet the problems before us. I therefore register my vote in favor of this legislation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there has been a lot of fencing here today, and a lot of talk, and very little difference in opinion as to what should actually be done.

As our distinguished chairman very aptly said to the Rules Committee yesterday, everybody apparently is in agreement with the principle of this bill, but each one objects to its application to himself. That is the theme of the debate, as I see it, as it emanates from the minority side of the House.

You were told a moment ago that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] is going to amend his proposed substitute so that there will be stand-by controls instead of mandatory immediate controls of wages and prices.

Now, let us take the two bills for a moment and get down to cases.

H. R. 9176, as reported by our committee, with a vote of 20 to 1, has several subtitles; one is priorities and allocations.

The proposed substitute that is going be offered to you from the Republican side at page 37 has the title "Priorities and Allocations." H. R. 9176 has as title 2, "Authority to Requisition." The same title appears on page 37 of the proposed Republican substitute except that they add the word "rationing."

Title 3 in H. R. 9176 is "Expansion of Productive Capacity and Supply." The same title appears at page 24 of the proposed substitute. Title 4 of H. R. 9176 is "Control of Credit and Commodity Speculation." Page 33 of the proposed substitute carries the title "Control of Credit." Title 5 of H. R. 9176 is "General Provisions," and the same title appears on page 40 of H. R. 9283, which we were told will be the Republican substitute.

Who is being kidded here? I do not think we are on our side of the aisle; I do not think the American public is going to be kidded very much by the similarity of titles.

What do they actually propose to do in this substitute? The commodity exchange representatives came down here and told those of us that commodity exchanges should be excluded from control. Do not touch speculation, they say. Is there anyone in this House or anywhere else who will not admit that the first element of inflation is speculation? Why should not that be the first thing to control?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. Gladly.

Mr. PACE. I am just seeking information. If there is a ceiling price on a commodity, would speculation affect the price beyond that point?

Mr. MULTER. If there is a ceiling price then, of course, there should not be any speculation. At the same time I can easily conceive of a condition where there might be speculation despite the ceiling price. We know from past experience that when you fix a ceiling price everything goes up to the ceiling although theoretically things could sell at less. They seldom do, however.

We are told that in the proposed substitute that will be offered they are going to eliminate this commodity speculation provision which was put into H. R. 9176. Remember that H. R. 9176, while prohibiting commodity speculation, in so many words does permit legitimate hedging. But still they take out the language of H. R. 9176 and actually put into the proposed substitute even stronger language. If you will look at section 207 of the proposed substitute, and I am referring to H. R. 9283 which was introduced only yesterday, you will find this language:

> Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit, with respect to any article, speculative or manipulative practices, selling, marketing, or inventory practices.

So the language of the proposed substitute goes even further than the language of H. R. 9176. It goes so far, if you please, that it actually vitiates the powers presently vested by existing law in the Federal Reserve Board, in the Securities Exchange Commission, in the Home and House Finance Agency and even those powers established the Commodity Exchange Act itself.

What else do they do here? They tell you they are going to control consumer credit. Under this proposed substitute they eliminate real-estate credit because the real-estate interests told us "Do not control us, let us alone, control everybody else." It has already been forcefully pointed out that you must control real-estate credit if you are going to have effective controls. They tell us the substitute will control consumer credit, but only such consumer credit where the agreement calls for two or more installment payments. They are not going to control charge accounts. All you need to do if you want to evade such controls of consumer credit, as set up in the proposed substitute, is to go into any store and say: "I want to open a charge account. I agree to pay my charge account every 30 days, but actually I cannot do that. I will pay it in two or more installments." Therefore your consumer credit provision as written in the proposed substitute is a farce and accomplishes nothing. You will have to go back to the language of 9176 if you do want to control credit, particularly consumer credit.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Has the Government ever before put in any control of real-estate credit? In the entire history of the country has it ever been done before?

Mr. MULTER. My answer to the gentleman is, it matters not whether it has been done before. We have never before been faced with the crisis that we are facing today. The question is, What shall we do now to save the economy of the country and to save the freedom of the world?

Mr. NICHOLSON. We are not in an all-out war. We are in a proposition of defending Korea; that is all.

Mr. MULTER. Oh, no. We are not merely defending Korea. We are now defending the liberties and the freedoms of the peace-loving people of the world. We have to set up laws and procedures now by which we can save this country from the onslaught of the subversive and destructive forces that we know will be leveled at us in the days ahead.

Mr. NICHOLSON. So in doing that we sacrifice all of the liberties that we have in this country, so far as real estate is concerned or the right to enter into a contract with somebody to buy a house is concerned.

Mr. MULTER. We are sacrificing no liberties when we take these steps to preserve our liberties. The credits and the real estate you talk about are no less precious than the lives our boys are called upon to sacrifice.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman contend that we are in a greater and more serious emergency than we were in World War II?

Mr. MULTER. No. I am saying that we are now preparing against such an emergency, we are now taking the steps that must be taken so that we do not get caught short in the days ahead. We are doing now, what must be done in order to save our economy from the forces that will be exerted against us in days ahead.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman not feel that the controls we had during World War II should be sufficient for the present emergency?

Mr. MULTER. We are not enacting those controls now.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman, I take it, favors the enactment of all controls which were enacted to control our economy during World War II?

Mr. MULTER. With the right given to the President to use them when he thinks the time calls for it.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman contend at the other end of the pole that greater and more extensive controls should be granted now than were granted at the time of World War II?

Mr. MULTER. I do not concede that we are granting any greater controls now than we did then.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman means in the bill offered by the committee? The gentleman's contention is it does not go further than the extension of controls during World War II?

Mr. MULTER. That is my contention; yes.

Mr. KEATING. With regard, for instance, to the control of credit, there never was a general control of all credit in World War II, was there?

Mr. MULTER. You mean that we did not control all credit but we had the right to control all credit. All we found necessary was to have regulation W during most of those days; nevertheless, the right existed to go way beyond that, if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, who else wants to be excluded from the terms of this bill? Big business wants exclusion and the proposed substitute for the committee bill will exclude big business.

Under the title of requisition and allocation, the proposed substitute will limit those powers to "articles and commodities." The committee bill provides "plants and facilities" as well as "articles and commodities" may be allocated and may be requisitioned when necessary.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does the gentleman contend, then, that the provisions in the Selective Service Act, which we have already adopted, are not sufficient to take care of the requisitioning of facilities and plants?

Mr. MULTER. I so contend, because the provisions there apply only for the national defense, and if you cannot find that the national defense requires requisitioning under that Act the President may not requisition.

Let me call your attention to this, too. In H. R. 9176, the declaration of policy refers to the fact that this bill will enable us to protect the national security of the country and also enable us to carry out our commitments to the United Nations and other foreign commitments such as those under the Atlantic Pact. One member earlier in the day got up and said he did not like that; he was going to move to strike it out and he was going to substitute for it the declaration of policy as contained in the proposed substitute H. R. 9283. When we look at page 3 thereof, we find the declaration of policy says:

> To enable the Government to provide for the national defense and to carry out our foreign commitments made in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and other foreign commitments.

It is in that connection that we need these present new powers of requisition and allocation as contained in H. R. 9176. If any of our commitments to the United Nations or under the Atlantic Pact or any other foreign commitments that we have duly made necessitate requisitioning, the President should have the power that we give him under H. R. 9176 to requisition big-business plants, if necessary, big-business facilities, as well as articles and commodities that are usually found in the hands of the small-business man.

There is one other item here. Our bill will control consumer credits and real-estate credits, and under the powers given to the President under this bill there will be no attempt and there can be no attempt at evasion. Under the emasculated provisions as written into the proposed substitute, which uses the same titles but somewhat different language, it creates many loopholes. You will have all sorts of evasion and avoidance of the principles that everybody agrees should be enacted into law.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, do I understand that in the so-called Deane substitute that contains all of the provisions of the original administration bill, that is, the committee bill, plus provisions for rationing, price control, and wage control? Is that a fair analysis?

Mr. MULTER. I believe that the proposed Deane substitute contains all of the provisions of H. R. 9176 plus an additional title calling for mandatory wage and price controls at this time. Is that right, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. DEANE. Not mandatory, but stand-by.

Mr. MULTER. By the time you get through with the proposed Kunkel substitute and the proposed Deane substitute I think they will be somewhat alike, at least as to wage and price controls.

This is a good bill as presented by our committee. If you think you can make it a better bill by adding stand-by price and wage controls, then add them. But do not do it with weasel words. Do it in plain and simple language that will accomplish what we intend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOLLINGER].

(Mr. DOLLINGER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOLLINGER. Mr. Chairman, it must be conceded that the present time of great stress can become at any moment a time of grave crisis. Only by taking every precaution and laying a firm foundation of constructive defense plans now, can we be assured of successfully meeting the crisis, should it come.

Let us not forget that the great conflict for the preservation of our freedom and our very lives has begun. The aggression which would deprive the Koreans of their liberty is a threat to our very existence, and a stern warning that a long period of work, sacrifice, and hardship is ahead of us. It is of vital importance that the aggressor who would destroy freedom in the world be convinced that we are solidly united in our aims and endeavors here; that no sacrifice is too great; and that the deprivations we are called upon to bear will be borne cheerfully, in the name of liberty.

This is no time for wishful thinking, inefficiency, or lack of vision. We must call into use all our resources, the maximum efforts of brains and brawn—rekindle in every heart, love and patriotism for our great country, and tackle effectively the tremendous job that we have to do. Our men who are now giving their lives in battle are entitled to know that we have a strong and impregnable home front and that every citizen is cheerfully meeting the demands placed upon him.

Confusion must be avoided at all costs. The people are looking to us, their Representatives, to point the way for them. We are charged with the responsibility of taking every necessary measure to meet at once the demands as they arise. Adequate defense calls for economic as well as military strength. All-out preparedness is more to be desired than to be found vulnerable; the morale of our people will be maintained at a high level if we give them a workable program of defense now—and we cannot take action too soon.

The bill before us for consideration would answer part of that need. However, it falls far short of adequacy. The importance of controls over production and credit is recognized. But we must go much further. In my opinion, the President should be given stand-by controls over all prices, rents, and rationing. Time is a vital factor toward any victory, and we must be ready for complete economic mobilization at any given moment.

We should benefit by our experiences in World War II. You will recall that price controls were not put into effect until long after the emergency, and it was necessary to roll back prices. Prices on necessary commodities are already soaring. Controls of production without price control mean inflation and resulting hardship to the millions who cannot afford to meet the increased prices of essentials. You have all read countless stories of the hoarding which has already begun. It does no good to try to assure the people that hoarding is not necessary. It is going on now at an alarming rate and shortages will soon be upon us unless we provide necessary safeguards. Without them, those who are willing to be sensible will suffer unfairly because of the selfishness of the hoarders. Rationing protects all, and conservation of necessities is another step in the structure of defense.

Our present rent-control law is useless in the face of a wartime emergency. Again we can profit by our experiences of only a few years ago and provide adequate protection for the countless persons who will find themselves homeless if we do not remember them now. A strong, adequate, Federal rent-control law is a must.

If we enact comprehensive stand-by laws now, which could transform our economy from a peacetime basis to a wartime basis the moment it becomes necessary, we will only be using the foresight our people expect of us. It simply is not possible at this point for us to be too well prepared—for anything. Only by meeting every problem and emergency just as soon as it is upon us, can we hope to win the bitter conflict of ideologies now under way.

Profits must be taken out of war. An excess-profits-tax bill must be passed at once. This is one time business must assume its proper burden; business cannot be let alone so it can make huge profits while men die in the hills and rice paddies of Korea. Profiteering must be stopped—not when it is too late—but now.

Inconvenience, sacrifice, deprivations, let us have them. What a small price to pay for that most precious heritage which is now so critically threatened—liberty.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

(Mr. DEANE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I take pride in my membership on the House Committee on Banking and Currency. I admire and have a great respect for the keen minds and the loyalty of the members of that committee.

Digressing for a moment, I feel that I express the sentiment of each member of our committee and this House when I say that, while wishing him great success as he goes into other fields, we are going to miss very much our beloved friend and a member of our committee the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

I hope I may not be classed as a deserter of our committee in offering a substitute bill H. R. 9280 which I feel goes to the heart of the problem we face in the country today in view of the present economic emergency.

I am inserting in the RECORD here photostatic copies of editorial comments from representative newspapers in various sections of the country indicating that we should be realistic in the legislation before us. These observations to which I invite your attention clearly indicates that. We should take an additional step and provide for price and wage controls.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Post-Herald of July 28, 1950]

STOP INFLATION NOW

From two eminent sources, Congress and the country got two varieties of advice this week about what economic actions are made necessary by the world crisis in Korea.

One variety came from President Truman and his Council of Economic Advisers. It filled a 160-page printed book, replete with charts and tables of statistics.

Its substance was that the actions already taken or proposed by Mr. Truman are sound and adequate to the present situation.

The other variety, filling 15 typewritten pages, was read by Bernard M. Baruch to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Its theme was that Mr. Truman's actions, taken or proposed, though good as far as they go, are gravely deficient in that they don't go far enough to mobilize the country and to stop inflation.

Mr. Baruch warned against trusting "the futile, illusory hope" that the Korean crisis will pass off without upsetting us too much.

That crisis, he said, is bigger than Korea. The "final area of decision" is not there. Another world war may yet be averted—but only through far greater effort than thus far has been proposed.

For we are lagging in a race against an enemy who has mobilized and armed for war while America and other free nations disarmed. Even if the Korean affair did blow over, we still would have to mobilize and arm, or invite aggression elsewhere.

But mobilizing and arming on the scale now imperative will require vast government spending, increasing already serious inflationary pressures.

They call also for Government priorities, such as Mr. Truman has asked on materials and productive facilities. And once the Government steps into the market with enormous demands, requiring quick priorities, it starts an inevitable chain reaction.

Those from whom the Government takes materials will seek to replace them, bidding up prices to get what they want. So control of prices will become necessary. But price controls won't work well or fairly without rationing. And price controls will prove ineffective if wages and other costs are left free to rise.

Therefore, Mr. Baruch told Congress, it is Government's urgent duty to place a ceiling over the entire economy—a ceiling on prices, wages, rents, food and all other costs—to eliminate profiteering and to ration scarce essentials.

And to do that at once, instead of deliberately refusing "to lock the stable door until after the horse is stolen." For "the right time to stop inflation is always now. * * * It will never be easier to do than now."

Like many other Americans, Mr. Baruch fears concentration of power in the Government and too great dependence of the people on the Government. But, he said:

"The gravest threats to preservation of the American system today are not Government controls. They are military defeat abroad and further inflation at home. What could make people more dependent on Government than inflation?"

If the value of savings is destroyed, he pointed out, with it will go the ability of individuals to care for themselves. If some are permitted to profiteer at the expense of many, the people's confidence in justice will be sapped, leaving grievances for the politically unscrupulous to exploit.

He further advocated taxes high enough to eliminate profiteering and cover all defense costs; postponement of all nonessential Government spending, and fast steps to organize America for all-out mobilization.

Ten years ago, in another growing world crisis, Mr. Baruch began giving President Roosevelt and Congress and the American people that self-same advice.

Looking backward now, it's plain to see that the limited amount of his advice then followed promptly has proved wise.

But to a great extent his advice was disregarded, or followed by degrees too little and too late. And for that fact this country and its people have paid, and still are paying, a fearful price.

This time, let's heed the lessons of experience.

[From the Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer of July 31, 1950]

CONTROLS, MILD OR DRASTIC?

The most important issue before Congress at this time is the determination of the character and extent of the Government controls which should be imposed on the domestic economy in view of the increased military expenditures which are necessary at this time and which may be required in the future.

Bernard Baruch, America's distinguished statesman without portfolio, has expressed the belief that complete controls should be applied immediately to materials, wages, prices, and profits, and that rationing should be invoked for scarce essentials, or those likely to become scarce.

The extreme opposite viewpoint is that the war effort can be maintained satisfactorily merely by a voluntary system of allocating raw materials and other facilities where they will be needed.

A middle-ground program has been submitted to Congress by President Truman. It calls for allocation and priority authority, credit restrictions, and Government loans to finance business expansion for war production.

In the long run, the extent and nature of the controls that are required will be governed by the proportion of our total production that must be devoted to defense. That, in turn, will be determined by the military situation throughout the world. If the war in Korea remains localized, and no others like it break out, we can probably maintain a state of readiness, or partial preparedness, for an indefinite period without imposing drastic controls over the civilian economy. But in the event of more incidents on the Korea model, or a general war, the situation would be entirely different.

This newspaper believes drastic controls should be avoided if that is at all possible. Production can be achieved much more quickly and efficiently in a free economy than in a controlled one. Moreover, we know from recent experience how reluctant bureaucratic officials are to relinquish controls when they are no longer necessary.

Therefore, unless the war situation grows worse, what is more needed at this time, we believe, are higher taxes and strict limitations on bank credit and installment buying. These measures would have the twofold effect of helping to put the Nation on a pay-as-you-go basis, which is the surest way to avoid inflation, and of curtailing the demand for civilian goods, which would facilitate the smooth operation of a system of priorities and allocations for military production, avoid shortages of civilian goods, and reduce pressures for price increases.

We must recognize, however, that in the event of a general world war, mild controls would not be sufficient. And of this we are certain, that if the military situation should require the imposition of drastic controls, such as those recommended by Baruch, they must all be put into effect at the same time.

But whatever type of controls is adopted, they must be accompanied by a sharp curtailment in Government spending for nondefense purposes, if a serious disruption in the economy of the Nation is to be avoided. There should be a complete suspension of Government spending for all projects which can be deferred. There must be more evidence than there has been to date of a sincere desire on the part of Congress and the administration to make a substantial reduction in Government spending that is not related to the war and rearmament.

In this connection, the administration might very well give thought to a revision of the European aid program from a civilian to a military basis. We have gone a long way toward helping the nations of western Europe restore their civilian economies. Today the threat they face is no longer economic collapse but armed aggression. Perhaps the time has come to give western Europe guns instead of butter. But we should insist that those we aid should help themselves and should also contribute whatever they can to the fighting war in Korea.

[From the Hartford (Conn.) Times of July 27, 1950]

MR. BARUCH'S BLUEPRINT

President Truman is asking for certain controls and alterations in the present economic set-up to meet the demand for expansion of our military forces and to offset the financial effects of greater Government spending. These changes include credit controls, allocation powers covering scarce materials, and increased taxes. He has not asked for excess-profits taxes or for price controls.

Exercise of these new powers may enable us to hold the line. If they do not, Mr. Truman says they will at least make the next steps easier and that all preparations for such steps have been made. "If it should become necessary," he says in his economic report, "I shall without hesitation ask the Congress for the grant of the powers to implement these further plans, whether for complete economic mobilization or for further intermediate action, depending upon the need."

To Mr. Bernard Baruch, however, there is no warrant for such a gradual approach to the problem. Mobilization is a familiar problem to him. He has served as a Presidential confidant and public adviser through two world wars and has made a specialty of national preparation to meet a military crisis.

Like any other good planner, Mr. Baruch has a program adequate for circumstances of the gravest nature. His differences with the President's program lie in the degree to which he deems it essential to interfere immediately with the normal factors in our economy. He would go all out at once.

The elder statesman tells the Senate Banking Committee that the time is already here for "an all-over ceiling across the entire economy—over all prices, wages, rents, fees and so on, with high enough taxes to prevent profiteering and pay all defense costs, and an all-embracing system of priorities."

This is total mobilization, at least so far as the whole economy of the country is concerned. Probably Mr. Baruch would not contend that we have yet reached a stage of total war but he evidently believes that our financial and industrial status should be the same as it would be if we were facing a foe on every front.

It is not likely that Congress will adopt this viewpoint. Nor is it essential that it should, provided—and this is a proviso of imperative urgency—we have economic scouts on the job capable of reporting the approach of even a creeping inflation.

Although he does not ask for them now, the President presumably would not object to stand-by powers in excess of anything he intends to use immediately. These, however, the Congress will be most reluctant to grant. Probably a Presidential request for them would precipitate a partisan battle we can ill afford just now. The alternative is that Congress remain on the job and that the executive branch keep it alerted to all inflationary tendencies. Also there should be an advance agreement among the leaders as to what should be done if the time arrives for more drastic curbs on prices, wages, credit, civilian use of scarce materials, or the normal tendency of production to seek the channels of largest profits.

Mr. Baruch thinks we already face the choice of total economic mobilization "or of clinging to petty wants and petty profits, imperiling our freedom and our civilization." If such a choice does not actually confront us, it may very well be just around the corner. If we are wise, we will be fully prepared to meet it on short notice. If it comes, there is no question that something closely resembling the Baruch blueprint should be adopted as our program of national action.

[From the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution of July 28, 1950]

FOR ALL-OUT MOBILIZATION—NOW

Better than most of those in Washington, the people are aware that half-measures invariably result in a half-way job.

We now are trying to prepare the country for possible all-out war with half-measures, both military and economic.

The people are confused. Being at least 6 months ahead of official Washington in their thinking, they are ready now to begin whatever sacrifices may be necessary to insure victory should the Soviet Union attack.

Congressmen are aware of the growing sentiment in this direction. Yesterday the House Banking Committee defeated by only one vote a proposal for full economic controls.

Bernard Baruch, elder statesman and adviser to Presidents, has told Congress he believes full mobilization of all our resources is necessary. Mr. Baruch's thinking is in line with that of nearly all economists and military leaders. Only a few days ago Representative CARL VINSON, of Georgia, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, cried that Mr. Truman's partial mobilization measures fall far short of our need. Both Mr. Baruch and Mr. VINSON long have held the opinion the country's defenses were being allowed to deteriorate beyond the margin of safety. It was his criticism on that point that brought about the break between Mr. Baruch and the President.

The people, we firmly believe, are fully ready to accept Mr. Baruch's program of total mobilization, including price controls, wage controls, rationing, rent controls, and all other measures needed to channel the country's full productive capacity into war goods and supplies.

That would mean regimentation, but regimentation in an emergency is the only means of insuring against discrimination. Moreover, there are few among us who would say that regimentation, of limited duration, would not be preferable to defeat at the hands of the Communists.

Mr. Truman, in opposing all-out mobilization at this time, finds himself in the strange company of Senator TAFT, Republican, of Ohio. The integrity of neither is to be questioned. But the weight of evidence is against them.

The President has made one point clear. When controls are imposed they will be complete. Mr. Truman has made it plain he realizes wage controls must go along with price controls, rationing, excess-profits tax, and other measures. All are necessary to a balanced wartime economy and as assurance that one group does not profit from mobilization at the expense of others.

We do not know when Russia will attack. But if the Soviet Union wanted peace it could be assured of it. That Stalin has not called off the war in Korea means the masters of the Russian people have not changed their avowed determination to dominate the world. The poor state of our defenses is shown in the almost daily reverses in Korea. It will require the concerted energy of the Nation to rebuild them to the point of safety. We already have waited too long. The people are ready. They merely wait on a lagging Congress and a reluctant President.

[From the Indianapolis (Ind.) News of July 27, 1950]

SHALL WE DO IT NOW?

Shall we do now what we know will have to be done later?

That is the question, and the honesty and degree with which it is met may decide this Nation's entire future.

Bernard Baruch, the elder statesman, posed the question, and also gave its corollary: "or shall we fumble and falter and invite defeat."

The American people, as so often happens, are ahead of the President and Congress, this newspaper believes, in understanding the gravity of the hour.

Some Members of Congress, it is true, realize it; Senator HOMER E. CAPEHART spoke for them when he asked why an emergency isn't declared and when he warned there is no way of telling how long America must be on a war footing—"it might be 10 years or 25 or 100 years. I can't tell."

Congress undeniably is faced with a difficult decision: Should it go along with President Truman's program for industrial allocations and credit controls without rationing and wage and price controls? Or should it heed Mr. Baruch, who resolutely told the legislators that the President's plan does not go far enough.

The reasons put forth for total economic mobilization are compelling ones. The real danger, he warns, is not Government control but military defeat abroad and inflation at home. And it is true that the President's program proposes a system of priorities over production, yet it does not provide for controlling prices and other costs. And that unquestionably is inviting more inflation.

"It may be argued that the menace of inflation is not so frightful today," Mr. Baruch said, "since we are not yet at war. Actually the danger is greater."

What is needed, he told Congress, "is an over-all ceiling across the entire economy—over-all prices, wages, rents, fees, and so on, with high enough taxes to prevent profiteering and to pay all defense costs, and an all-embracing effective system of priorities."

Is Mr. Baruch right? Must the Nation completely control its economy? Even if he is not correct on every point, his program unquestionably is sounder than the administration's.

While President Truman acted with courage and foresight in calling the Communist bluff and in asking for higher taxes, he cannot sever himself altogether from his political background. He would like to settle for both guns and butter, just as many a Congressman would, and just as some citizens mistakenly believe is possible.

If we have learned anything from past wars, we should know that the longer we delay cutting away peacetime fat and comfort, the longer we defer the equality of sacrifice and effort that is required, the harder the job is later on.

As Mr. Baruch says, "experience has taught us that when the Government steps into the market with such enormous demands requiring such quick priority, you must control all prices, including wages, rents, foods, and other costs. This is not a pleasant outlook. Neither is that of the young man who has to go to battle. He risks all. Those who remain at home are called upon only to have less comfort."

It is far easier to agree with the adviser to Presidents that, before peace is won, we shall have to come to total mobilization, than it is to follow the faction that would try piecemeal adjustments. That simply isn't possible in this dread day of the atom.

[From the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal of July 27, 1950]

WE MUST MOBILIZE NOW OR WE IMPERIL ALL

The gloomier the news from Korea gets, the more we must marvel that the Nation continues to turn a doubting ear to the advice of Bernard Baruch. And even if the news should suddenly improve, we face, as President Truman and Senator TAFT and just about everybody has said and knows, long years of meeting the requirements if not of world war at least of world defense.

President Truman, it is true, has acted with political courage and statesmanlike foresight in asking Congress for prompt action now in raising taxes, an inevitable follow-up to the enlarged armed forces necessitated by the Korean war and its global implications and ratified quickly enough by Congress. Heavier personal taxes, heavier corporation taxes, and sharp excess profits taxes are demanded by even partial mobilization, and we do well to accept that hard fact now.

But, as Bernard Baruch has tirelessly reminded us between wars, at least three-quarters of the effort required to wage modern war must be civilian. We may not now have the many years of detailed planning without which no major war can be fought efficiently, but such time as we have should not be frittered away in wistfully inactive agreement that of course we will do thus-and-so when and if events show thus-and-so is needed. Two world wars have given us a clear outline of what the present situation calls for, and Mr. Baruch is quick to urge Congress to meet it: All-out economic mobilization now, the better to expedite that all-out military mobilization toward which we must build and plan as fast as danger demands that we should.

The real danger, as Mr. Baruch says, is not Government control but military defeat abroad and inflation at home. We must organize ourselves—"all our resources of men, money, materials, and morals—so that whatever happens—new aggressions abroad, possible destruction at home—whatever happens, the Armed Forces can get what they need when they need it, with the least necessary dislocation of the civilians."

What this involves, of course, is "an overall ceiling across the entire economy—over all prices, wages, rents, fees, and so on, with high enough taxes to prevent profiteering and to pay all defense costs, and an all-embracing effective system of priorities."

We learned that in the last war. Now, with a small-scale war already burning and the prospect of global war sharp in the minds of us all, we still show reluctance to believe that we must begin to cut away our peacetime fat and comfort if we are to have muscle strong enough for the job. The limited powers sought by the President under the Defense Production Act of 1950 are, as Mr. Baruch told the Senate Banking Committee, not enough; indeed, in piling a system of priorities on top of a necessarily huge military spending program, with no provisions for price control, they constitute an invitation to inflation.

We hope that Congress this time will listen and act with speed and wisdom. If we win the next war we can end excessive governmental controls when we please—but without them we are in mortal danger of losing that war. And who then, except Soviet academicians, would be interested in how and why it was that we mobilized too late?

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Post-Herald of July 29, 1950]

THE MODERATION FRONT

President Truman said rightly that price and wage controls and rationing should start simultaneously—if danger of inflation makes them necessary.

But, he makes it clear, he does not think them necessary now.

He continues to hope his present program will keep them from becoming necessary. That program includes:

A new $5,000,000,000 tax bill, which Congress will take some weeks to pass; a heavier tax bill, which he says should be enacted after the November elections; Government power to curb consumer and speculation credit; reduction of nondefense Government spending wherever feasible.

In addition, his economic report this week called for voluntary measures against inflation—for businessmen, consumers, and labor to practice moderation, refrain from hoarding or avarice, and avoid inflationary wage demands and strikes.

Let's see, then, how goes the battle on the "moderation" front:

The day Mr. Truman's economic report reached Congress the Government daily spot index of wholesale prices for 28 commodities had risen 3 percent in less than a week, 10 percent in the last 4 weeks.

That same day the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index hit $6.49—up 8 cents in a week to its highest point since September 1948.

Despite Agriculture Department efforts to hold them down by selling Government's stored stocks at a 200,000-bale-a-week clip, cotton prices had jumped about $26 a bale since Korea.

The Wall Street Journal reported "gray marketeers" demanding premiums of 100 percent or more for steel; savings-bank deposits tapering off as one effect of "war-scare buying;" moneyed people, seeking refugef rom coming higher taxes, bidding up prices of tax-exempt bonds.

The Federal Reserve Board reported Nation-wide department store sales the week of July 15 were 46 percent above a year ago; the greatest increase on record.

Milk prices rose in Chicago, Dallas, New Jersey, and New York City, where the increase was a cent a quart in groceries, a cent and a half home delivered. Manufacturer's prices for Camel and Cavalier cigarets went up half a cent, retail prices a cent.

The United States Labor Department reported an all-time peak of average hourly wages in manufacturing industries—$1.45 an hour. Machinists and toolmakers at 6 Reynolds Metals Co. aluminum plants struck for higher pay.

And a whimsical Washington (D. C.) grocer decided to see how silly hoarders could get. He put up big signs offering 5 pounds of sugar for 98 cents, almost twice his price the day before, and sold 800 pounds in 4 hours.

Congressmen in growing numbers lack Mr. Truman's faith in voluntary measures and indirect controls.

Republicans on the House Banking Committee tried Thursday to write Bernard M. Baruch's proposal for price-wage controls and rationing into the administration's pending defense production bill.

The committee defeated their effort, but by a vote of only 10 to 9.

Mr. Baruch has urged Congress to order price-wage controls and rationing started without delay. If Congress won't go that far, he says, it should at least write authority into law right now, then keep it ready for Mr. Truman to use instantly if and when he changes his mind.

Congress would be exceedingly wise to do just that.

For Mr. Truman may find it necessary to change his mind suddenly and soon.

Certainly the menace of inflation is far more serious today than it was on November 17, 1947, when he demanded from an emergency session of the Republican Eightieth Congress immediate price-wage control and rationing powers. Or than it was on January 7, 1948, when he repeated that demand although a period of deflation was then already under way.

Three of us in the committee voted for a bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], not with the idea that it was perfect but in order that the committee might work its will in bringing to this floor legislation that would be comprehensive.

My bill, which was distributed to the offices of the Members this morning, is H. R. 9280. It will carry every provision contained in the committee bill, H. R. 9176 except the addition of this language in the declaration of policy:

It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign-policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

H. R. 9280 which I am offering as a substitute differs from the latest Kunkel bill, 9283, in these important parts. The priorities and allocations in both the Kunkel bill and my bill are the same.

As to the power to requisition, my bill is the same as reported from the committee. The bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] is limited to commodities and articles.

The expansion of productive capacity in both bills is approximately the same.

As to the control of credit and commodity speculation, my bill provides for the regulation of consumer credit, housing credit, and commodity speculation, as reported by the committee. As discussed here on the floor this afternoon, the bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides only for consumer credit.

Someone may ask who wrote the so-called Deane bill, H. R. 9280. I have studied carefully the statements made by Mr. Baruch. I have also advised with the former distinguished Member of this body, the Hon. John Sparkman. I advised at length with the legislative counsel and the loyal clerk of our committee, in trying to bring together the additional title V, which I feel is representative of the thinking of the American people today.

I cannot help but see in my mind at this time the picture we saw in the morning Post of soldiers from this area leaving for camp. Many of us, no doubt all, are disturbed mentally about the situation. We should not lose a single opportunity to draft into legislation comprehensive control over wages and prices. To that end I propose to submit

H. R. 9280, my bill, with title V, as a substitute unless there is offered by the committee amendments that will take care of the provisions included in title V of my bill because I feel that the time is here when we should seriously come to grips with the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that we would actually defeat the purpose of our committee bill if we did not add those provisions that would make available the stand-by authority vested in the President to control wages and prices.

TITLE V. DEANE BILL

I outline here the provisions of title V of my bill, the title that is not included in the committee bill:

TITLE V—PRICES AND WAGES

NOTICE OF INTENDED PRICE INCREASES

SEC. 501. The President may by regulation or order require sellers of any commodity which significantly affects the cost of living, the costs of industrial or agricultural production or of construction, or the costs of national defense or foreign aid to give up to 60 days' notice to the President prior to the effective date of any intended price increase with respect to any such commodity. After the issuance of any such regulation or order, no price increase shall become effective for the specified commodity without the giving of the notice required by the regulation or order and until the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice. The President may require any seller who has filed such a notice to appear at a public hearing with respect to the justification for such price increase. At the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice, the price increase may become effective, unless prior thereto a maximum price for such commodity is established pursuant to this title. If a maximum price is not so established prior to the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice, that fact shall not preclude the establishment at a later date of a maximum price for such commodity in accordance with this title.

CONDITIONS FOR ESTABLISHING MAXIMUM PRICES

SEC. 502. The authority granted by this title to establish maximum prices for a commodity shall not be exercised unless it is determined by the President that—

(1) the price or prices of such commodity have risen or threatened to rise at any time after June 1950 to such an extent as to affect significantly the cost of living, the costs of industrial or agricultural production, or of construction, or the costs of national defense or foreign aid;

(2) other measures available under this act would not promptly and effectively deal with the rise or threatened rise in prices in a manner consistent with the purposes of this act;

(3) the proposed action will help to carry out the objectives of this act as stated in section 2.

DECONTROL

SEC. 503. Whenever any authority is exercised under this title, the President shall periodically review the conditions of its exercise for the purpose of assuring the removal of such control at the earliest practicable date and, to the extent that he determines that the continued exercise of such authority is no longer necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, he shall immediately rescind such controls.

STANDARDS FOR ESTABLISHING AND ADJUSTING MAXIMUM PRICES

SEC. 504. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President the conditions set forth in section 502 for the establishment of maximum prices for a commodity have been satisfied, the President may by regulation or order establish such maximum prices for the commodity as, in his judgment, will be generally fair and equitable and will aid in effectuating the purposes of this act. In establishing any such maximum price, the President (1) shall, so far as practicable, ascertain and give due consideration to the prices generally prevailing in June 1950 (or if, in the case of any commodity, the prevailing prices in June 1950 are not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions, or other cause, then to the prices prevailing during the nearest period in which, in the judgment of the President, the prices for such commodity are generally representative for such commodity) and shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine and deem to be of general applicability; and (2) may consider, among other factors which he deems relevant, speculative fluctuations, unusual price relationships, and the level of costs of production, distribution and transportation: Provided, That no such regulation or order shall contain any provisions requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods.

(b) Before issuing any regulation or order under the foregoing provisions of this section, the President shall, so far as practicable and appropriate, advise and consult with persons who, in his judgment, are representative of the industry which will be subject to such regulation or order, and shall give consideration to their recommendations. In the case of any commodity for which a maximum price has been established, the President shall, at the request of any substantial portion of the industry subject to such maximum price, regulation, or order, appoint an industry advisory committee or committees, either national or regional or both, consisting of such number of representatives of the industry as in his judgment may be necessary in order to constitute a committee truly representative of the industry, or of the industry in such region, as the case may be. The President shall from time to time advise and consult with the committee with respect to the regulation or order, and with respect to the form thereof, and classifications, differentiations, and adjustments therein, and shall consider any recommendations that the committee may submit.

(c) After the issuance of any regulation or order establishing a maximum price under subsection (a), the President may on his own initiative or at the request of the industry advisory committee, established under subsection (b), review and, when he deems necessary, revise the maximum price or prices established by such regulation or order. In making such review the President shall consider, among other factors which he deems relevant, changes in the costs of production, distribution, and transportation since the establishment of the maximum price, and the level of profits earned by sellers of the commodity or commodities.

(d) Every general regulation issued under the foregoing provisions of this section establishing a maximum price or prices for commodity shall be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation. This requirement shall not apply to modifications of any such previous regulation where the President determined that justification for such modification is adequately covered by previously published statements of consideration.

(e) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, he may, without regard to the foregoing provisions of this section, issue temporary regulations or orders establishing as a maximum price or maximum prices the price or prices prevailing with respect to any commodity or commodities during such period subsequent to June 1, 1950, as the President shall specify; but any such temporary regulation or order shall be effective for not more than 90 days, and may be replaced by a regulation or order issued under the foregoing provisions of this section.

(f) The President shall make an adjustment for hardship to a seller caused by a maximum price established under this section, if in the judgment of the President such adjustment is necessary to prevent gross inequities and can be made without impairing compliance with the provisions of this title and the effectiveness of the regulation.

(g) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit manipulative practices (including practices relating to changes in form or quality) or hoarding, in connection with any commodity, which in his judgment are equivalent to, or are likely to result in, price increases inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

SEC. 505. (a) No maximum price shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such commodity the parity price, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, or, in case a comparable price has been determined for such commodity under subsection (b), such comparable price for such commodity (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no maximum price shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor equal to the parity price or comparable price, as so determined.

(b) For purposes of this title, in the case of any agricultural commodity other than the basic crops—corn, wheat, cotton, rice, tobacco, and peanuts—the Secretary shall determine and publish a comparable price whenever he finds, after investigation and public hearing, that the production and consumption of such commodity has so changed in extent or character since the parity base period as to result in a price out of line with parity prices for basic commodities: Provided, That comparable prices heretofore determined by the Secretary may be used for the purposes of this title.

(c) Whenever a maximum price has been established, under this title or otherwise, with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, the President from time to time shall adjust such maximum price in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such commodity.

(d) Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provisions thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act.

WAGES

SEC. 506. (a) The adjustment of wages, salaries, or other benefits (hereafter referred to as wages) through collective bargaining to reflect increases in productivity, to protect and improve standards of living, and to afford an equitable distribution between wages and profits, is in accord with the policy of the United States. This title is not intended to modify this policy, but rather to further the objective of preventing price increases which tend to destroy economic stability and correspondingly to destroy the value of the wage earner's dollar.

(b) The President is authorized to establish a Temporary Wage Board, hereinafter referred to as the "Board." The Board shall be composed of six members, to be appointed by the President, two of whom, including the Chairman and the Vice Chairman, shall be representative of the public, two representative of employees, and two representative of employers. For each member of the Board the President shall appoint an alternate member who shall serve as a member of the Board in the absence of his principal. The Board shall be within the Department of Labor, but shall be independent of the Department of Labor with respect to its decisions.

(c) An increase in wages granted by an employer who produces or processes a commodity for which a maximum price is in effect under this title may not be considered as an increase in cost of production for the purpose of adjustments in price ceilings under section 504 (c) until 6 months after the effective date of the wage increase, except to the extent that the wage increase has been found by the Board to be necessary for one or more of the purposes specified in subsection (d). A wage increase or prospective wage increase may be submitted to the Board at any time, under procedures to be established by the Board, for a determination under subsection (d).

(d) When an increase in wages or a prospective wage increase has been submitted to the Board, it shall be the duty of the Board to determine whether the wage increase or any portion thereof is necessary for one or more of the following purposes: (1) To compensate for increases in the cost of living, or (2) to correct inequities in the wage structure, or (3) to correct substandards of living, or (4) to maintain essential production at levels certified by the President. The decision of the Board shall be rendered as expeditiously as possible after receipt of the application. Decision shall be by the majority vote of the Board.

(e) Members of the Board representing the public shall receive compensation on a per diem basis when actually employed at the rate of $15,000 per annum and travel expenses as authorized by section 5 of the act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 73b-2), for persons so employed. Other members of the Board shall serve without compensation but shall be entitled to transportation and subsistence as authorized by said section for persons so serving at a rate of $25 per day.

(f) Service of an individual as a member of such Board shall be exempt from the provisions of sections 281, 283, and 284 of title 18, United States Code (Public Law 772, 80th Cong.), and of section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C. 99).

(g) In the exercise of the authority conferred upon the Board by this act it may issue rules, regulations, and orders, and include therein such provisions as it finds are reasonably necessary to exercise its functions hereunder.

(h) The President may transfer and delegate the function, power, authority, and discretion conferred on the Board by this section with respect to salaries, and wages of agricultural labor as defined by the President in regulations, to such departments and agencies or officials of the Government as he may deem appropriate.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 507. (a) The protest procedure set forth in section 203 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable to this title, except that protests may be filed only within a period of 60 days after the issuance of the protested regulation or order, or, if such protest is based solely on grounds arising after the issuance of such regulation or order, within a period of 60 days after such grounds arise.

(b) The Emergency Court of Appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of review of proceedings under section 507 (a) of this act, and for those purposes the provisions of section 204 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable.

(c) The enforcement provisions of section 205 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, with the exceptions of subsections (b), (f), and (g) thereof, shall be applicable to this title.

(d) (1) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, lease, or other obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver any commodity, or in the course of trade or business to buy or receive any commodity, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act in violation of any regulation or order under this title, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

(2) It shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States or for any adviser or consultant to the President (or to any department or agency to which functions under this title may be delegated) to disclose, otherwise than in the course of official duty, any information obtained under this title or to use any such information for personal benefit.

(3) Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any commodity.

(e) The President from time to time, but not less frequently than once every 90 days, shall transmit to the Congress a report of operations under this title. If the Senate or the House of Representatives is not in session, such reports shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate, or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be.

(f) The provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, which are incorporated by reference in section 507 (a), (b), and (c), shall be applied to this title with such changes in designation of provisions as may be appropriate. Reference in these incorporated provisions to the Administrator shall be deemed to refer to the President (or to any department or agency to which functions under this title may be delegated). Reference in those incorporated provisions to a regulation or order issued under section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be deemed to refer to a regulation or order issued under section 504 of this act. Reference in those incorporated provisions to the violation of section 4 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be deemed to refer to the violation of section 407 (d) of this act.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 508. As used in this title—

(a) The term "sale" includes sales, dispositions, exchanges, leases, and other transfers, and contracts and offers to do any of the foregoing. The terms "sell," "selling," "seller," "buy," and "buyer" shall be construed accordingly.

(b) The term "price" means the consideration demanded or received in connection with the sale of a commodity.

(c) The term "commodity" means commodities, articles, products, and materials (except materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap), and it also includes services rendered otherwise than as an employee in connection with the processing, distribution, storage, installation, repair, or negotiation of purchases or sales of a commodity, or in connection with the operation of any service establishment for the servicing of a commodity: Provided, That nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) compensation paid by an employer to any of his employees, except as provided in section 506, or (2) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (4) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting station, a motion picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor-advertising facilities, or (5) rates charged for any professional services.

(d) The term "maximum price," as applied to prices of commodities, means the maximum lawful price for such commodities. Maximum prices may be formulated in terms of prices, margins, commissions, fees, and other charges and allowances.

In my bill H. R. 9230 it is provided that both wages and prices be rolled back to June of this year. Instead of taking a particular date during a particular month, the entire month is taken, because if a certain date is taken it is possible that some particular commodity may have reached the low point in the market. If a spread is given for the entire period of June, less inequalities are likely to result.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman tie prices and wages together so that where one is in effect the other must be in effect? Or does he leave them independent of one another where either one can be put into effect?

Mr. DEANE. On that particular point I will say to the gentleman from Georgia my bill provides, so far as wage controls and price controls are concerned, that 60 days' notice must be given before a price rise can go into effect on any article which the President has listed as significantly affecting the cost of living or the cost of national defense. A public hearing is then required, and at the end of 60 days the price goes into effect unless a maximum price for such commodity is established for such article. And my bill further provides that wage increases shall not be the basis for price increases on any article described above for a period of 6 months. I direct attention of the gentleman to section 504 in my title V as spelled out above.

Mr. PACE. But the point I am particularly interested in is can he put on wage controls without price controls, or can he put on price controls without wage controls? Must he have both if either goes on?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. The gentleman's provision with reference to the wage-control board is not a fixing or freezing of wages, but it merely provides for a board which will permit the employer and employee to present their application for a wage increase and thus have it approved. Am I not correct in that statement?

Mr. DEANE. Yes, that is correct if that is the question the gentleman from Georgia is asking.

Mr. PACE. Then, if it is discretionary he could invoke the one without invoking the other? Do you think that is the situation?

Mr. DEANE. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia, that under the provisions in the bill, equity would certainly result by proper adjudication. The purpose of my bill is to stabilize both prices and wages and where increases are granted they would be granted in the best interests of the public and the great emergency we face.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman understands I am particularly interested from the agricultural viewpoint. If you are going to fix a ceiling price on an agricultural commodity and leave the producer helpless as to the wage he must pay to produce that commodity, it sometimes becomes disastrous.

Mr. DEANE. That would not be the case I assure the gentleman from Georgia. I think the gentleman would be interested in section 505 which provides that no maximum price for an agricultural commodity will be at any time below the parity price.

Mr. PACE. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not think that would necessarily take care of the situation because we do now have parity prices which do not truly reflect the cost of production because the parity price, as the gentleman understands, does not entirely reflect the labor cost which enters into the cost of production.

Mr. DEANE. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. My purpose in offering my bill to the Members of the House is to give the Members the benefit of my studies, as well as my reflection upon the statements made by Mr. Baruch, and the feeling as represented by the people throughout our country.

I am satisfied that the members of this Committee want a control bill to stabilize prices and prevent a wholesale increase in wages. It behooves us to think seriously of amending the committee bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON].

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, it is evident to everyone who has been reading the newspapers that we are engaged in two kinds of war. One is against the Reds in Korea and the other is against inflation here at home. If we lose either one of these wars we will lose our American system, our way of living. Therefore, it seems to me, our major problem is not only a matter of concern about the war in Korea, but also in seeing that we have adequate protection on the inflationary front here at home.

There have been charges made that this bill is too broad and is dangerous. I completely disagree. In fact, I do not think the bill goes far enough to accomplish what we need to whip this inflation at home. The bill before us does several good things. One is the allocation of materials, so that they can be used where necessary in the war effort. The surplus can then be channeled for essential civilian use so that large and small industries alike will have equal opportunities. It will prevent a few big business establishments from hoarding materials that are necessary for small-business men as well.

Another provision is to regulate credit. We know that in the next week or two we are going to be voting out some $16,000,000,000 for the war effort. That is a very inflationary pressure. We have got to siphon off some of that buying power in some way if we are going to hold our economy even. If we put $16,000,000,000 out for the war effort, then we have to take $16,000,000,000 back to hold things even. We have $40,000,000,000 in home mortgages, and another $20,000,000,000 in consumer credit. Through this section of controlling credits it enables the creditor to begin to tap off some of that consumer money so as to begin to balance the books and keep our economy stable. I do not think there is anything dangerous about that at all.

I have had a number of protests from real-estate people, protesting any credit curb at all on real estate, but I think the realtors have a stake in this war, the same as everybody else, and I think that they should make a sacrifice the same as everyone else. As good American citizens, they should stand up and be counted. What is so sacred about property, when you start drafting people and sending them off to war? If you are going to do that with a man's life, what is so unusual in doing something about property rights?

In these two powers there is nothing at all that will upset our economy. On the contrary, it will stabilize our economy.

The third provision helps finance small business and other industries in the war effort. We know that in every war there is concentration, a tending toward monopoly. Big ownerships and big money get control of many businesses and expand, to the detriment of the small-business man. This will help the small-business man keep in the swim, so that we can have a continuation of American system after the war is over. There is nothing unusual or dangerous about that. We have precedents for that many times over.

Those are three provisions that we have in this particular bill. The reason I say this bill is not broad enough: If you have been reading the newspapers and going shopping, you know that, regardless of what people may say about voluntary efforts, they simply are not working today in keeping prices where they should be. There is no reason why prices should be higher today than they were 4 or 5 weeks ago, but we know they are. Therefore, it seems to me that we must have a stand-by control—at least—for the President to use on prices and wages. Let us control prices and let us control wages.

The two go hand in hand. I would not want to separate one from the other. I would want to keep them right together, and I am pretty sure that labor will agree and I am pretty sure they would feel it is a fair bill if we have wage and price control together. I do not think we should go ahead with one without the other.

I do not think rationing should be in the bill. We have been telling the people for the past few weeks that there is no reason for them to hoard, that there is plenty of goods, that there is enough for everybody and a surplus. As soon as we put anything about rationing in the bill it is going to be a signal, so far as the public is concerned, for them to rush in and buy; it is going to be a tip-off that they had better go in right now and hoard all they can because rationing is going to be instituted in the near future. Therefore, if we have price control and wage control, but no rationing, it is going to be pretty good evidence to the people that we have been telling them is the fact, and I believe it is, that there is no reason for them to hoard. They would be foolish to do it anyway, for they would simply be raising the price. If the prices were going to be rolled back through the June 25 level, they would be hoarding at a cost of 10 to 15 percent above what it would cost them to wait until price control went into effect. To me it would be very foolish to go ahead with the rationing program, because it completely turns the tables on what we have been telling the people, that there is plenty of material. All we need is price control; we do not need rationing. Price control would be an encouragement for the people to hold back and wait until prices are rolled back, and their diminished panic buying would contribute to a reduction and stabilization of prices.

We are told that these controls are going to restrict our freedom. I would like to know what is freedom when you have to pay a dollar and a quarter for meat that is worth 90 cents a pound? Where is freedom when you pay 65 cents for 49-cent sugar, or when you pay $140 for lumber that is worth about $105.

When you put on these controls it is going to take the price-stabilization picture and put it in the hands of the American people to control through their President and through their Congress rather than placing it in the hands of a few hoarders and speculators who compel us to pay prices that are very unfair.

We have two great safeguards: One is in the very last section of the bill which states that the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution can repeal this law at any time. The other is brought about by price and wage controls. So many express the fear that, once voted, we would never again get out from under controls. But they overlook the tremendous influence of business and labor. Both will join together in an effort to get these controls repealed when the time comes. If you have simply price control on the one hand and not wage control on the other there would be a big section of our society that would want controls retained; but when you have both together you are going to have a great section of America working together to repeal these controls when the emergency is passed. That is why I say this is a good bill except that it does not go quite far enough. I think price control and wage control should be coupled together rolled back to June 25 and inserted in this bill. Then we would have a good bill.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Does the gentleman have an amendment prepared to carry out his suggestions?

Mr. McKINNON. We will have such an amendment tomorrow.

Mr SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am speaking on the pending bill with the conviction that we are now facing the gravest crisis of our national existence. I would not be fair with the House or with the country unless I were that frank in stating my appraisement of the present world situation.

I took very seriously the words before our Banking and Currency Committee of the Honorable W. Stuart Symington, Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, that we were fighting for our existence, for our survival; and it is that serious.

If we are to survive, we must sacrifice and sacrifice and sacrifice. No one anywhere in America can claim immunity. No individual at home can withhold the last ounce of sacrifice, when called upon, in any less measure than those who are summoned to arms and shipped to battlefields. No business, however large or however useful in normal times of peace, can escape the same test of sacrifice to the last ounce when that which has descended upon us is a struggle for survival.

What we have been discussing today has seemed to me, as I have listened to the learned and the brilliant debate that has been going on, was merely the breaking of toothpicks when ahead of us was a forest of trees. We have been talking about orthodox ways of handling business and credits as though there were anything orthodox about snatching young men from the peaceful activities of their preparatory years and fitting them to the pattern of war. Everyone knows that our soldiers, at this moment fighting heorically with their backs to the wall in Korea, are not living by the orthodox rules of social etiquette, dining with the knives and spoons on the right side and the forks on the left. If we waste time in this Chamber trying to explore ways of proceeding in a strictly orthodox manner with business it is clear we will be striking a fatal blow to the morale of our troops and of the country.

I do not know what controls will be needed tomorrow. I do know that when word goes out for total mobilization that means war. We do not want war if in honor it can be avoided. We are still hoping and praying and toiling for peace. The word from this Congress for total mobilization at this time would be tantamount to a declaration of war. War may be close—none of us can say. But we would only be drawing it closer when before we knew that it was necessary we took a step for total mobilization that in its very nature would be a gesture toward war.

I have been down here for a year and a half, and from the very first month I came here I have felt that over us were the clouds of war, that the Eighty-first Congress might go down in history as a war Congress. A year ago I went back to a meeting in the University of Chicago district of the Independent Voters of Illinois, a fine group of men and women, and I told them of my fears. Here we were, a Nation of men and women of peace and good will, with a program under point 4 for laying the foundations of a permanent peace by erasing from all the countries of a free and democratic world that poverty which is the cause of strife and wars. A program, too, here at home for erasing all unnecessary causes of unrest to the end that we might have for the gaze of all the world the example of a democratic people living harmoniously, contentedly and without discrimination in a happy land. Give us but 10 years of peace and we knew our objective could be reached and the permanent peace at last be achieved. But against us was not only a foreign power that refused to meet us on a basis of understanding but some of our own people, sincere and patriotic but refusing to get down from the dear old horse and buggy to take a look around in a modern world.

I have heard from this well about throwing money down the rat holes of Europe and throwing money down the rat hole of Korea. Last January when we had before us the little ECA bill for Korea, and it was defeated on this floor 192 to 191, the people there who believed in us, who thought we were sincere in holding out to them the hand of democratic fellowship, certainly were disillusioned, and the radio of the Communists made the most of it. In this well were used the words "just throwing money down the rat hole of Korea." If you had been a young man or young woman over in Korea and you had believed in America, then you read that in a debate some Member of the Congress of the United States had referred to your land as a rat hole, what would have been your reaction? Certainly the Communists made the most of it, certainly the words that had been used carelessly in this well—"rat hole of Korea"—were quoted over and over again by the Reds in Korea. Certainly those words—"rat hole of Korea"—were pounded into the ears of Koreans who had been loyal to us and who may be against us now because they lost faith in us, simply because of words carelessly said by men in the Congress with the high responsibility truly to reflect the sentiment of the American people.

I wish now to refer to the President. I am one of those old-fashioned Americans who has always believed in my President. It did not concern me whether he was a Democrat or a Republican, he was my President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, when a man is sworn in as President of the United States he has reached the highest office and there can be but one thought in his mind, to leave for posterity the record of a good administration that his name will go down in the history of his land in glory. So I have always respected the President of the United States. I know that always he is giving to his country the best that is in him. I do not like to see in this hour of crisis, or at any time, anyone with the voice of partisanship questioning the ability, the sincerity, or the wisdom of the President of the United States.

President Truman has told us at this time there are certain controls he needs. He does not know what he is going to need tomorrow, but he said "at this time this is what I need, and if you give me this, I hope we can take care of the immediate situation, and more drastic measures will not be necessary.

I have faith in the President of the United States. I have abiding faith in President Truman.

If our young men are being called upon to die for their country, certainly every man who has money and who has it invested should be willing to sacrifice his interest and his advantage and every man who works should be willing to make similar sacrifices, provided always that he has positive assurance his employer can take no advantage of him. I am for an all-out control bill if this proves indeed to be, as is now feared, a war for survival in which every individual and every business must contribute his all, subject to the common benefit and the national security. When that time comes, if it does, I have the abiding faith that President Truman will ask of us and will receive the full authority necessary to be vested to him to meet any emergency.

I have given much consideration and long thought as to what should be my course and my vote as one Member of the Congress and I am not ashamed to say I have given it prayer because I do not believe that any man with the responsibility that is upon everyone of us in this Chamber now at this most critical hour in our history should be ashamed to say that at night he goes to the fountain head of all wisdom for guidance. And I did that. So, I am going to vote tomorrow for the bill that contains just the powers that our President is now asking. I am going to trust in the wisdom of the President of the United States and I am going to trust that the wisdom of a higher wisdom will be visited upon him in guiding our country through in safety.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, during the hours that we have been debating this bill, a good many very important things have happened. This afternoon at 3 o'clock the Security Council of the United Nations was called together by Jacob Malik of the U. S. S. R. His demand, and I heard some of it and saw some of it over the television upstairs, was that the Communist China delegate should be seated instead of the man who now represents Nationalist China in the Security Council, whom he refuses to recognize. Until today, as you all know, the U. S. S. R. had withdrawn, they were not turned away, but they withdrew from the councils of the United Nations. There has been no suggestion that the door would be closed to them at any point. The chair is there for them to occupy.

Now, in the regular rotation of the chairmanship the U. S. S. R. has the chairmanship during August of the Security Council. Naturally all the members of the United Nations are very deeply concerned as to what the outcome will be, what will be attempted through that chairmanship to annul any acts of the free nations of the United Nations.

At noontime, here in this House, we received and heard the speech of the very brilliant Prime Minister of Australia. We of the Committee on Foreign Affairs were included in a luncheon given by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate. We heard him a second time speaking very intimately of the friendly relations that exist between his nation and ours. He spoke of the fact that they sent their fighters over immediately to Korea. Other nations have followed suit, and, as you know well, we now have offers of ground troops from Thailand, from Turkey, and from many others. I have not seen the full list as of today. We had destroyers from Canada. We are to have troops from New Zealand. We are to have various assistance, because it is a United Nations project.

What that means is that the United Nations has become an active military force, not just a group where discussions take place. That is of very great moment in the history of our civilization.

We must take our leadership seriously. To take it seriously we must retain our strength, our morale, and our right to leadership, which we must earn every day of our lives. Nothing is static.

This legislation has come before us with great speed. It has been said that it has been very well considered. To my knowledge, and I have made considerable inquiry, there were three witnesses heard. They were all Government witnesses. The people of this country directly or through their Representatives have not been heard. Nor have the people of this country been reminded of the presidential powers that already exist in the Selective Service Act. It seems to me they have a right to be told, to be made aware. Without proper consideration, Mr. Chairman, we can unintentionally face many hardships on millions of our people and upon thousands of small businesses.

Our people everywhere appreciate the fact that it is very deeply ingrained in all our hearts, that we are going into a long period of difficult times. We are agreed there must be controls but they must be protective controls, not destructive controls.

Surely we all remember how often we asked: "Why did we not have the sense, the judgment, the wisdom to freeze everything the day after Pearl Harbor day, December 8, 1941? Then everybody would have been in exactly the same boat and decisions could have been made with quiet judgment."

That was the wisdom of hindsight. What has become of it?

I should like to recommend to us all the need for some of the hindsight that we heard a good deal about a number of years after Pearl Harbor. To put it in a few words, "why did we not have the sense, the judgment, the wisdom, to freeze everything on ———?"

Mr. Chairman, I ask why that could not be done in connection with whatever bill is passed here. If the House decides to give stand-by powers to the President, why could it not add a freezing provision until it is decided what those powers should be. We should not lay our people open again to some of the mistakes control-wise which we made during World War II. You recall that we had rationing of meat and various other products, and price controls which were put on partially here and in full there and completely confused the whole situation. I feel, as I am sure all of you do, that controls must be, but I want them very carefully considered.

There is no question in my mind but that if this legislation rolls through at the speed with which it is now intended, we shall find the same inequities and mistakes written into it from which we have already suffered. Hindsight should have taught us to give more time to developing an adequate, just, and constructive program.

Every single American in every walk of life, and every stranger within our gates, will have to live under the controls that will be put on through this legislation. Certainly this Congress should take time to give adequate consideration to this far-reaching measure.

Like many others of you, I have not made up my mind whether I shall vote for this, that, or the other. We do not know what will be the final outcome of the amendments and the substitutes, and the intricate parliamentary procedures which will undoubtedly take place here tomorrow.

But I most earnestly hope, Mr. Chairman, that in consideration of all the matters which are put before us, we will do everything in our power to give time for adequate consideration—time to make the people of this country aware of what lies before them; time to make the Members of the House of Representatives aware of what lies before us all. It is so desperate—this, that lies before us—because in our hands and possibly in the solution that we make of the complex problems of controls may lie the future of mankind. If we do it wrong because of too great haste and this country is not able to sustain the program it must assume and sustain if it is to continue to have the leadership among the free nations of the world, then indeed do we jeopardize freedom everywhere.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950."

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Control of credit and commodity speculation.
Title V. General provisions.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, incorporating the change I outlined in my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL: Strike out the committee amendment appearing on pages 28 to 55, inclusive, and insert the following:

TITLE I—SHORT TITLE, PURPOSES OF ACT, DEFINITIONS, AND OFFICE OF INFLATION CONTROL

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the "Emergency Inflation Control and Defense Production Act."

DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSES OF ACT

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared that it is in the interest of the national defense and security and the purposes of title II are (a) to preserve the value of the national currency against the consequences of price and credit inflation; (b) to stabilize prices, wages, and salaries and to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases therein; (c) to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, burdens upon interstate and foreign commerce, interference with the effective use of the Nation's resources for defense, and impairment of national unity and morale, which would result from unwarranted increases in prices, wages, salaries, and the cost of living; (d) to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities caused by or contributing to the national emergency; (e) to prevent prospects of increases in prices, wages, and salaries from encouraging the accumulation and hoarding of materials needed for national defense, and from impending long-term commitments for production; (f) to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive prices, wages, and salaries; (g) to obtain the maximum necessary production without undue profits to low-cost producers; (h) to protect persons with relatively fixed incomes, investors, and persons dependent on life insurance, annuities, and pensions, from undue impairment of their standard of living; (i) to prevent a post-emergency collapse of values, and the reappearance of price and cost disparities for farmers and other primary producers; and (j) to provide procedures for administration and review which will fairly protect the interests of those subject to this act, without endangering the dominant public interest in the accomplishment of the foregoing purposes.

It is further declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security, and to accomplish the objectives of this act that if the price and supply controls are invoked by the President, the wage controls authorized hereunder shall simultaneously be put into effect. It is further declared to be the policy of this act that all of the controls provided hereunder for the control of costs, including prices, wages, rationing, allocations, and limitations, shall, insofar as practicable, be put into effect at the same time so that, for a period at least, there will be a general ceiling over the economy and a period of general stabilization during which it will be possible to determine with reasonable accuracy in what areas the continuation of controls is necessary and in what areas controls may safely be released.

To enable the Government to provide for the national defense and to carry out our foreign commitments made in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and other foreign commitments, certain materials and facilities must be diverted from civilian use to military purposes and productive facilities must be expanded beyond the levels needed to met the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected. It is the objective of titles III, IV, and V to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by such titles in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the armed forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this title and title II—

(a) "Person" means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, or any organized group of persons, or any receiver, trustee, or other legal representative of any of the foregoing, and includes the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

(b) "Article" means any article, product, material or commodity.

(c) "Services" means any service, operation, or function performed otherwise than as an employee by a person (other than a State or political subdivision thereof) for any other person for compensation.

(d) "Labor" means any function performed by an individual as an employee of a person other than a State or political subdivision thereof.

(e) An article shall be deemed the "same" article as another article if it is identical in every respect with such other article.

(f) An article shall be deemed "similar" to another article if it is not the same article but is an article of the same kind and of the same or substantially the same quality as such other article.

(g) An article shall be deemed a "new" article if neither the same article nor a similar article was sold at wholesale during the base period.

(h) Services shall be deemed the "same" services as other services if they consist of the same or substantially the same operations or functions as such other services.

(i) Services shall be deemed "new" services if the same services were not performed during the base period.

(j) Labor shall be deemed the "same" labor as other labor if it consists of the same or substantially the same functions and duties of the same or substantially the same functions and duties as such other labor.

(k) Labor shall be deemed "new" labor if the same labor was not performed during the base period.

(l) "Sale" means any disposition, exchange, lease, or other transfer, or any contract to do any of the foregoing, and "sell," "selling," "seller," "buy," and "buyer," shall be construed accordingly.

(m) "Sale at wholesale" of an article means (1) any sale of such article for resale by the buyer, or (2) in the case of a sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of such article for consumption or use by the buyer, such sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer; except that wherever specific reference is made to a "sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity," such sale shall be deemed to refer only to a sale of such commodity by the farmer who produced such commodity.

(n) "Price" means the consideration received or receivable in connection with the sale of an article or for the performance of services.

(o) "Wage" means the rate of consideration received or receivable for the performance of labor, whether in the form of wages, salary, or any other form.

(p) "Ceiling" means the maximum price for which an article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of services, or the maximum wage which may be paid for labor.

(q) "Agricultural commodity" includes only an agricultural commodity in the form in which it is customarily marketed by farmers.

(r) "Base period" means the period June 10, 1950, to June 25, 1950, both inclusive.

(s) "Comparable" means substantially the same real, utility, and neighborhood value.

(t) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control created by section 4.

ADMINISTRATOR OF OFFICE OF INFLATION CONTROL

SEC. 4. (a) The President is hereby authorized to create in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Inflation Control, which shall be under the direction of an Administrator, to be known as the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control (in this act referred to as the "Administrator"). The Administrator shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 a year.

(b) The Administrator may establish and utilize such advisory, regional, local, industry, or other groups or agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated service, as may from time to time be needed. The Administrator shall give due consideration to the recommendations of such groups, committees, or other agencies appointed under this section, and he shall utilize, insofar as practicable, local agencies to the end that compliance with the act may be effectuated.

(c) The Administrator may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary in order to carry out his functions and duties under this title and title II, and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the Administrator in any case in any court. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Office of Inflation Control, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

(d) The principal office of the Administrator shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or his duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of his powers in any place.

(e) The Administrator shall submit to Congress a quarterly report covering his activities for the preceding quarter and including such information and data, and recommendations with respect to matters covered by this title and title II as he may find advisable.

(f) The Administrator with the approval of the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Federal Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as he may deem appropriate.

TITLE II—PRICE AND WAGE CEILINGS

PROHIBITED ACTS

SEC. 201. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy or accept delivery of, any article at a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such sale.

(b) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to receive or pay, or to enter into any contract, agreement, or other obligation under which he is entitled or required, or under which he purports to be entitled or required, to receive or pay, for the performance of any services a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such services.

(c) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SALES OF ARTICLES

SEC. 202. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable to the sale of an article by any person shall be—

(1) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which it was so sold by such person during the base period;

(2) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, but is similar to an article so sold by such person during the base period, the highest price at which such similar article was so sold by such person during the base period;

(3) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as, nor an article similar to, an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which the same article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, or if the same article was not regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, the highest price at which a similar article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period;

(4) in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable under such paragraph; and

(5) in the case of a new article, and in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

(b) The ceiling applicable to the sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity shall in no case be less than the parity price therefor, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with other provisions of law.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SERVICES

SEC. 203. Except as provided in section 205, the ceiling applicable to services performed by any person shall be—

(1) in case such services are the same services as services performed by such person during the base period, the highest price for which such services were so performed by such person during the base period; and

(2) in case such services are not the same services as services performed by such person during the base period (or in case such person did not perform any services during the base period), the highest price for which the same services were regularly performed by any other person within the same county or parish, or within the same State if there be no such other person within the same county or parish, during the base period;

(3) in the case of any services to which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. The ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable to such services under such paragraph; and

(4) in the case of new services and in the case of services to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO WAGES AND SALARIES

SEC. 204. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable in respect of labor performed by an individual shall be—

(1) in case such labor is the same labor as labor performed, whether or not by him, for his employer during the base period, the highest wage paid by his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, for the same labor to an employe with the same seniority rights and length of service;

(2) in case the same labor was not performed either by him or any other employee, for his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, the highest wage paid for the same labor by any other employer within the same county or parish, or within the same State, if there be no such other employer within the same county or parish, during the base period to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

(3) in the case of any labor in respect of which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor under such paragraph; and

(4) in case such labor is new labor, and in the case of labor to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

(b) The ceiling applicable in respect of any labor shall in no case be less than the minimum compensation prescribed therefor in or pursuant to any law of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or of any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 205. The Administrator may by regulation or order exempt from the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 204 articles, services, and labor, with respect to which he makes a finding of fact that—

(1) such exemption is necessary in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended; or

(2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such articles, services, or labor in order to preserve the Nation's price structure and to prevent a rise in the cost of living.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO CEILINGS

SEC. 206. (a) Whenever the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he shall by regulation or order establish such ceiling or ceilings as in his judgment will be generally fair and equitable to buyers and sellers of the article or articles in question, or to the person or persons performing the services in question and the person or persons for whom they are performed, or to the employees and employer or employers in question, as the case may be, and will effectuate the purposes of this title. So far as practicable, in establishing a ceiling for any specified articles, services, or labor the Administrator shall ascertain and give due consideration to the prices prevailing for such article or services, or the wages prevailing for such labor, as the case may be, during the base period, and shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such article, services, or wages, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in costs of transportation, general increase or decrease in cost of maintenance and operation, general increases or decreases in costs of living, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the article, persons performing such services, and employers for whom such labor is performed, during and subsequent to the year ending June 25, 1950. Every regulation or order establishing any ceiling under this subsection shall be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(b) Any ceiling or ceilings may be established under this section in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for the continuation of models, the standardization of the production of essential items and such other provisions and adjustments, as in the judgment of the Administrator are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Any such ceiling may be established in terms of price, wages, margins, commissions, fees, charges, allowances, or other terms. Except as provided in section 202 (b) (relating to agricultural commodities) the Administrator may establish a ceiling or ceilings under this section with respect to articles and services below the general market price for the article or articles or services in effect at the time of establishment of such ceiling or ceilings.

(c) The Administrator shall exercise his powers under subsections (a) and (b) with respect to agricultural commodities, and with respect to articles derived in whole or in substantial part from agricultural commodities, in such manner as to support prices to farmers for such agricultural commodities at such levels as may be necessary to enable farmers to receive therefor the highest price received in the base period or the parity price for such commodities, whichever is higher.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO MARKET PRACTICES

SEC. 207. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit, with respect to any article, speculative or manipulative practices, selling, marketing, or inventory practices (including practices relating to changes in form or quality, hoarding, or other practices, which in his judgment, are equivalent to or are likely to result in price increases inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

PROCEDURE

SEC. 208. (a) Regulations or orders establishing any ceiling or ceilings may be issued after such inquiry as the Administrator deems necessary or proper. Within a period of 60 days after the issuance of any such regulation or order any person subject to the provisions thereof may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Administrator, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to such regulation or order and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. At any time after the expiration of such 60 days any person subject to the provisions of such regulation or order may file such a protest based solely on grounds arising after the expiration of such 60 days. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this subsection, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing or 90 days after the issuance of the regulation or order in respect of which the protest is filed, whichever occurs later, the Administrator shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith.

(b) In any proceedings under this title the Administrator may take official notice of economic and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 210, and may limit such proceedings to the filing of affidavits or other written evidence, or the filing of briefs.

REVIEW

SEC. 209. (a) Any protestant who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest, may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, praying that the regulation or order protested be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the Administrator who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of the proceedings in connection with the protest which shall include a statement of the materials of which the Administrator has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm or set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, or to remand the proceeding, except that the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the Administrator at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to any regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the Administrator and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the Administrator, and the court determines that such evidence is material, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the Administrator. The Administrator shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof, and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof, except that on request by the Administrator, any such additional evidence may be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be set aside in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court setting aside in whole or in part any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (c) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code. The Supreme Court shall expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any celling under this title, and the provisions of this title authorizing any regulation or order establishing any ceiling. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have power to consider such validity, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any such provision of this title, or any provision of this title, or any provision of any such regulation or order.

OBTAINING INFORMATION

SEC. 210. (a) The Administrator may make such studies and investigations, and obtain or require the furnishing of such information under oath or affirmation or otherwise, as he deems necessary or proper to assist him in prescribing any regulation or order under this title, and in the administration and enforcement of this title, and regulations and orders thereunder. For such purposes the Administrator may administer oaths and affirmations, may require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents at any designated place, may require persons to permit the inspection and copying of documents, and the inspection of inventories, and may, by regulation or order, require the making and keeping of records and other documents and the making of reports. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (49 U. S. C., sec. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

(b) The Administrator shall not publish or disclose any information obtained under this title that he deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless he determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(c) The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required under this section in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena issued with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the Administrator with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy), or has entered into a stipulation with the Administrator as to the information contained in such documents.

REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

SEC. 211. The Administrator may, from time to time, issue such regulations and orders as he may deem necessary or proper in order to carry out the purposes and provisions of this title, and to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof. Any regulation or order issued under this title may be amended or rescinded by the Administrator whenever in his opinion such action is necessary or proper in order to carry out the provisions of this title or to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 212. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of this title, or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with this title or such regulation, order, or requirement, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond. In cases of actual controversy, a like application may be made by any interested person, and upon a proper showing a like order or decree shall be granted.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, and any person who willfully falsifies in any material respect a document or report required to be kept or filed thereunder, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. Whenever the Administrator has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) The district courts shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title and of regulations, orders, or requirements thereunder, and concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all civil proceedings to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder. Such civil proceedings and any criminal proceedings may be brought in any district in which any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil proceedings may also be brought in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. No costs shall be assessed against the United States Government in any proceeding under this title.

(d) No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties in any Federal, State, or Territorial court, on any grounds for or in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in good faith pursuant to any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, notwithstanding that subsequently such provision, regulation, order, or requirement may be modified, rescinded, or determined to be invalid. The Administrator may intervene in any suit or action wherein a party relies for ground of relief or defense upon this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

SEC. 213. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, or changes in established rental practices, except where such action is affirmatively found by the Administrator to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title.

SEC. 214. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility except where such action is affirmatively found necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting station, or (4) rates charged for any professional services.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the armed forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provisions for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the armed forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation.

SEC. 305. In order to aid the Government of the United States in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the armed forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1940, as amended, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized—

(1) with the approval of the President, to create or organize a corporation or corporations, with power (a) to produce, acquire, carry, sell, or otherwise deal in strategic and critical materials as defined by the President; (b) to purchase and lease land, purchase, lease, build, and expand plants, and purchase and produce equipment, facilities, machinery, materials, and supplies for the manufacture of strategic and critical materials, arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and such other articles, equipment, supplies, and materials as may be required in the manufacture or use of any of the foregoing or otherwise necessary in connection therewith; (c) to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of such land, plants, facilities, and machinery to others to engage in such manufacture; (d) to purchase, lease, build, expand, or otherwise acquire facilities for the training of aviators and to operate or lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of such facilities to others to engage in such training: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Corporation to take any action, directly or indirectly, with respect to the proposals heretofore considered by the Congress and known as the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway, Passamaquoddy, Fla., ship canal, and Tombigbee River projects, or to the project known as the Nicaragua Canal. The powers of every corporation hereafter created or organized under this section shall be set out in a charter which shall be valid only when certified copies thereof are filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives and published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to such charters shall be valid only when similarly filed and published. No corporation created or organized by the Corporation pursuant to this section shall have succession beyond March 31, 1951, except for purposes of liquidation, unless the life of such corporation is extended beyond such date pursuant to an act of Congress. The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any such corporation for any purpose within the powers of the Corporation as above set forth in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine.

(2) to acquire real estate and any right or interest therein by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise, determined by the Corporation to be necessary or advantageous to the carrying out of any authority vested in any corporation created or organized pursuant to this section. The Corporation is also authorized to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of any such real estate. Proceedings for such condemnation shall be instituted in the name of the United States pursuant to the provisions of the act approved August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), as amended, and any real estate already devoted to public use which would be subject to condemnation in proceedings instituted upon application of any officer of the Government shall likewise be subject to condemnation in proceedings instituted upon application of the Corporation as herein provided. Sections 1, 2, and 4, of the act approved February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421), as amended, shall be applicable in any such proceeding. Any judgment rendered against the United States in any such proceeding shall promptly be paid by the Corporation. Immediately upon the vesting of title in the United States of America in any such proceeding, the Secretary of Commerce, by deed executed by him in the name of the United States of America, shall transfer the entire title or interest so acquired to the Corporation, and the Corporation shall thereupon have the sime right with respect to any real estate so acquired as it has with respect to real estate acquired by purchase. No proceedings for condemnation in pursuance of this section instituted prior to the termination of this act shall abate by reason thereof.

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this title or to prevent evasion thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any consumer credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this title; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this title, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this title to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this title or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this title. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this title, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this title, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, and, in like manner, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any acessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein, (iv) credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property, (v) credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property, or (vi) credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

(2) "Person," in addition to the definition given it by section 602 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this title shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. In the exercise of powers under this title, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

TITLE V—PRIORITIES, ALLOCATIONS, RATIONING, AND REQUISITIONS

SEC. 501. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and this power to allocate includes power to ration consumer goods at the retail level to prevent undue price rises and to secure equitable distribution.

SEC. 502. Any person who willfully performs an act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of section 501 or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 503. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any article or commodity is needed in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such article or commodity or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such article or commodity or the use thereof in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, upon the payment of just compensation for such article or commodity or the use thereof, to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any article or commodity or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this section but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such article or commodity or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any article or commodity requisitioned under this section shall terminate, the President may dispose of such article or commodity on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any article or commodity so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reaquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this title and titles III, IV, and V, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

(iv) in administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 602. As used in this title and titles III, IV, and V—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 607 (g) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended (5 U. S. C., sec. 947 (g)), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of titles III, IV, and V. Any such regulation or order may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of such titles.

SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports, and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises, or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this title and titles I, II, IV, and V, and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this title and titles III, IV, and V on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title and titles III, IV, and V, or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under such titles to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, such titles or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any such title, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this title or titles III, IV, or V.

SEC. 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title V, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under ttitle V or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this title and titles III, IV, and V, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this title and titles III, IV, and V may be allocated or transferred for any of such purposes with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out such titles. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

SEC. 612. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 613. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate March 31, 1951, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9176, had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill H. R. 9176.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the social security bill may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2771)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance System, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recomend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That this Act, with the following table of contents, may be cited as the 'Social Security Act Amendments of 1950'.

"Table of contents

Section of this Act	Section of amended Social Security Act	Heading
Title I		AMENDMENTS TO TITLE II OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.
101 (a)	202	OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE BENEFIT PAYMENTS.
	202 (a)	Old-Age Insurance Benefits.
	202 (b)	Wife's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (c)	Husband's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (d)	Child's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (e)	Widow's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (f)	Widower's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (g)	Mother's Insurance Benefits.
	202 (h)	Parent's Insurance Benefits.
101 (a)	202	OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE BENEFIT PAYMENTS—Continued
	202 (i)	Lump-Sum Death Payments.
	202 (j)	Application for Monthly Insurance Benefits.
	202 (k)	Simultaneous Entitlement to Benefits.
	202 (l)	Entitlement to Survivor Benefits Under Railroad Retirement Act.
101 (b)		Effective Date of Amendment Made by Subsection (a).
101 (c)		Protection of Individuals Now Receiving Benefits.
101 (d)		Lump-Sum Death Payments in Case of Death Prior to September 1950.
102 (a)		MAXIMUM BENEFITS.
	203	REDUCTION OF INSURANCE BENEFITS.
	203 (a)	Maximum Benefits.
102 (b)		Effective Date of Amendment Made By Subsection (a).
103 (a)		DEDUCTIONS FROM BENEFITS.
	203 (b)	Deductions on Account of Work or Failure to Have Child in Care.
	203 (c)	Deductions from Dependents' Benefits Because of Work by Old-Age Insurance Beneficiary.
	203 (d)	Occurrence of More Than One Event.
	203 (e)	Months to Which Net Earnings From Self-Employment Are Charged.
	203 (f)	Penalty for Failure to Report Certain Events.
	203 (g)	Report to Administrator of Net Earnings From Self-Employment.
	203 (h)	Circumstances Under Which Deductions Not Required.
	203 (i)	Deductions With Respect to Certain Lump-Sum Payments.
	203 (j)	Attainment of Age Seventy-five.
103 (b)		Effective Date of Amendment Made by Subsection (a).
104 (a)		DEFINITIONS.
	209	DEFINITION OF WAGES.
	210	DEFINITION OF EMPLOYMENT.
	210 (a)	Employment.
	210 (b)	Included and Excluded Service.
	210 (c)	American Vessel.
	210 (d)	American Aircraft.
	210 (e)	American Employer.
	210 (f)	Agricultural Labor.
	210 (g)	Farm.
	210 (h)	State.
	210 (i)	United States.
	210 (j)	Citizen of Puerto Rico.
	210 (k)	Employee.
	210 (l)	Covered Transportation Service.
	211	SELF-EMPLOYMENT.
	211 (a)	Net Earnings from Self-Employment.
	211 (b)	Self-Employment Income.
	211 (c)	Trade or Business.
	211 (d)	Partnership and Partner.
	211 (e)	Taxable Year.
104 (a)	212	CREDITING OF SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME TO CALENDAR QUARTERS.
	213	QUARTER AND QUARTER OF COVERAGE.
	213 (a)	Definitions.
	213 (b)	Crediting of Wages Paid in 1937.
	214	INSURED STATUS FOR PURPOSES OF OLD-AGE AND SURVIVORS INSURANCE BENEFITS.
	214 (a)	Fully Insured Individual.
	214 (b)	Currently Insured Individual.
	215	COMPUTATION OF PRIMARY INSURANCE AMOUNT.
	215 (a)	Primary Insurance Amount.
	215 (b)	Average Monthly Wage.
	215 (c)	Determinations Made by Use of the Conversion Table.
	215 (d)	Primary Insurance Benefit for Purposes of Conversion Table.
	215 (e)	Certain Wages and Self-Employment Income Not To Be Counted.
	215 (f)	Recomputation of Benefits.
	215 (g)	Rounding of Benefits.
	216	OTHER DEFINITIONS.
	216 (a)	Retirement Age.
	216 (b)	Wife.
	216 (c)	Widow.
	216 (d)	Former Wife Divorced.
	216 (e)	Child.
	216 (f)	Husband.
	216 (g)	Widower.
	216 (h)	Determination of Family Status.
104 (b)		Effective Date of Amendment Made by Subsection (a).
105	217	BENEFITS IN CASE OF WORLD WAR II VETERANS.
	217 (a)	Wage Credits for World War II Service.
	217 (b)	Insured Status of Veteran Dying Within 3 Years After Discharge.
	217 (c)	Time for Parent of Veteran to File Proof of Support.
	217 (d)	Definitions of World War II and World War II Veteran.
106	218	VOLUNTARY AGREEMENTS FOR COVERAGE OF STATE AND LOCAL EMPLOYEES.
	218 (a)	Purpose of Agreement.
	218 (b)	Definitions.
	218 (c)	Services Covered.
	218 (d)	Exclusion of Positions Covered by Retirement Systems.
	218 (e)	Payments and Reports by States.
	218 (f)	Effective Date of Agreement.
	218 (g)	Termination of Agreement.
106	218 (h)	Deposits in Trust Fund Adjustments.
	218 (i)	Regulations.
	218 (j)	Failure To Make Payments.
	218 (k)	Instrumentalities of Two or More States.
	218 (l)	Delegation of Functions.
107	219	EFFECTIVE DATE IN CASE OF PUERTO RICO.
108	205	RECORDS OF WAGES AND SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME.
108 (a)	205 (b)	Addition of Interested Parties.
108 (b)	205 (c)	Wages and Self-Employment Income Records.
108 (c)	205 (o)	Crediting of Compensation Under the Railroad Retirement Act.
	205 (p)	Special Rules in Case of Federal Service.
108 (d)		Effective Date of Amendments.
109		MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS.
109 (a)	201	Amendments Relating To Trust Fund.
109 (b)	204–206	Substitution of Federal Security Administrator for Social Security Board.
109 (c)	208	Change in Reference From Federal Insurance Contributions Act to Internal Revenue Code.
110		SERVICES FOR COOPERATIVES PRIOR TO 1951.
	Section of amended Internal Revenue Code
Title II		AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.
201		RATE OF TAX ON WAGES.
201 (a)	1400	Tax on Employee.
201 (b)	1410	Tax on Employer.
202		FEDERAL SERVICE.
202 (a)	1412	Instrumentalities of the United States.
202 (b)	1420 (e)	Special Rules in Case of Federal Service.
202 (c)	1411	Adjustment of Tax.
202 (d)		Effective Date.
203 (a)	1426 (a)	DEFINITION OF WAGES.
203 (b)	1401 (d) (2)	Refunds With Respect to Wages Received During 1947, 1948, 1949, and 1950.
203 (c)	1401 (d)	Refunds With Respect to Wages Received After 1950.
203 (d)		Effective Date of Subsection (a).
204		DEFINITION OF EMPLOYMENT.
204 (a)	1426 (b)	Employment.
204 (b)	1426 (e)	State, etc.
204 (c)	1426 (g)	American Vessel and Aircraft.
204 (d)	1426 (h)	Agricultural Labor.
204 (e)	1426 (i)	American Employer.
	1426 (j)	Computation of Wages in Certain Cases.
	1426 (k)	Covered Transportation Service.
	1426 (l)	Exemption of Religious, Charitable, Etc., Organizations.
204 (f)	1426 (c)	Technical Amendment.
204 (g)		Effective Date.
205 (a)	1426 (d)	DEFINITION OF EMPLOYEE.
205 (b)		Effective Date.
206		RECEIPTS FOR EMPLOYEES; SPECIAL REFUNDS.
206 (a)	1633	RECEIPTS FOR EMPLOYEES.
	1633 (a)	Requirement.
	1633 (b)	Statements to Constitute Information Returns.
	1633 (c)	Extension of Time.
	1634	PENALTIES.
	1634 (a)	Penalties for Fraudulent Statement or Failure to Furnish Statement.
	1634 (b)	Additional Penalty.
206 (b) (1)	322 (a) (4)	Credit for "Special Refunds" of Employee Social Security Tax.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9308

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

AUGUST 2, 1950

Mr. KUNKEL introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To protect the national safety and security from the consequences of price and credit inflation, to facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national defense, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—SHORT TITLE, PURPOSES OF ACT, DEFINITIONS, AND OFFICE OF INFLATION CONTROL

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Emergency Inflation Control and Defense Production Act".

DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSES OF ACT

SEC. 2. It is hereby declared that it is in the interest of the national defense and security and the purposes of title II are (a) to preserve the value of the national currency against the consequences of price and credit inflation; (b) to stabilize prices, wages, and salaries and to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases therein; (c) to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, burdens upon interstate and foreign commerce, interference with the effective use of the Nation's resources for defense, and impairment of national unity and morale, which would result from unwarranted increases in prices, wages, salaries, and the cost of living; (d) to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities caused by or contributing to the national emergency; (e) to prevent prospects of increases in prices, wages, and salaries from encouraging the accumulation and hoarding of materials needed for national defense, and from impending long-term commitments for production; (f) to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive prices, wages, and salaries; (g) to obtain the maximum necessary production without undue profits to low-cost producers; (h) to protect persons with relatively fixed incomes, investors, and persons dependent on life insurance, annuities, and pensions, from undue impairment of their standard of living; (i) to prevent a post-emergency collapse of values, and the reappearance of price and cost disparities for farmers and other primary producers; and (j) to provide procedures for administration and review which will fairly protect the interests of those subject to this Act, without endangering the dominant public interest in the accomplishment of the foregoing purposes.

It is further declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security, and to accomplish the objectives of this Act that if the price and supply controls are invoked by the President, the wage controls authorized hereunder shall simultaneously be put into effect. It is further declared to be the policy of this Act that all of the controls provided hereunder for the control of costs, including prices, wages, rationing, allocations, and limitations, shall, insofar as practicable, be put into effect at the same time so that, for a period at least, there will be a general ceiling over the economy and a period of general stabilization during which it will be possible to determine with reasonable accuracy in what areas the continuation of controls is necessary and in what areas controls may safely be released.

To enable the Government to provide for the national defense and to carry out our foreign commitments made in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and other foreign commitments, certain materials and facilities must be diverted from civilian use to military purposes and productive facilities must be expanded beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected. It is the objective of titles III, IV, and V to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by such titles in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this title and title II—

(a) "Person" means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, or any organized group of persons, or any receiver, trustee, or other legal representative of any of the foregoing, and includes the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

(b) "Article" means any article, product, material, or commodity.

(c) "Services" means any service, operation, or function performed otherwise than as an employee by a person (other than a State or political subdivision thereof) for any other person for compensation.

(d) "Labor" means any function performed by an individual as an employee of a person other than a State or political subdivision thereof.

(e) An article shall be deemed the "same" article as another article if it is identical in every respect with such other article.

(f) An article shall be deemed "similar" to another article if it is not the same article but is an article of the same kind and of the same or substantially the same quality as such other article.

(g) An article shall be deemed a "new" article if neither the same article nor a similar article was sold at wholesale during the base period.

(h) Services shall be deemed the "same" services as other services if they consist of the same or substantially the same operations or functions as such other services.

(i) Services shall be deemed "new" services if the same services were not performed during the base period.

(j) Labor shall be deemed the "same" labor as other labor if it consists of the same or substantially the same functions and duties of the same or substantially the same functions and duties as such other labor.

(k) Labor shall be deemed "new" labor if the same labor was not performed during the base period.

(l) "Sale" means any disposition, exchange, lease, or other transfer, or any contract to do any of the foregoing, and "sell", "selling", "seller", "buy", and "buyer", shall be construed accordingly.

(m) "Sale at wholesale" of an article means (1) any sale of such article for resale by the buyer, or (2) in the case of a sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of such article for consumption or use by the buyer, such sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer; except that wherever specific reference is made to a "sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity," such sale shall be deemed to refer only to a sale of such commodity by the farmer who produced such commodity.

(n) "Price" means the consideration received or receivable in connection with the sale of an article or for the performance of services.

(o) "Wage" means the rate of consideration received or receivable for the performance of labor, whether in the form of wages, salary, or any other form.

(p) "Ceiling" means the maximum price for which an article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of services, or the maximum wage which may be paid for labor.

(q) "Agricultural commodity" includes only an agricultural commodity in the form in which it is customarily marketed by farmers.

(r) "Base period" means the period June 10, 1950, to June 25, 1950, both inclusive.

(s) "Comparable" means substantially the same real, utility, and neighborhood value.

(t) "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control created by section 4.

ADMINISTRATOR OF OFFICE OF INFLATION CONTROL

SEC. 4. (a) The President is hereby authorized to create in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Inflation Control, which shall be under the direction of an Administrator, to be known as the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control (in this Act referred to as the "Administrator"). The Administrator shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 a year.

(b) The Administrator may establish and utilize such advisory, regional, local, industry, or other groups or agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated service, as may from time to time be needed. The Administrator shall give due consideration to the recommendations of such groups, committees, or other agencies appointed under this section, and he shall utilize, insofar as practicable, local agencies to the end that compliance with the act may be effectuated.

(c) The Administrator may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary in order to carry out his functions and duties under this title and title II, and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the Administrator in any case in any court. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Office of Inflation Control, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

(d) The principal office of the Administrator shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or his duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of his powers in any place.

(e) The Administrator shall submit to Congress a quarterly report covering his activities for the preceding quarter and including such information and data, and recommendations with respect to matters covered by this title and title II as he may find advisable.

(f) The Administrator with the approval of the President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Federal Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as he may deem appropriate.

TITLE II—PRICE AND WAGE CEILINGS

PROHIBITED ACTS

SEC. 201. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy or accept delivery of, any article at a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such sale.

(b) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to receive or pay, or to enter into any contract, agreement, or other obligation under which he is entitled or required, or under which he purports to be entitled or required, to receive or pay, for the performance of any services a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such services.

(c) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SALES OF ARTICLES

SEC. 202. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable to the sale of an article by any person shall be—

(1) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which it was so sold by such person during the base period;

(2) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, but is similar to an article so sold by such person during the base period, the highest price at which such similar article was so sold by such person during the base period;

(3) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as, nor an article similar to, an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which the same article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, or if the same article was not regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, the highest price at which a similar article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period;

(4) in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable under such paragraph; and

(5) in the case of a new article, and in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

(b) The ceiling applicable to the sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity shall in no case be less than the parity price therefor, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with other provisions of law.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SERVICES

SEC. 203. Except as provided in section 205, the ceiling applicable to services performed by any person shall be—

(1) in case such services are the same services as services performed by such person during the base period, the highest price for which such services were so performed by such person during the base period;

(2) in case such services are not the same services as services performed by such person during the base period (or in case such person did not perform any services during the base period), the highest price for which the same services were regularly performed by any other person within the same county or parish, or within the same State if there be no such other person within the same county or parish, during the base period;

(3) in the case of any services to which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. The ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable to such services under such paragraph; and

(4) in the case of new services and in the case of services to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO WAGES AND SALARIES

SEC. 204. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable in respect of labor performed by an individual shall be—

(1) in case such labor is the same labor as labor performed, whether or not by him, for his employer during the base period, the highest wage paid by his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, for the same labor to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

(2) in case the same labor was not performed either by him or any other employee, for his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, the highest wage paid for the same labor by any other employer within the same county or parish, or within the same State, if there be no such other employer within the same county or parish, during the base period to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

(3) in the case of any labor in respect of which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor under such paragraph; and

(4) in case such labor is new labor, and in the case of labor to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

(b) The ceiling applicable in respect of any labor shall in no case be less than the minimum compensation prescribed therefor in or pursuant to any law of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or of any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 205. The Administrator may by regulation or order exempt from the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 204 articles, services, and labor, with respect to which he makes a finding of fact that—

(1) such exemption is necessary in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended; or

(2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such articles, services, or labor in order to preserve the Nation's price structure and to prevent a rise in the cost of living.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO CEILINGS

SEC. 206. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectu-ate the purposes of this title, he shall by regulation or order establish such ceiling or ceilings as in his judgment will be generally fair and equitable to buyers and sellers of the article or articles in question, or to the person or persons performing the services in question and the person or persons for whom they are performed, or to the employees and employer or employers in question, as the case may be, and will effectuate the purposes of this title. So far as practicable, in establishing a ceiling for any specified articles, services, or labor the Administrator shall ascertain and give due consideration to the prices prevailing for such article or services, or the wages prevailing for such labor, as the case may be, during the base period, and shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such article, services, or wages, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in costs of transportation, general increase or decrease in cost of maintenance and operation, general increases or decreases in costs of living, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the article, persons performing such services, and employers for whom such labor is performed, during and subsequent to the year ending June 25, 1950. Every regulation or order establishing any ceiling under this subsection shall be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(b) Any ceiling or ceilings may be established under this section in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for the continuation of models, the standardization of the production of essential items and such other provisions and adjustments, as in the judgment of the Administrator are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Any such ceiling may be established in terms of price, wages, margins, commissions, fees, charges, allowances, or other terms. Except as provided in section 202 (b) (relating to agricultural commodities) the Administrator may establish a ceiling or ceilings under this section with respect to articles and services below the general market price for the article or articles or services in effect at the time of establishment of such ceiling or ceilings.

(c) The Administrator shall exercise his powers under subsections (a) and (b) with respect to agricultural commodities, and with respect to articles derived in whole or in substantial part from agricultural commodities, in such manner as to support prices to farmers for such agricultural commodities at such levels as may be necessary to enable farmers to receive therefor the highest price received in the base period or the parity price for such commodities, whichever is higher.

POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO MARKET PRACTICES

SEC. 207. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit, with respect to any article, speculative or manipulative practices, selling, marketing, or inventory practices (including practices relating to changes in form or quality, hoarding, or other practices), which in his judgment, are equivalent to or are likely to result in price increases inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

PROCEDURE

SEC. 208. (a) Regulations or orders establishing any ceiling or ceilings may be issued after such inquiry as the Administrator deems necessary or proper. Within a period of sixty days after the issuance of any such regulation or order any person subject to the provisions thereof may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Administrator, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to such regulation or order and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. At any time after the expiration of such sixty days any person subject to the provisions of such regulation or order may file such a protest based solely on grounds arising after the expiration of such sixty days. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this subsection, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing or ninety days after the issuance of the regulation or order in respect of which the protest is filed, whichever occurs later, the Administrator shall either grant or deny such protest in whole, or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith.

(b) In any proceedings under this title, the Administrator may take official notice of economic and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 210, and may limit such proceedings to the filing of affidavits or other written evidence, or the filing of briefs.

REVIEW

SEC. 209. (a) Any protestant who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest, may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, praying that the regulation or order protested be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the Administrator who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of the proceedings in connection with the protest which shall include a statement of the materials of which the Administrator has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm or set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, or to remand the proceeding, except that the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the Administrator at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to any regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the Administrator and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the Administrator, and the court determines that such evidence is material, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the Administrator. The Administrator shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof, and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof, except that on request by the Administrator, any such additional evidence may be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be set aside in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court setting aside in whole or in part any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (c) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code. The Supreme Court shall expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any ceiling under this title, and the provisions of this title authorizing any regulation or order establishing any ceiling. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have power to consider such validity, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any such provision of this title, or any provision of this title, or any provision of any such regulation or order.

OBTAINING INFORMATION

SEC. 210. (a) The Administrator may make such studies and investigations, and obtain or require the furnishing of such information under oath or affirmation or otherwise, as he deems necessary or proper to assist him in prescribing any regulation or order under this title, and in the administration and enforcement of this title, and regulations and orders thereunder. For such purposes the Administrator may administer oaths and affirmations, may require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents at any designated place, may require persons to permit the inspection and copying of documents, and the inspection of inventories, and may, by regulation or order, require the making and keeping of records and other documents and the making of reports. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (49 U. S. C., sec. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

(b) The Administrator shall not publish or disclose any information obtained under this title that he deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless he determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(c) The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required under this section in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena issued with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the Administrator with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy), or has entered into a stipulation with the Administrator as to the information contained in such documents.

REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

SEC. 211. The Administrator may, from time to time, issue such regulations and orders as he may deem necessary or proper in order to carry out the purposes and provisions of this title, and to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof. Any regulation or order issued under this title may be amended or rescinded by the Administrator whenever in his opinion such action is necessary or proper in order to carry out the provisions of this title or to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof.

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 212. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of this title, or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with this title or such regulation, order, or requirement, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond. In cases of actual controversy, a like application may be made by any interested person, and upon a proper showing a like order or decree shall be granted.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, and any person who willfully falsifies in any material respect a document or report required to be kept or filed thereunder, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the Administrator has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) The district courts shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title and of regulations, orders, or requirements thereunder, and concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all civil proceedings to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder. Such civil proceedings and any criminal proceedings may be brought in any district in which any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil proceedings may also be brought in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. No costs shall be assessed against the United States Government in any proceeding under this title.

(d) No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties in any Federal, State, or Territorial court, on any grounds for or in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in good faith pursuant to any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, notwithstanding that subsequently such provision, regulation, order, or requirement may be modified, rescinded, or determined to be invalid. The Administrator may intervene in any suit or action wherein a party relies for ground of relief or defense upon this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

SEC. 213. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, or changes in established rental practices, except where such action is affirmatively found by the Administrator to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title.

SEC. 214. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility except where such action is affirmatively found necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting station, or (4) rates charged for any professional services.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provisions for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation.

SEC. 305. In order to aid the Government of the United States in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1940, as amended, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized—

(1) with the approval of the President, to create or organize a corporation or corporations, with power (a) to produce, acquire, carry, sell, or otherwise deal in strategic and critical materials as defined by the President; (b) to purchase and lease land, purchase, lease, build, and expand plants, and purchase and produce equipment, facilities, machinery, materials, and supplies for the manufacture of strategic and critical materials, arms, ammunition, and implements of war, and such other articles, equipment, supplies, and materials as may be required in the manufacture or use of any of the foregoing or otherwise necessary in connection therewith; (c) to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of such land, plants, facilities, and machinery to others to engage in such manufacture; (d) to purchase, lease, build, expand, or otherwise acquire facilities for the training of aviators and to operate or lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of such facilities to others to engage in such training: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Corporation to take any action, directly or indirectly, with respect to the proposals heretofore considered by the Congress and known as the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway, Passamaquoddy, Florida ship canal, and Tombigbee River projects, or to the project known as the Nicaragua Canal. The powers of every corporation hereafter created or organized under this section shall be set out in a charter which shall be valid only when certified copies thereof are filed with the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives and published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to such charters shall be valid only when similarly filed and published. No corporation created or organized by the Corporation pursuant to this section shall have succession beyonr March 31, 1951, except for purposes of liquidation unless the life of such corporation is extended beyond such date pursuant to an Act of Congress. The Corporation may make loans to, or purchase the capital stock of, any such corporation for any purpose within the powers of the Corporation as above set forth in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, on such terms and conditions as the Corporation may determine; and or otherwise dispose of any such real estate. Proceedings for such condemnation shall be instituted in the name of the United States pursuant to the provisions of the Act approved August 1, 1888 (25 Stat. 357), as amended, and any real estate already devoted to public use which would be subject to condemnation in proceedings instituted upon application of any officer of the Government shall likewise be subject to condemnation in proceedings instituted upon application of the Corporation as herein provided. Sections 1, 2, and 4, of the Act approved February 26, 1931 (46 Stat. 1421), as amended, shall be applicable in any such proceeding. Any judgment rendered against the United States in any such proceeding shall promptly be paid by the Corporation. Immediately upon the vesting of title in the United States of America in any such proceeding, the Secretary of Commerce, by deed executed by him in the name of the United States of America, shall transfer the entire title or interest so acquired to the Corporation, and the Corporation shall thereupon have the same right with respect to any real estate so acquired as it has with respect to real estate acquired by purchase. No proceedings for condemnation in pursuance of this section instituted prior to the termination of this Act shall abate by reason thereof.

(2) to acquire real estate and any right or interest therein by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise, determined by the Corporation to be necessary or advantageous to the carrying out of any authority vested in any corporation created or organized pursuant to this section. The Corporation is also authorized to sell, lease,

TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this title or to prevent evasion thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors,

(1) the level and trend of consumer credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any consumer credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any such credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any such credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this title; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this title, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this title to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this title or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this title. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securites and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this title, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) For the purposes of this title, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, and, in like manner, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or non-residential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein, (iv) credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property, (v) credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property, or (vi) credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

(2) "Person," in addition to the definition given it by section 602 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this title shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 402. In the exercise of powers under this title, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

TITLE V—PRIORITIES, ALLOCATIONS, RATIONING, AND REQUISITIONS

SEC. 501. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and this power to allocate includes power to ration consumer goods at the retail level to prevent undue price rises and to secure equitable distribution.

SEC. 502. Any person who willfully performs an act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required by the provisions of section 501 or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 503. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any article or commodity is needed in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such article or commodity or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such article or commodity or the use thereof in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, upon the payment of just compensation for such article or commodity or the use thereof, to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any article or commodity or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this section but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such article or commodity or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any article or commodity requisitioned under this section shall terminate, the President may dispose of such article or commodity on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any article or commodity so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this title and titles III, IV, and V, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 602. As used in this title and titles III, IV, and V—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Goverment and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 607 (g) of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1945, as amended (5 U. S. C., sec. 947 (g)), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of titles III, IV, and V. Any such regulation or order may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of such titles.

SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports, and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises, or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this title and titles I, II, IV, and V, and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this title and titles III, IV, and V on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title and titles III, IV, and V, or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under such titles to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, such titles or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any such title, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this title or titles III, IV, or V.

SEC. 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title V, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title V or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this title and titles III, IV, and V, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this title and titles III, IV, and V may be allocated or transferred for any of such purposes with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out such titles. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 612. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 613. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate March 31, 1951, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9308

A BILL

To protect the national safety and security from the consequences of price and credit inflation, to facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national defense, and for other purposes.

By Mr. KUNKEL

AUGUST 2, 1950

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9314

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

AUGUST 2, 1950

Mr. SPENCE introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act, divided into titles, may be cited as the "Defense Production Act of 1950".

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title I. Priorities and allocations.
Title II. Authority to requisition.
Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
Title IV. Price and wage stabilization.
Title V. Settlement of labor disputes.
Title VI. Control of credit.
Title VII. General provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this Act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this Act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 per centum of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within three years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guarantee made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

(b) Any corporation created under this section—

(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30,

1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to Act of Congress; and

(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said Act.

(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide stand-by authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense; to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of the Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised, so far as practicable, in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this Act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

SEC. 402. (a) Whenever the President shall find it necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title he may issue regulations or orders—

(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery or, the purchase or receipt, by or to any person of any material or service: Provided, That the term "rental" as used in this title shall not include the lease or rental of real property.

(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on any salary, wage, or other compensation paid to or received by any person, for any type of employment. Such ceilings shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred except as provided in section 402 (e).

(b) The President may designate the materials, services, or types of employment to which specified ceilings will apply or he may prescribe a general ceiling for all materials, or services, or for all types of employment. So far as practicable, in establishing any ceiling, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to salaries, wages, or other compensations, prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. In establishing price or wage ceilings the President shall give due considerations to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this Act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or persons performing such services, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In determining and adjusting ceilings on salaries, wages, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such salaries, wages, or other compensation. Any regulation or order establishing a ceiling or ceilings shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

(c) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials, or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials, or services, or transactions, or types of employment, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Where the President so exempts transportation, communication, or public utility services, he may intervene in a proceeding involving the charge for such service in order to carry out the purposes of this title.

(d) Regulations or orders under this section may be established in such form and manner, may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions, and may contain such requirements, classifications, and differentiations, and such provisions, including provisions relating to types of employment, and quality, speculation, hoarding, standardization, manipulation, simplification, and production by a manufacturer of a required percentage of the less expensive items of his line, and definitions as in the judgment of the President are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or facilitate enforcement, of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

(e) (1) The ceiling applicable in respect of any salary, wage, or other compensation shall not be less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to salaries, wages, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947, as amended, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(2) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or (ii) the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified above. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such fresh fruit or fresh vegetables. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such Act.

SEC. 403. It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade, to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

SEC. 405. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform services.

SEC. 406. At any time prior to six months from the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within six months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than thirty days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this Act.

(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That, upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

SEC. 407. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be continued in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on the request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of the thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of this title, and the powers heretofore granted by law to the Emergency Court of Appeals are hereby continued for purposes of exercises of the jurisdiction granted by this title.

(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

SEC. 408. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 403 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 403 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

(c) If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such commodity for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within one year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within thirty days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such one-year period. If such action is instituted by the President the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

(d) (1) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title and to assure compliance with and provide for the effective enforcement of any regulation or order issued or which may be issued under this title, he may by regulation or order issue to or require of any person or persons subject to any regulation or order issued under this title, a license as a condition of selling any commodity or commodities with respect to which such regulation or order is applicable. It shall not be necessary for the President to issue a separate license for each commodity or for each regulation or order with respect to which a license is required. No such license shall contain any provision which could not be prescribed by regulation, order, or requirement under this title: Provided, That no such license may be required as a condition of selling or distributing (except as waste or scrap) newspapers, periodicals, books, or other printed or written material, or motion pictures, or as a condition of selling radio time: Provided further, That no license may be required of any farmer as a condition of selling any agricultural commodity produced by him, and no license may be required of any fisherman as a condition of selling any fishery commodity caught or taken by him: Provided further, That in any case in which such a license is required of any person, the President shall not have power to deny to such person a license to sell any commodity or commodities, unless such person already has such a license to sell such commodity or commodities, or unless there is in effect under paragraph (2) of this subsection with respect to such person an order of suspension of a previous license to the extent that such previous license authorized such person to sell such commodity or commodities.

(2) Whenever in the judgment of the President a person has violated any of the provisions of a license issued under this subsection, or has violated any of the provisions of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title, which is applicable to such person, a warning notice shall be sent by registered mail to such person. If the President has reason to believe that such person has again violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after receipt of such warning notice, the President may petition any State or Territorial court of competent jurisdiction, or a district court subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, for an order suspending the license of such person for any period of not more than twelve months. If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under this title is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than twelve months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed. For the purposes of this subsection, any such proceedings for the suspension of a license may be brought in a district court if the licensee is doing business in more than one State, or if his gross sales exceed $100,000 per annum. Within thirty days after the entry of the judgment or order of any court either suspending a license, or dismissing or denying in whole or in part the President's petition for suspension, an appeal may be taken from such judgment or order in like manner as an appeal may be taken in other cases from a judgment or order of a State, Territorial, or district court, as the case may be. Upon good cause shown, any such order of suspension may be stayed by the appropriate court or any judge thereof in accordance with the applicable practice; and upon written stipulation of the parties to the proceeding for suspension, approved by the trial court, any such order of suspension may be modified, and the license which has been suspended may be restored, upon such terms and conditions as such court shall find reasonable. Any such order of suspension hall be affirmed by the appropriate appellate court if, under he applicable rules of law, the evidence in the record supports a finding that there has been a violation of any provision of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after receipt of such warning notice. No proceedings for suspension of a license, and no such suspension, shall confer any immunity from any other provision of this title.

TITLE V—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this Act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this Act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CREDIT

SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

SEC. 601. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this Act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that Act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context

otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

(1) "Consumer credit" means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

(2) "Real estate credit" means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

(3) "Credit" means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

(4) "Person", in addition to the definition given it by section 702 (a) of this Act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

SEC. 602. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this Act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

SEC. 611. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the speculative purchase or speculative sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a speculative position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this Act: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall be applicable to bona fide hedging transactions.

"(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this Act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term 'contract market', as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of three years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"(E) For the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term 'commodity' shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this Act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"(G) Sections 4a and 4i of this Act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term 'contract market' as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade."

TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this Act.

(b) In order to carry out this policy—

(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this Act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this Act;

(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this Act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

(iii) in administering this Act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this Act; and

(iv) in administering this Act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

SEC. 702. As used in this Act—

(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

SEC. 703. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this Act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court.

SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this Act. Any regulation or order under this Act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this Act is in effect and for a period of two years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this Act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this Act.

(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 706. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this Act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this Act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this Act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or such section, or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this Act.

SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this Act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this Act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

SEC. 708. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this Act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than ten days before making any request or finding thereunder.

(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this Act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that Act.

(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this Act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

(c) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99).

SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this Act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this Act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this Act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this Act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the Acts making such funds available.

SEC. 712. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 713. This Act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.

81ST CONGRESS
2D SESSION

H. R. 9314

A BILL

To establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

By Mr. SPENCE

AUGUST 2, 1950

Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 9176, the Defense Production Act of 1950, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday there was pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday when I was outlining this bill I mentioned certain changes that were going to be made in it in order to bring it more in line with what I thought was the thinking of a large number of Members in this body, and also yet preserve the general intent of the measure itself.

In order that everybody should have an opportunity to read it exactly and without any possible delay, the amendment was offered last night through the courtesy of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and the chairman of the committee, and it is now available in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 11695, and following.

The present substitute is tied closely to the language of the Selective Service Act; in fact, the language is taken exactly from section 18 of the Selective Service Act.

There were several things which I did not have time to mention yesterday, and a number of them are very important. In the first place there probably could not be a better time in which to freeze the economy than the period from June 10 to June 25. That was a period when we had relatively high employment throughout the country, when prices and wages had been determined by the ordinary course of economic causes and free collective bargaining, and the President called attention to this in his recent statement on the state of the Union and in his message outlining the present condition of the country which he sent up to Congress not long ago.

It is particularly important to note in connection with the wage freeze that most of the large unions today have already signed contracts which run for a considerably longer period than the term of this bill. The bill runs until March 31, 1951. I call attention to a few of the contracts which have been recently signed:

Allis-Chalmers signed one for 5 years.

Ford has a 2-year contract signed late last year.

Chrysler signed this year for a 3-year contract.

The steel industry has a 2-year contract, although there is a provision in it that it can be reopened this fall on the ground of higher wages.

Coal has a national contract for 1 year.

The construction industry earlier this year signed a 3-year contract.

The clothing industry signed a 5-year contract for men's clothing in 1949, and for ladies one for from 2 to 3 years.

The Sperry Gyroscope Co., has also signed a 3-year contract.

So that when the wage freeze is put in it could not impose any too great hardship on any of the groups if the cost of living is only held in line as is contemplated in the provisions of the bill relating to price control and rationing.

The theory of the bill is that there should be established by the President a period during which everything will be held and stabilized, and then he can release or continue controls as he sees fit and in regard to certain areas and certain commodities as he sees fit.

It is also definitely stated in the new bill that the President is to put into effect simultaneously controls on wages, prices, and services. I call your attention to the specific language on that, which is given on page 11695 in the second paragraph of section 2, where it starts out, "It is further declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security," and the language immediately following.

I also refer to the termination date of this proposal. The termination is March 31, 1951. That is a relatively short time, but it is plenty of time to accomplish the purposes of this act. It gives the new Congress 3 months in which to consider the matter, to see whether the measure is still necessary, and also to place in it perfecting amendments.

I am quite sure that no matter what bill is adopted today we will find as time goes on—certainly that was our experience with the OPA acts in the past—that these measures will require certain adjustments in the light of practical experience, so that all that will fall naturally within the purview of a study in connection with a renewal bill at the expiration date of this bill.

On the other hand, I do not believe the general public will at any time have any doubt as to whether or not the act will be extended when the time for renewal comes. Anyone who follows the papers and reads the developments in the international picture, as we all do from day to day, no matter what our walk of life, will readily understand and will readily know whether this act will be extended when the proper time comes.

I feel that it is certainly important to adopt a bill embodying the policy contained in this act. I think it is extremely important to limit the President in general to the powers which he had during the last war, until we have at least had more time to examine the new powers requested more closely. That is what this bill does in respect to the titles of the bill other than those relating to rationing, price control, and wage control. These latter are in general based on provisions in laws used for similar purposes during World War II.

I hope gentlemen will give it their consideration, and I certainly urge its adoption as being much better fitted to meet the situation than the administration substitute, both in regard to taking care of the consumer and also in regard to keeping under some kind of control the powers granted to the President, giving him enough control to take care of every need that he may have for war and security purposes but at the same time keping a check-rein on those powers in the hands of the Congress.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. I have not read the bill completely, but I wonder whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania could inform me if this measure provides any ceilings on profits.

Mr. KUNKEL. No, the ceilings on profits should come under an excess-profits tax, which could be acted on in the present tax bill if it were adjusted in that way. I do not know the status exactly of the tax bill, but certainly the way excess profits have always been taken care of in the past is through tax legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRISON. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that it was the purpose of his bill to require the imposition of ceilings on wages if they were also imposed on prices?

Mr. KUNKEL. They should all be imposed simultaneously. I should like to read the gentleman what is contained in the declaration of policy of the act.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that under section 204 power is given to the Administrator to exempt wages? That is carried out under 205, and under 206 ceilings may be placed on prices below the cost of production and the ceilings on wages may be raised to any figure desired.

Mr. KUNKEL. That is not the intent of that section.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that not the language of it?

Mr. KUNKEL. No. In the first place I do not think that you want to have any bill with controls for the sake of having controls.

Mr. HARRISON. That is correct.

Mr. KUNKEL. And you certainly want to look forward even in the war emergency to a time when the Administrator or the President will decide that he will control in a certain field but that it may be unnecessary to control in another field. However, that may be true of areas or sections of the country.

Mr. HARRISON. Then under the gentleman's bill the President could control wages. Is that not correct?

Mr. KUNKEL. In my judgment, taken in connection with the policy declaration which is very specific, I think the intent of that language is to just give him that authority with certain limitation, perhaps eliminating certain articles or certain areas and that it could not be taken to mean a general exemption of wages while imposing ceilings on goods and services because the policy direction is clear and specific on that point.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE, as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL. Strike out all of the amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL and insert the following:

"That this act, divided into titles, may be cited as the 'Defense Production Act of 1950.'

"TABLE OF CONTENTS

"Title I. Priorities and allocations.
"Title II. Authority to requisition.
"Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
"Title IV. Price and wage stabilization.
"Title V. Settlement of labor disputes.
"Title VI. Control of credit.
"Title VII. General provisions.

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

"It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

"TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

"SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

"SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

"SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

"TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

"SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

"(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guaranteeing and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guaranty made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

"(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section, shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guaranty and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guaranties.

"(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

"SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guaranties of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

"SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

"(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made, without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

"(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

"SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

"(b) Any corporation created under this section—

"(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

"(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

"(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

"(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

"(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

"TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide stand-by authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense; to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from under impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interference with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of the Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised, so far as practicable, in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

"SEC. 402. (a) Whenever the President shall find it necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title he may issue regulations or orders—

"(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery or, the purchase or receipt, by or to any person of any material or service: Provided, That the term "rental" as used in this title shall not include the lease or rental of real property.

"(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on any salary, wage, or other compensation paid to or received by any person, for any type of employment. Such ceilings shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred except as provided in section 402 (e).

"(b) The President may designate the materials, services, or types of employment to which specified ceilings will apply or he may prescribe a general ceiling for all materials, or services, or for all types of employment. So far as practicable, in establishing any ceiling, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to salaries, wages, or other compensations, prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. In establishing price or wage ceilings the President shall give due considerations to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or persons performing such services, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In determining and adjusting ceilings on salaries, wages, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such salaries, wages, or other compensation. Any regulation or order establishing a ceiling or ceilings shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

"(c) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials, or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials, or services, or transactions, or types of employment, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Where the President so exempts transportation, communication, or public utility services, he may intervene in a proceeding involving the charge for such service in order to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(d) Regulations or orders under this section may be established in such form and manner, may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions, and may contain such requirements, classifications, and differentiations, and such provisions, including provisions relating to types of employment, and quality, speculation, hoarding, standardization, manipulation, simplification, and production by a manufacturer of a required percentage of the less expensive items of his line, and definitions as in the judgment of the President are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or facilitate enforcement, of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

"(e) (1) The ceiling applicable in respect of any salary, wage, or other compensation shall not be less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to salaries, wages, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1942, as amended, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(2) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or (ii) the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified above. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such fresh fruit or fresh vegetables. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act.

"SEC. 403. It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade, to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 405. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform services.

"SEC. 406. At any time prior to 6 months from the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within 6 months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That, upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittee thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provisions against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"SEC. 407. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within thirty days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest of such evidence and shall be continued in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on the request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of the thirty days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such thirty days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of this title, and the powers heretofore granted by law to the Emergency Court of Appeals are hereby continued for purposes of exercises of the jurisdiction granted by this title.

"(d) Within thirty days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"SEC. 408. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 403 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provisions, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 403 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"(c) If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such commodity for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within 1 year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"(d) (1) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title and to assure compliance with and provide for the effective enforcement of any regulation or order issued or which may be issued under this title, he may by regulation or order issue to or require of any person or persons subject to any regulation or order issued under this title, a license as a condition of selling any commodity or commodities with respect to which such regulation or order is applicable. It shall not be necessary for the President to issue a separate license for each commodity or for each regulation or order with respect to which a license is required. No such license shall contain any provision which could not be prescribed by regulation, order, or requirement under this title: Provided, That no such license may be required as a condition of selling or distributing (except as waste or scrap) newspapers, periodicals, books, or other printed or written material, or motion pictures, or as a condition of selling radio time: Provided further, That no license may be required of any farmer as a condition of selling any agricultural commodity produced by him, and no license may be required of any fisherman as a condition of selling any fishery commodity caught or taken by him: Provided further, That in any case in which such a license is required of any person, the President shall not have power to deny to such person a license to sell any commodity or commodities, unless such person already has such a license to sell such commodity or commodities, or unless there is in effect under paragraph (2) of this subsection with respect to such person an order of suspension of a previous license to the extent that such previous license authorized such person to sell such commodity or commodities.

"(2) Whenever in the judgment of the President a person has violated any of the provisions of a license issued under this subsection, or has violated any of the provisions of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title, which is applicable to such person, a warning notice shall be sent by registered mail to such person. If the President has reason to believe that such person has again violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after receipt of such warning notice, the President may petition any State or Territorial court of competent jurisdiction, or a district court subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, for an order suspending the license of such person for any period of not more than 12 months. If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under this title is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than 12 months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed. If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under this title is applicable; but no such suspension shall be for a period of more than 12 months. For the purposes of this subsection, any such proceedings for the suspension of a license may be brought in a district court if the licensee is doing business in more than one State, or if his gross sales exceed $100,000 per annum. Within 30 days after the entry of the judgment or order of any court either suspending a license, or dismissing or denying in whole or in part the President's petition for suspension, an appeal may be taken from such judgment or order in like manner as an appeal may be taken in other cases from a judgment or order of a State, Territorial, or district court, as the case may be. Upon good cause shown, any such order of suspension may be stayed by the appropriate court or any judge thereof in accordance with the applicable practice; and upon written stipulation of the parties to the proceeding for suspension, approved by the trial court, any such order of suspension may be modified, and the license which has been suspended may be restored, upon such terms and conditions as such court shall find reasonable. Any such order of suspension shall be affirmed by the appropriate appellate court if, under the applicable rules of law, the evidence in the record supports a finding that there has been a violation of any provision of such license, and no such suspension shall confer after receipt of such warning notice. No proceedings for suspension of a license, and no such suspension, shall confer any immunity from any other provision of this title.

"TITLE V—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

"SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

"SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

"TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CREDIT

"SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

"SEC. 601. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

"(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

"(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

"(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

"(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

"(1) 'Consumer credit' means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

"(2) 'Real estate credit' means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term 'real property' includes leasehold and other interests therein.

"(3) 'Credit' means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

"(4) 'Person', in addition to the definition given it by section 702 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmenal agency or instrumentality.

"SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

"SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

"SEC. 611. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"'(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the speculative purchase or speculative sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a speculative position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this act: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall be applicable to bona fide hedging transactions.

"'(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"'(C) All money, securities, or properly deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term "contract market", as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"'(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of 3 years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"'(E) For the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term "commodity" shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this act, any other agricultural or forest product or byproduct.

"'(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"'(G) Sections 4a and 4i of this act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term "contract market" as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade.'

"TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

"(b) In order to carry out this policy—

"(i) The President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

"(ii) Such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

"(iii) In administering this act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

"(iv) In administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

"SEC. 702. As used in this act—

"(a) The word 'person' shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

"(b) The word 'materials' shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"SEC. 703. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court.

"SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Any regulation or order under this act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises of property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

"(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

"(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 706. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or such section, or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this act.

"SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

"SEC. 708. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

"(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

"(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

"SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

"SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the general schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

"(c) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99).

"SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

"SEC. 712. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 713. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the substitute amendment be dispensed with, since printed copies of it are available to the membership.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency whether in substance the substitute which he has offered contains the language of the bill H. R. 9280, introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. SPENCE. No; it is not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I then propound another inquiry: With the exception, as I understand it, of the addition of price controls, wage controls, and rationing, does the bill differ from the bill as reported out of the committee?

Mr. SPENCE. The bill as reported out of committee is contained in this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And in addition to that, what else is contained in it?

Mr. SPENCE. Plus rationing, price controls, wage controls, and a provision for the settlement of labor disputes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal of confusion incident to these three proposals, and inasmuch as we have had absolutely no opportunity, and as a matter of fact, I do not now have a copy of this amendment which is being offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Kentucky, which I had assumed was along the line of the DEANE bill, and which I was following down to the point where the gentleman asked unanimous consent to dispense with further reading of the amendment, it is almost identical with the Deane bill. We have the Deane bill before us and if the substitute amendment were the Deane bill, we might not have to have it read. But if it differs from the Deane bill and inasmuch as we have not been furnished with a copy of the substitute amendment, and will have no opportunity whatsoever to mark the bill up while it is being read, then perhaps we should give more consideration to having it read so that we will know what it is about.

Mr. SPENCE. The only differences between this bill and the Deane bill are titles IV and V.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, it now appears that the statement I made yesterday during the debate that there would very likely be a Spence substitute was correct, since that has now come to pass. I cannot help but comment on the very obvious fact that we find ourselves indeed in a deplorable situation. Here is a completely new bill in many of its titles that we will be called upon to act today. No one has had a chance to see it. Certainly it should be open for amendment, and undoubtedly should be amended in many particulars. But under this sort of procedure, what fair chance does the House of Representatives have to find out what is in the bill and to prepare amendments to the bill and to offer them? Under the mechanics and under the parliamentary situation, the vote will come finally on the substitute which is offered against the pending substitute, and if this substitute is adopted——

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, who has the floor?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have yielded to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has the floor, under reservation of objection.

Mr. HALLECK. And the gentleman has yielded to me, so at the moment I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HALLECK. If I may proceed, under the parliamentary situation, the vote will come on this substitute that is presently being offered as a substitute for the Kunkel substitute, and if it is adopted there will be no further opportunity to amend it. If I am in error in that, I ask to be corrected. However, I know I am right about it. In other words, we must immediately start to the amending stage of the substitute that is here presented, and I say that is a poor way to legislate. If the administration leaders in the executive branch and here in the House of Representatives intended to have this sort of bill, they should have had it before us so that we might have looked at it and legislated fairly and honestly and decently for the best interests of the country.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I object. I want time to read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. After the substitute, can there be any amendment offered to the Spence substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. There can be. One amendment could be offered.

The Clerk will continue reading the amendment.

The Clerk continued the reading of the substitute.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the substitute). Mr. Chairman, I am afraid from the debate that some of the gentlemen do not understand that this bill has been printed. This substitute is available to all Members. We have it on our desk and there are some over at the Clerk's desk. The Members may obtain printed copies of this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the substitute be dispensed with, with the exception of titles IV and V.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have just been handed what purports to be a committee print which I asume the Clerk is reading; is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the committee ever met and authorized this committee print?

Mr. SPENCE. Well, I do not think the committee ever met and authorized the committee print.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. Further reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that this is the first intimation we have had that the gentleman was going to introduce a substitute. I think we had a right to assume from the statements made yesterday that the bill as reported out of the committee was going to be the gentleman's position. I do not think it is hardly in keeping with good parliamentary procedure to try to take us as much by surprise as you have done this morning. If we had even the substance of this proposal last night we might be in position to save a lot of time on this bill today.

Mr. SPENCE. We have a very illustrious precedent, even if we did not give the other side any notice, because the Kunkel amendment to the bill was considered in the committee. It was offered without anybody having any notice of it, without anybody having any knowledge of its provisions. If we are going to follow precedent, we have a much stronger precedent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In answer to that, may I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the committee did not adopt the Kunkel amendment, perhaps for the reason that the gentleman has stated; so the gentleman has justified the position which we take. We want to find out what is in this before we vote on it. This Kunkel amendment was offered in committee, it was fair in the committee and it was fair in the House to offer the amendment last night in order that all of the Members might know what is in the amendment. I think the gentleman should have done likewise.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the situation that confronts us in this Congress and in the world is one that should require serious consideration of every proposal under the circumstances. I would like to give it my serious consideration and because I have not had time to look at this proposal that is now pending and being read, I object to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk continued the reading of the substitute.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota (interrupting reading of the substitute). Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that when a substitute is pending, and the Kunkel amendment was offered in the nature of a substitute, a second substitute may not be considered until the first substitute is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule under which this bill is being considered, the committee amendment printed in the bill is being considered as an original bill; therefore, it was in order to offer an amendment to that original bill. This is a substitute for the Kunkel amendment. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Was not the Kunkel amendment offered in the nature of a substitute, it having been an amendment to strike out the original Spence bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That was an original amendment and it was in order to offer a substitute, which was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANFIELD. Where can a copy of the report on this substitute be obtained?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair assumes the gentleman may obtain them where they are usually obtained.

The Clerk continued the reading of the substitute.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that the amendment violates the provisions of section 4 of rule 21, which I should like to read:

No bill or joint resolution carrying appropriations shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report appropriations, nor shall an amendment proposing an appropriation be in order during the consideration of a bill or joint resolution reported by a committee not having that jurisdiction. A question of order on an appropriation in any such bill, joint resolution, or amendment thereto may be raised at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York point out the specific language in the bill to which he objects?

Mr. TABER. I call the Chair's attention to page 7, lines 18 to 23:

(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

Page 11, lines 1 to 10:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

Page 48, lines 8 to 14:

Funds made available for the purposes of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

Every one of those items that I have referred to constitute an appropriation, and every one of them is in violation of the provisions of clause 4 rule XXI.

This whole question was thoroughly covered at the time the first bill for the reorganization of the Government was up for consideration and a point of order was sustained. Unless the Chair desires some further information, that presents the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I may say there was the same provision in the housing bill considered last year. A point of order was raised with respect to the public debt transactions and the point of order was overruled in that instance.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the point of order was raised in connection with consideration of the housing bill with respect to language similar to that which appears on page 11 dealing with public debt transactions. Having made the point of order I remember rather regretfully that the point of order was not sustained. However, what may have applied to that would not apply to the language appearing on page 7.

The paragraph cited by the gentleman from New York on page 7 is purely a reappropriation. The language reads:

Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it.

Right at that point, that is clearly a reappropriation.

On page 71 of Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives, there are several precedents cited on this point. For example under "What Constitutes an Appropriation Under the Rule," there is the following:

Legislative direction that funds previously appropriated be used for a purpose not specified in the original appropriation (VIII, 2147).

Further:

Proposition to reappropriate or make available appropriations or parts of appropriations previously made or to divert such appropriation to any other urpose than that for which originally made.

Precedent cited: VII, 2146.

Clearly the language there used in lines 19 and 20 making available funds heretofore appropriated, constitutes a reappropriation and as such is a violation of the rules.

Mr. SPENCE. I would like to inquire if the gentleman's point of order is made against that language.

Mr. TABER. The point of order is made to the entire substitute.

Mr. SPENCE. I intend to make the same point of order against the Kunkel amendment.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

Mr. Chairman, with reference to the comments made by the gentleman from South Dakota about an appropriation, I think the language in line 11 must be read in connection with the words "to it" in line 21. As I understood the gentleman's point, he indicated this would be perhaps a new appropriation, but if it is read in connection with that language it is not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is the fact that it is a reappropriation of funds appropriated for other purposes, and a proposal to appropriate for a purpose not contained in the original amendment.

Mr. FURCOLO. If you take into account the words "to it" that changes it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in connection with that portion of the point of order which relates to page 11 and the point of order on page 48, I remember well when that question was raised last year in the Housing Act, because I participated in the discussion that took place at that time. The question then involved was squarely the same one, as I remember, that is involved on page 11. At that time it was ruled, and in my opinion properly so, that it was not an appropriation on an authorization bill, or an appropriation in connection with any kind of organic legislation in the bill pending at that time.

It seems to me that the provision on page 48, included in the point of order raised by my friend from New York, relates back to page 11, and it is very clear that those portions of his point of order have been passed upon before.

It seems to me that those two parts of his points of order are not the meat of his point of order, and that the provision on page 11 and the provision on page 48 are clearly in order and germane in a bill of this kind.

So far as page 7 is concerned, lines 18 to 23, which read "Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense" seems to me to be the meat of the situation and not the other parts of the points of order raised by my distinguished friend from New York.

Therefore, the question is whether or not the language appearing in lines 18 to 23 constitutes an appropriation on a legislative bill. I am frank in stating that it is a very close decision as far as that provision is concerned, but as far as the other two provisions are concerned, it is very plain and very apparent to me that the point of order would not lie.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SMITH of Virginia.) The Chair is ready to rule.

With respect to the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York against the language on page 48 of the bill, section 711, that language reads, "There are hereby authorized to be appropriated." No funds are appropriated under that section, but there is a provision for the allocation of funds which may in the future be authorized and appropriated. For that reason, the Chair is of the opinion that that point of order should be overruled, and does overrule it.

With respect to the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York to the language on page 11, lines 1 to 10, the Chair finds that the identical language has already been ruled upon in the consideration of the Housing Act of 1949, H. R. 4009. Chairman BOGGS on June 27, 1949, RECORD page 8538, overruled the point of order as to that language, and the present occupant of the chair sustains that rule.

As to the language on page 7, lines 18 to 23, against which a point of order was raised, the Chair is of the opinion that the language there does constitute an appropriation in violation of the rule cited by the gentleman from New York, and accordingly sustains the point of order against the amendment on account of that objectionable language.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment with that objectionable language stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose as soon as the gentleman from Kentucky has been recognized on the amendment and it is in order, to move that the Committee rise, in order that we may have an opportunity to study this in the light of the changes which have obviously been made. I call attention to the fact also that on one page of the amendment he is now offering he has left out at least five lines. We surely do not want to legislate in that respect. So I think that for the time being the amendment should be read, at least until someone has an opportunity to correct the very obvious language errors in the bill.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. If the Members of the House will look at page 31 of the Spence substitute, line 21, and compare that with the committee bill that is pending before us, they will discover that six lines have been dropped out in this committee bill.

I have heard of being presented with things that did not even have the ink dry, but if you rub your finger over this new substitute bill offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] you will find the ink is not even dry. Certainly if it is here under such careless circumstances that six lines have been dropped out so that now there are sentences in the bill which make no sense at all, we had better look at it before we begin legislating and doing something that no one knows how long we will have to live with.

No one wants to delay action on this important matter in any way, but at the same time we had better get this right and legislate as our responsibility dictates we should. I submit this is not the way to do it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a tmost unusual procedure. Of course the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has served notice that he intends to offer a motion that the Committee rise, and thereby take over control, so far as this is concerned, which is most unusual, because we never did that during the Eightieth Congress. However, that is his privilege. During the debate the amendment will be discussed and explained. There is not going to be any attempt to limit debate. I hope if such a motion is made that the Committee will not rise, and that we will proceed with the consideration of this bill.

The present situation arose, and we must be frank about it, as a result of certain Members offering mandatory price controls and wage and salary ceilings, and so forth, and apparently the source of those proposals are very much disturbed themselves, and they apparently do not know where they are at. They are very much divided. So far as I can see from my reading of the Kunkel bill, it has been revised on at least three occasions. Of course the gentleman has a perfect right to do that. The uncertainty is not on this side. The plain question here is as between the Kunkel substitute and the Committee substitute which we call the Committee bill, as amended by certain standby controls or authority granted to the President. That is the question.

As debate goes along, that could be brought out. It seems to me it will do no good for the Committee to rise, and I hope that the Committee will defeat any such motion.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, there is confusion. The speech just made by the distinguished majority leader demonstrates that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Demonstrates what?

Mr. MICHENER. That there is confusion on the floor.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not on our side, but on your side; that is where I said the confusion was. As a matter of fact, you are very much disturbed, from what I can see. You do not—well, I do not want to go too far, but you do not know just where you are. You are all divided.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes, that is true.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true? I am glad my friend admits that that is true.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. That is true. But the committee brought out a bill, and it was alleged by some when the bill was brought out that the committee was in confusion. Members of the committee said it was not in confusion, and that it understood thoroughly what we were doing. So we took up the committee bill and we had not proceeded but a few steps before there was confusion worse confounded on your side and on our side and on everybody's side.

In order to overcome some of that confusion there was brought in another bill, the Spence substitute, which is entirely different, which again compounds the confusion, and we are certainly in a state of general confusion right now. The committee bill, the Kunkel substitute, and now the Spence substitute, which we have never seen or read.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not admit that all of the House is in confusion. I can see that most, but not all; but most of your side is in confusion.

Mr. MICHENER. I will admit I am confused. If the gentleman is not, he must have looked at a crystal ball——

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, now, now. My friend is too generous. I cannot accept his generosity.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not mean to impugn any——

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course not, but a little flattery or a little facetiousness, you know.

Mr. MICHENER. But we are confronted with a condition and not with a theory. The gentleman is quite right parliamentarily when he appeals to his majority colleagues not to permit the motion of the gentleman on the Republican side that the Committee rise to prevail, because that loses leadership on the part of the party in power. Under those circumstances—granting that we are all confused and that 24 hours might save the Nation a whole lot of trouble and confusion—why does the gentleman not ask unanimous consent that this matter be put over until tomorrow, so that we all may read the bill that we are going to be asked to vote upon, and so that all of us who are confused will have some little idea of what it is all about? It seems to me that that is the common-sense method of legislating. That is all I want.

I hope to go along with a bill agreed upon by the House; but I do think the gentleman would render a service if he came out and said, "We do not thoroughly understand, and therefore we want to do the thing right."

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the confusion is so much and so confounded, does not the gentleman think that we should at least take the remainder of today and, if necessary, all of tomorrow, in debating this thing, to see if we cannot get unconfounded?

Mr. MICHENER. My answer to that is this: There are 48 pages in this bill that no one has read. The ink is not dry on it. The Speaker remembers well in days gone by when the House passed bills without even reading them. They were just brought in and the House told that, "This is an emergency and the bill must be passed," and the House not even permitted to read it, or to know what was in it. The Supreme Court declared the WRA unconstitutional. Possibly it would not have done that had the House had an opportunity to read the bill and know something about it.

Now, I appeal to the Speaker: You have the power and you have the votes. We are in the minority. We have had these fights in days gone by, but let us be fair and let us be generous and let us act in behalf of all of the people and not in a partisan manner between the Republicans and Democrats. Let us adjourn so that we may read this bill through and come back in the morning and pass a bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Michigan served notice of his motion. This procedure is well understood in this House. The gentleman served notice, and the first I knew, as majority leader, of any intention was when he served that notice. He did not have to do that, but I know this much, that I would feel very much distressed if the ranking minority member of a committee in the Eightieth Congress did not let the leadership on the other side know of such an intention.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will yield in a minute. My friend from Michigan, whom I respect very much, I deeply respect him—there is nothing at all political about my position, but all I am seeking is to proceed in an orderly way, as we have always done. It seems to me if we proceed with the debate, and there will be no attempt made to close debate, because we all recognize it is a very important matter; the Kunkel amendment and the substitute, of which there are about 19 pages of new matter, can be considered, explained, and the Members will come to understand what is in there far better. As far as the bill is concerned, it seems to me that we ought to approach this to get it through after proper debate as quickly as we can because it is a measure of great importance.

Mr. MICHENER. There is no question about that.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly we should meet it head-on; we should go ahead and debate the amendment and study it as we go along.

Mr. MICHENER. But there are some of us who would like to read the bill and know what we are debating. Now, if we must sit here and listen to debate about something that we have never read, about which we have no knowledge, I say it is wrong parliamentarily, and it is wrong morally.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. We talk about debate, we are now in debate under the 5-minute rule; we are now at the amendment stage. General debate has expired.

In respect to this substitute, I take it that the Spence substitute is offered with the idea that it will be supported on the majority side and will become the law of the land subject to action in the other body; so it is not a matter of debate; we are here now working under the 5-minute rule in the amendment stage on a proposal of far-reaching consequence. I may say to the gentleman that I have read the bill through as hastily as I could.

Mr. McCORMACK. Not as far-reaching as the Kunkel substitute, not as far-reaching as that.

Mr. HALLECK. May I say also in respect to the matter of confusion that the majority leader is more than a little confused, as confused as everybody else, specifically on the subject of mandatory controls, and the chairman of the committee himself is a little confused when he states that the provisions of the bill that dealt with that, and the provision contained in the committee bill presently before us are the same in this substitute. The fact of the business is they are not. You will find place after place where there are changes in the provisions of the bill as reported.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman cite instances?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes. I daresay there is not a member of the committee on the Democratic side who knows that is in this substitute.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. It ought to be perfectly apparent to everyone that this House at the moment is not in position to act intelligently on any sort of proposal that may be now pending. This being so I wonder if the gentleman from Michigan would not yield to someone on the majority side to move that the Committee rise until tomorrow? I wish to say that it is just as much the responsibility of a Member of the minority to get good legislation as it is the responsibility of a Member of the majority to get good legislation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is our desire that we should.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I thoroughly understand this confusion. The gentleman knows that I am for the original bill because that is what our war leaders want now, and I think we ought to take that bill up, amend it, and then meet tomorrow and take up the control of prices and wages and work out a good bill. I think that would be the satisfactory thing to do.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. If the majority leader will submit a unanimous consent request in behalf of good legislation it would take the place of any motion and I am sure no one will object.

Mr. RAYBURN. What motion?

Mr. McCORMACK. What was the gentleman's request?

Mr. MICHENER. My suggestion is that the majority leader acting in his usual wise way and fair way, will recognize that the condition is such, and as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, we are in no mood to legislate. God knows I want to do the right thing; the same is true of other Members. We should know what we were voting on. We should at least have an opportunity to read the bill before we are asked to vote on it.

If the majority leader will ask unanimous consent, he will not lose anything politically, he will still control the House, and we will go along with him.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I believe we are working on probably the most difficult bill that will ever face the Eighty-first Congress. I have had some experience in price-control legislation; I know what the change of one or two words in a price control could mean to blotting out an entire industry. My record on price control is pretty good. I was one of the 87 who went along with the original Baruch price control bill, when it was offered in 1941 by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Hon. ALBERT GORE]. I believe perhaps by good committee action we can work out the right kind of a bill. I am inclined to believe we need stronger controls over prices and wages, and ought to pass something at least in a standby way.

But we have not had a chance to have hearings on this important phase of legislation on over-all controls or the langauge that goes into an over-all control. We have before us a bill, an original bill that was reported by the committee 20 to 1, to give the President emergency credit control provisions that he says he needs to stop speculative rises in the market. Any inflation control legislation requires credit controls. In other words, it calls out one company of the fire department. Now, let us give to the President these credit controls now so that one company can be called out to work on the fire that is burning today and let the Committee on Banking and Currency tomorrow start adequate hearings to know where we are going and what language is needed in order to get a decent over-all price control bill.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the situation we are faced with here would indicate that there is wisdom in the amendment that I intend to offer. This amendment provides for a general temporary freezing as of the period between June 10 and 25. This would give time to permit everyone to think through the needs and evaluate the controls we all know may be required for years to come. To act with the unseemly haste now expected of us is unthinkable. Certainly the country has the right to expect this House to use more judgment than is being demonstrated here at the moment. Were we to freeze everything for a temporary period, opportunity would be there for sanity and calm consideration of what is best for this country.

Mr. Chairman, as I said late yesterday, our action on this bill and the various substitutes offered is of vital moment not only to ourselves, but also to the future of this free country and because of her position of leadership among the nations, to the fate of mankind. I would urge upon this committee the wisdom to so rewrite the legislation that a temporary freezing straight across all boards may take place, that during the time needed by the President to make decisions relative to the use of such power as may be given him, there may be an end to the spiralling of prices that has already begun.

Mr. JENSEN. I want to say that I am in complete harmony with the thinking of the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is just a little illustration of why the process of screening through the leadership of both parties is of great importance, and custom has shown its value. My friend from Michigan served notice, which was the first we knew. There is no criticism. He is within his rights. But if the leadership on your side had conferred with us, that is one thing. There is one thing that the leadership, no matter who they are, in control of this body always falls over backward to do; it is to preserve the rights of the minority. That is vitally important in a democracy, no matter what party may be in control. In the Eightieth Congress your leadership did it for us. But it is a question of the leadership having a meeting of the minds.

I might state to the committee that we have had a little conference here on the floor and we have agreed to proceed with the debate under the 5-minute rule, but there will be no votes. For all practical purposes this afternoon will be devoted to general debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There will be no vote on any single amendment?

Mr. McCORMACK. No vote on any substitute or any amendment thereto. The debate will go on this afternoon and we will proceed tomorrow. This accomplishes everything desired and we can proceed with debate, which is very vital and important.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I say to the gentlema I did not take the time, even had I had the opportunity, to explain my reason for giving notice that a motion would be made that the committee rise. But I had in mind exactly what has been going on here right now. I think that the gentleman is always fair and he appreciates that the motion would have been predicated upon a desire to study the bill and to more fully understand it. I think the gentleman's solution of it is a correct one to make. It does not make any difference to me whether I study it here on the floor or whether I take it back to my office and study it, so long as I study it. Perhaps more information can be obtained if we remain here and have general debate than if the Committee rises and work it out by ourselves. I am in agreement that that should be done with the understanding, of course, within the parliamentary procedure, that amendments may be offered and points of order may be made, points of order discussed, and so forth, but that no action shall be taken on any amendment today.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is understood. I have stated that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And that in general we can debate anything within the purview of the legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. We are under the 5-minute rule, but for all practical purposes it is general debate. There will be no vote. Of course, if there is an amendment offered to either the amendment or the substitute to which any Member feels a point of order lies, he has to make it to protect his rights.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And those amendments will then be printed in the RECORD and voted on tomorrow.

Mr. McCORMACK. There will be no votes on them today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And this is not to prejudice the offering of any further amendments tomorrow?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course not.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does that mean then that we may have amendments in the third degree, or more than one amendment?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is my understanding that amendments will be offered in conformity with parliamentary rules.

Mr. McCORMACK. If any Member wants to offer an amendment which is germane and permissible under the rules, he can offer it, discuss it, but it is not going to be voted upon today.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, we expect that all debate is going to be germane to the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then an amendment can be offered either to the original Kunkel amendment or the Spence substitute?

Mr. McCORMACK. If a Member is going to offer an amendment to the Kunkel amendment or the Spence substitute, we will wait until tomorrow for a vote, because we have agreed there will be no vote today. That is the practical situation.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I just wanted to make the suggestion or express the hope that as we go into the debate this afternoon surely some of the Members on the majority side, who presumably have had something to do with preparing this new substitute, and who are supposed to know what is in it, will explain what some of the language in that substitute means.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the purpose of the debate, of course.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, one thing that the gentleman said in his statement that I could not quite agree with, and perhaps I misunderstood him, was that a point of order, if not made against an amendment offered this afternoon, would then be lost.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts has no control over that. The rules of the House govern, and if any Member offers an amendment, that is not going to be voted upon, that is the understanding. But, we cannot stop a Member from offering an amendment if it is in order, and if some other Member thinks a point of order lies, it is his duty to make it then. In practical operation, it seems to me no Member will offer an amendment to either the amendment or the substitute until tomorrow, with this understanding.

Mr. KUNKEL. I wanted to bring that point out so that the Members who are not here will know that that is the situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Only one amendment can be offered to either the amendment or the substitute now without getting into the third degree. Any Member may ask to have printed in the RECORD an amendment he intends to offer tomorrow, but I understand only one amendment can be offered to the Kunkel amendment, and only one amendment offered to the Spence substitute that would be germane, that would be permissive under the rules. So it is not a question of the right of an amendment being offered, because there can only be one offered to each one.

Mr. KUNKEL. One to each bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, it seems to me we will be more confused. I just picture the Chairman tomorrow when there will be more confusion. If I understand the gentleman correctly, we are going to talk here today—just talk. We are going to be able to offer amendments but we cannot vote on them. We will come in tomorrow and have all those amendments on the desk and have to start all over again. We will have to read each one of them and we will have to have an explanation on each as to what it is. The gentleman may say, "That is not necessary; oh, no. We can just do it the other way." But that is not practical.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend is too experienced a parliamentarian not to know that having amendments on the desk is one thing and the actual offering of amendments is quite another thing. An amendment may be on the Clerk's desk, but it is not offered until a Member is recognized to offer it and does offer it.

Mr. MICHENER. No amendments are going to be offered, today?

Mr. McCORMACK. I know of no Member that is going to offer an amendment today, but only two amendments could be offered, if Members did want to offer them.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It seems to me that what the distinguished majority leader is suggesting is that the Chair not put to a vote either of the two amendments which would now be in order; that is, there would now be in order an amendment to the Kunkel amendment and an amendment to the Spence substitute. What the gentleman is saying is that the Chair is not going to put either of those amendments, if offered, to a vote today, so that the only other amendments that would be in order thereafter would be pro forma amendments.

Mr. McCORMACK. In substance that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with?

There was no objection.

The Spence substitute for the Kunkel amendment is as follows:

Strike out all of the Kunkel amendment and insert the following:

"That this act, divided into titles, may be cited as the 'Defense Production Act of 1950'.

"TABLE OF CONTENTS

"Title I. Priorities and allocations.
"Title II. Authority to requisition.
"Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
"Title IV. Price and wage stabilization.
"Title V. Settlement of labor disputes.
"Title VI. Control of credit.
"Title VII. General provisions.

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

"It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

"TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

"SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

"SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

"SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

"TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

"SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as "guaranteeing agencies"), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

"(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guaranty and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guaranty made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

"(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guaranty and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guaranties.

"(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

"SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for loans (including participation in, or guaranties of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

"SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

"(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

"(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

"SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

"(b) Any corporation created under this section—

"(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

"(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

"(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

"(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

"(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

"TITLE IV—PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SEC. 401. It is the intent of Congress to provide stand-by authority necessary to achieve the following purposes in order to promote the national defense; to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency; to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. It is the intent of the Congress that the authority conferred by this title shall be exercised, so far as practicable, in accordance with the policies set forth in section 2 of this act, and in particular with full consideration and emphasis, so far as practicable, on the maintenance and furtherance of the American system of competitive enterprise, including independent small-business enterprises, the maintenance and furtherance of a sound agricultural industry, the maintenance and furtherance of sound working relations, including collective bargaining, and the maintenance and furtherance of the American way of life. Whenever the authority granted by this title is exercised, all agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes.

"SEC. 402. (a) Whenever the President shall find it necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title he may issue regulations or orders—

"(1) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery or, the purchase or receipt, by or to any person of any material or service: Provided, That the term 'rental' as used in this title shall not include the lease or rental of real property.

"(2) establishing a ceiling or ceilings on any salary, wage, or other compensation paid to or received by any person, for any type of employment. Such ceilings shall apply regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter incurred except as provided in section 402 (e).

"(b) The President may designate the materials, services, or types of employment to which specified ceilings will apply or he may prescribe a general ceiling for all materials, or services, or for all types of employment. So far as practicable, in establishing any ceiling, the President shall ascertain and give due consideration to comparable prices, rentals, commissions, margins, rates, fees, charges, and allowances, and to salaries, wages, or other compensations, prevailing during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. In establishing price or wage ceilings the President shall give due considerations to the national effort to achieve maximum production in furtherance of the objectives of this act. In determining and adjusting ceilings on prices with respect to materials and services he shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such material or service, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in cost of production, distribution, and transportation, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the material or persons performing such services, subsequent to June 24, 1950. In determining and adjusting ceilings on salaries, wages, or other compensation, the President shall give due consideration to such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such salaries, wages, or other compensation. Any regulation or order establishing a ceiling or ceilings shall be such as in the judgment of the President will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this title, and shall be accompanied by a statement of considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

"(c) The President, in or by any regulation or order, may provide exemptions for any materials, or services, or transactions therein, or types of employment, with respect to which he finds that (1) such exemption is necessary to promote the national defense; or (2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such materials, or services, or transactions, or types of employment, in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Where the President so exempts transportation, communication, or public utility services, he may intervene in a proceeding involving the charge for such service in order to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(d) Regulations or orders under this section may be established in such form and manner, may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions, and may contain such requirements, classifications, and differentiations, and such provisions, including provisions relating to types of employment, and quality, speculation, hoarding, standardization, manipulation, simplification, and production by a manufacturer of a required percentage of the less expensive items of his line, and definitions as in the judgment of the President are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or facilitate enforcement, of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

"(e) (1) The ceiling applicable in respect of any salary, wage, or other compensation shall not be less than that paid during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, inclusive. No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to salaries, wages, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1942, as amended, or any other law of the United States, or of any State, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

"(2) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) The parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or (ii) the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified above. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such fresh fruit or fresh vegetables. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act.

"SEC. 403. It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade, to buy or receive, any material or service, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"SEC. 404. In carrying out the provisions of this title, the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 405. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform services.

"SEC. 406. At any time prior to 6 month from the effective date of any regulation or order under this title, or, in the case of new grounds arising after the effective date of any such regulation or order, within 6 months after such new grounds arise, any person subject to any provision of such regulation or order may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the President, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the President. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this section, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the President shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the President denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this title the President may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 705 of title VII of this act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the President to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs: Provided, however, That upon the request of the protestant, any protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section shall, before denial in whole or in part, be considered by a board of review consisting of one or more officers or employees of the United States designated by the President in accordance with regulations to be promulgated by him. Such regulations shall provide that the board of review may conduct hearings and hold sessions in the District of Columbia or any other place, as a board, or by subcommittees thereof, and shall provide that, upon the request of the protestants and upon a showing that material facts would be adduced thereby, subpenas shall issue to procure the evidence of persons, or the production of documents, or both. The President shall cause to be presented to the board such evidence, including economic data, in the form of affidavits or otherwise, as he deems appropriate in support of the provision against which the protest is filed. The protestant shall be accorded an opportunity to present rebuttal evidence in writing and oral argument before the board and the board shall make written recommendations to the President. The protestant shall be informed of the recommendations of the board and, in the event that the President rejects such recommendations in whole or in part, shall be informed of the reasons for such rejection.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the President, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the President in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the President to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the President does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"SEC. 407. (a) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the President, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the President has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the President at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complaint in the protest of such evidence and shall be continued in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the President and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the President or included by the President in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the President. The President shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on the request by the President, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of the 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (d) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) The Emergency Court of Appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of this title, and the powers heretofore granted by law to the Emergency Court of Appeals are hereby continued for purposes of exercises of the jurisdiction granted by this title.

"(d) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this title authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"SEC. 408. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 403 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 403 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"(c) If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such commodity for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within 1 year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President, the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"(d) (1) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title and to assure compliance with and provide for the effective enforcement of any regulation or order issued or which may be issued under this title, he may by regulation or order issue to or require of any person or persons subject to any regulation or order issued under this title, a license as a condition of selling any commodity or commodities with respect to which such regulation or order is applicable. It shall not be necessary for the President to issue a separate license for each commodity or for each regulation or order with respect to which a license is required. No such license shall contain any provision which could not be prescribed by regulation, order, or requirement under this title: Provided, That no such license may be required as a condition of selling or distributing (except as waste or scrap) newspapers, periodicals, books, or other printed or written material, or motion pictures, or as a condition of selling radio time: Provided further, That no license may be required of any farmer as a condition of selling any agricultural commodity produced by him, and no license may be required of any fisherman as a condition of selling any fishery commodity caught or taken by him: Provided further, That in any case in which such a license is required of any person, the President shall not have power to deny to such person a license to sell any commodity or commodities, unless such person already has such a license to sell such commodity or commodities, or unless there is in effect under paragraph (2) of this subsection with respect to such person an order of suspension of a previous license to the extent that such previous license authorized such person to sell such commodity or commodities.

"(2) Whenever in the judgment of the President a person has violated any of the provisions of a license issued under this subsection, or has violated any of the provisions of any regulation, order, or requirement under this title, which is applicable to such person, a warning notice shall be sent by registered mail to such person. If the President has reason to believe that such person has again violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after receipt of such warning notice, the President may petition any State or Territorial court of competent jurisdiction, or a district court subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, for an order suspending the license of such person for any period of not more than 12 months. If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation has occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under this title is applicable; but no suspension shall be for a period of more than 12 months, and if the defendant proves that the violation in question was neither willful nor the result of failure to take practicable precautions against the occurrence of the violation, then in that event no suspension shall be ordered or directed. If any such court finds that such person has violated any of the provisions of such license, regulation, order, or requirement after the receipt of the warning notice, such court shall issue an order suspending the license to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell the commodity or commodities in connection with which the violation occurred, or to the extent that it authorizes such person to sell any commodity or commodities with respect to which a regulation or order issued under this title is applicable; but no such suspension shall be for a period of more than 12 months. For the purposes of this subsection, any such proceedings for the suspension of a license may be brought in a district court if the licensee is doing business in more than one State, or if his gross sales exceed $100,000 per annum. Within 30 days after the entry of the judgment or order of any court either suspending a license, or dismissing or denying in whole or in part the President's petition for suspension, an appeal may be taken from such judgment or order in like manner as an appeal may be taken in other cases from a judgment or order of a State, Territorial, or district court, as the case may be. Upon good cause shown, any such order of suspension may be stayed by the appropriate court or any judge thereof in accordance with the applicable practice; and upon written stipulation of the parties to the proceeding for suspension, approved by the trial court, any such order of suspension may be modified, and the license which has been suspended may be restored, upon such terms and conditions as such court shall find reasonable. Any such order of suspension shall be affirmed by the appropriate appellate court if, under the applicable rules of law, the evidence in the record supports a finding that there has been a violation of any provision of such license, and no such suspension, shall confer after receipt of such warning notice. No proceedings for suspension of a license, and no such suspension, shall confer any immunity from any other provision of this title.

"TITLE V—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

"SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

"SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

"SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

"TITLE VI—CONTROL OF CREDIT

"SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

"SEC. 601. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of our fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

"(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

"(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case or orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

"(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

"(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

"(1) 'Consumer credit' means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any such goods or any interest therein.

"(2) 'Real estate credit' means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constructing buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term "real property" includes leasehold and other interests therein.

"(3) 'Credit' means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; any purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

"(4) 'Person,' in addition to the definition given it by section 702 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

"SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

"SUBTITLE B—COMMODITY SPECULATION

"SEC. 611. The Commodity Exchange Act, as amended (42 Stat. 998; 49 Stat. 1491; 52 Stat. 205; 54 Stat. 1059), is further amended by inserting at the end of section 4a the following:

"'(5) (A) Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on boards of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations governing the margin to be required with respect to the speculative purchase or speculative sale of any such commodity for future delivery, or the maintenance of a speculative position resulting from such purchase or sale, on or subject to the rules of any board of trade, whether or not designated as a contract market under section 5 of this act: Provided, That no such rule or regulation shall be applicable to bona fide hedging transactions.

"'(B) It shall be unlawful for any person to buy or sell, or accept orders for the purchase or sale of any such commodity for future delivery, subject to the rules of any board of trade, or maintain or carry a position resulting from such purchase or sale, unless margin funds or securities are deposited and maintained in compliance with the rules and regulations promulgated under this paragraph (5). No floor broker shall be deemed to have violated this paragraph (5) with respect to any transaction in connection with which he has acted solely in the capacity of floor broker.

"'(C) All money, securities, or property deposited as margin shall be handled by the person receiving such margin in compliance with the requirements of section 4d (2), regardless of whether such person is a futures commission merchant as defined in this act and, for the purpose of this provision, the term "contract market," as used in section 4d (2), shall be deemed to mean board of trade.

"'(D) It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in soliciting or accepting orders for the purchase or sale of any commodity for future delivery on any board of trade, whether or not such board of trade is designated as a contract market, unless such person shall keep a record in writing showing the date, the parties to such contracts and their addresses, the commodity covered and its price, the terms of delivery, and the amount and kind of margin deposited. Such record shall be kept for a period of 3 years from the date of the transaction and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of any agency of the United States designated for the purpose by the President.

"'(E) For the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term "commodity" shall mean, in addition to those commodities specifically mentioned in section 2 (a) of this act, any other agricultural or forest product or by-product.

"'(F) For the efficient execution of the provisions of this paragraph (5), the provisions of section 21 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 899), as amended, are made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the President in administering and enforcing the provisions of this paragraph (5) and to any person subject thereto.

"'(G) Sections 4a and 4i of this act are extended and made applicable to any commodity as defined in (E) above, and for the purposes of this paragraph (5) the term "contract market" as used in sections 4a and 4i shall be deemed to mean Board of Trade.'

"TITLE VII—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 701. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

"(b) In order to carry out this policy—

"(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

"(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

"(iii) in administering this act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

"(iv) in administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

"SEC. 702. As used in this act—

"(a) The word 'person' shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

"(b) The word 'materials' shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"SEC. 703. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government, including any new agency or agencies, which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary, and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. The President is authorized to appoint heads and assistant heads of any such new agencies, and other officials therein of comparable status, and to fix the compensation therefor, without regard to the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, at rates comparable to the compensation paid to the heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the agency in any case in any court.

"SEC. 704. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Any regulation or order under this act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 705. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

"(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

"(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 706. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under this act to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this act or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or such section, or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this act.

"SEC. 707. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a rule, regulation, or order issued pursuant to this act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

"SEC. 708. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

"(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

"(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

"SEC. 709. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

"SEC. 710. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be additional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

"(c) The President may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize and establish such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of persons whose services are utilized under this subsection from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99).

"SEC. 711. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

"SEC. 712. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 713. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate at the close of June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Did I correctly understand the majority leader to say that we can offer only two amendments to the bill now under consideration—that is, the bill and the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment which is known as the Kunkel amendment and a substitute known as the Spence substitute. It would be in order only to have one amendment actually pending to either one of those amendments. Therefore, it will be in order to offer one amendment to either one of those two. They can be offered today, but I understand it to be the mutual agreement that they will not be voted on until tomorrow.

Mr. MANSFIELD. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is my understanding correct, then, that on the acceptance of either one of these two bills we will be able to offer amendments to the bill which has been acceped by the House?

The CHAIRMAN. No; they have to be perfected before the vote.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I intend to offer an amendment to the Spence substitute concerning the antitrust provisions, in pursuance of an urgent request made of me by the Attorney General. Will I be precluded from offering that amendment unless I place that amendment on the desk today, and will it be considered tomorrow?

The CHAIRMAN. Any amendment can be placed on the desk. An amendment placed on the desk will be called up when a gentleman arises and asks for recognition to offer it.

Mr. CELLER. So only one amendment, for example, to the Spence substitute can prevail at one time, and if that is voted down, another amendment can be offered?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the general rules of the House only one amendment can be pending to the Spence substitute.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JAVITS. Is it clear now that any number of perfecting amendments to either the Spence or Kunkel substitutes may be offered tomorrow, but only one today?

The CHAIRMAN. Only one may be offered.

Mr. JAVITS. One at a time?

The CHAIRMAN. One at a time. That is under the general rules of the House.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the chairman.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether it would be in order for the majority leader, if he desires to do so, in order to clear up all the confusion, to ask unanimous consent that the Committee proceed for the balance of the day as under general debate, with the time being equally divided between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. McCORMACK. May I state to my friend that we are in the Committee of the Whole, and I do not believe that can be done under the rules. That would be a matter coming under the jurisdiction of the House. If we go along the way we are, everything will be all right.

Under the rules, Members will be recognized for 5 minutes and they can ask for 5 minutes more time, and for all practical purposes it will be the same as general debate.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I presume that it is in the mind of the majority leader that the Chair will alternate between the two sides in recognizing Members.

Mr. McCORMACK. The majority leader would never undertake to invade the jurisdiction of the Committee of the Whole or the Chairman of the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair may be permitted to do so, the Chair will make this statement. For the balance of the afternoon the Chair will recognize Members under the general rules of the House, under the 5-minute rule, which is usually on a motion to strike out the last word. It is always customary to alternately recognize Members from the majority side and Members of the minority side.

If the gentlemen of the House will just have a little patience we will try to get along for the rest of the day.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, not only will we have patience, but we do have and will have complete confidence in the nonpartisanship of the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], in support of his amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read a letter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, from whom is the letter which the gentleman from Kentucky desires to have read?

Mr. SPENCE. From the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 1, 1950.

The Honorable BRENT SPENCE,
Chairman, House Committee on Banking and Currency, the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing you in response to your request for my views on the expressed desire of various Members of the House to add to the defense production bill (H. R. 9176) some kind of authority for direct controls over wages, prices, and the distribution of goods to consumers.

It is urgently necessary that the Congress act on the defense production bill without delay. If this measure is enacted promptly, we can do a great deal to ease the economic adjustments which our defense effort will require. At the same time, we can continue, on an expedited but careful basis, our planning and preparation for other economic controls, if and when needed.

Of course, there is no objection, in these circumstances, to enactment of additional stand-by control powers which the President could invoke when the need arose. Before my message of July 19, I gave careful thought to the desirability of asking at once for stand-by authority to control prices and wages, and to ration at the consumer level. I refrained from making this proposal to the Congress because it seemed more important to obtain quick action on the powers contained in the defense production bill. To have included a request for stand-by controls might, it seems to me, have dangerously delayed enactment of the immediate program, while the Congress considered these broader authorities. My recommendations of July 19, were designed to meet the problems immediately before us.

The Congress, in its judgment, may now want to make price, wage, and rationing controls available, on a stand-by basis, for use if and when needed. But if the Congress were to take this course, the following conditions appear essential.

First. These additional controls should be supplementary to, and not in lieu of, the basic powers already contained in the defense production bill. The production aids and limited controls for which I have asked, are essential now.

Second. We cannot afford to bog down or delay in enacting what is needed at once, and supplementary provisions should be added only if they do not prolong consideration or delay action in either House.

Third. Any provisions relating to prices and wages should not set up a rigid formula or freeze in advance of experience. If these powers are now made available in advance of widespread need, it is simple common sense that they must be written in a form which allows wide discretion and flexibility as to the method and place and timing of application.

Fourth. For the same reason, any grant of price and wage authority should leave open the question of the method of administration. This should remain flexible, because it cannot be separated from the question of the extent to which price and wage controls actually might have to be applied.

If these reasonable conditions can be met, I should have no objection to the granting of authority beyond that requested in my message of July 19. But if, for any reason, these conditions cannot be met, I urge strongly that the Congress move at once to enact the defense production bill without including these additional powers.

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY TRUMAN.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the methods that have been pursued by the committee and that we have not given the opposition the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the amendment that has been proposed.

I try to be fair with both sides, not because I think it will prevent me from being subject to criticism, but because of the satisfaction it gives me. I think we have been perfectly fair. There was some delay in drawing this substitute. As soon as it was in proper form we endeavored to have it printed so that every Member of the House might have a copy. That is in great contrast to the method that was pursued in the committee when an amendment was proposed without any notice and without any opportunity to read it.

I want fair and honest consideration of this bill. It is a bill that holds in itself much of the destiny of our country. It is a bill that might strengthen our economy and make us better able to fight, not only inflation, the insidious enemy at home, but the enemy that is attacking us on the battlefronts abroad.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. Not at the present time. I have only a few minutes.

We have tried to make the bill conform to the President's wishes in some respects. I think he should have respectful consideration by the House because he is charged with the duty of enforcing the provisions of this bill. He has said he did not want anything but the things that were contained in the original bill. He was even criticized for asking for those powers because they might make him a dictator; it was alleged they were powers that were not in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution.

I will tell you where the confusion has arisen. The confusion has arisen from the fact that the minority was determined to give him more powers than he wanted, undefined powers that nobody knew very much about when they were first proposed. That is what all the confusion has arisen about.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I have not time right now.

Mr. HALLECK. We will get the gentleman plenty of time.

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman says that the minority apparently brought about the confusion that is confronting us here today. In view of the fact that the Democrats have a majority of 90 or more in the House of Representatives why was the gentleman so concerned about what might have been the purposes or proposals of the minority?

Mr. SPENCE. The minority endeavored to give to the President more powers than he wanted. That was very confusing; that was just as confusing as the Greeks bearing gifts. After criticizing the President for wanting the powers he asked for, and after trying to whittle them away, then they attempted to give the President far more power than he asked for and more power than he wants now. The President has said that there are no shortages, yet they give him the power to ration. You do not ration plenty; you ration shortages; you ration scarcities. The President says there is no scarcity, yet you thrust upon him this power. He can use it if he wants to. He says he is not averse to taking these powers if they are stand-by powers.

The Kunkel bill freezes wages and salaries by act of Congress; it freezes them and provides penalties for violation, yet there is no machinery provided contemporaneously to take care of that problem.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I cannot yield all the time.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has made a reference to the Kunkel bill that just does not square up with the bill that is offered as a substitute.

Mr. SPENCE. Oh, no; it is not. The Kunkel bill is not the same as the bill offered as a substitute; the Kunkel bill as a matter of legislation freezes wages and salaries and provides penalties. The President has no option in that respect at all because it is done by legislative action.

Mr. HALLECK. As a matter of fact——

Mr. SPENCE. I do not yield further.

The Kunkel bill also fixes prices at the wholesale level, but it omits to fix them at the retail level, which are the prices the consumer is interested in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. PACE. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman if some member of the committee is going to explain the substitute?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes. We explained yesterday the provisions of the original bill. The substitute is very similar.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. COX. I should like to know if the gentleman is for his original bill or if he is for his substitute. Would it be agreeable to accept the original bill and then let the matters that are raised in these substitutes stand for further consideration by some committee?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; I have stated absolutely that it would be. Let us pass the original bill and have hearings on these other questions; that would be very satisfactory to me, and I said that. It is the exigencies of the occasion that have caused us to do what we have done today.

Mr. COX. I take it that that is the view that is entertained by my colleague and devoted friend from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], an influential member of the gentleman's committee.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes.

Mr. COX. In other words, I take it that the position of the gentleman is that he will accept what the President says he now needs, and that is set out in the gentleman's original bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes.

Mr. COX. But if the House, not being satisfied with the provisions of that bill, wants to delegate greater powers, then the gentleman asks that they consider the substitute that he has offered.

Mr. SPENCE. That is it. I think you can see what has arisen. We have a substitute offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], whose sincerity I do not question and for whom I have great respect and friendship.

He has offered his substitute. We felt because of that substitute having been offered that we should offer a substitute which would more nearly conform to the desires of the President with reference to the carrying out of the things that were delegated in that substitute. We felt they were not delegated in the proper way and we felt this was the proper way to give him these powers if they were to be given to him.

Mr. COX. I would not want my position to be misunderstood as a result of the questions I have propounded of the gentleman. I would like to say that the Kunkel substitute comes more nearly being what I think the Congress ought to do than any of the other substitutes.

Mr. SPENCE. I suspected that all along.

Mr. COX. That is right, because I want to be realistic. I know that under the gentleman's bill it is drawn with a view of making it possible that labor shall not be brought under control.

Mr. SPENCE. I think that is a rather strong statement.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. Is it the gentleman's recommendation to us that we vote down the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and vote down his substitute, and pass the original bill?

Mr. SPENCE. No. I said that the conditions have made it necessary to introduce our substitute. I would be perfectly willing to have passed the original bill.

Mr. PACE. The committee bill?

Mr. SPENCE. And have hearings on the other things, and report a bill.

Mr. PACE. Vote down everything else and pass the committee bill?

Mr. SPENCE. I am not asking you to do that. The gentleman is making some other propositions with which I do not agree. I am willing to take the original bill, but I am not willing to take the original bill with the Kunkel amendment.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has said that because of the Kunkel substitute he found it necessary to introduce his substitute bill, which he introduced. Now I would like to know who "we" are and who wrote the bill?

Mr. SPENCE. I would like to know who is behind the Kunkel bill, if you want to know that. I think I know. I think the minority was behind the Kunkel bill.

Mr. JENSEN. That is right.

Mr. SPENCE. They wanted to give the President some powers in a way he did not want to use them. When I say "we" on this side, I mean the Democratic majority in the committee.

Mr. JENSEN. The Democratic majority in the committee?

Mr. SPENCE. It seems this is confusion worse than confounded and I shall not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should be given additional opportunity to explain this matter and I therefore ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the committee if there will be an opportunity under the present arrangement to offer amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asked unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky be extended for 5 minutes.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the chairman of the committee if under the present procedure there will be any way whereby those Members who feel that we ought to impose price controls, wage controls, and the whole gamut of controls at the present time, will have any opportunity to vote upon a proposal to that effect, or have we reached the point on substitutions where all of them simply propose to give stand-by powers without actually imposing these controls?

Mr. SPENCE. It is my understanding, and I do not profess to render any decisions on parliamentary law, that if either one of the amendments or substitutes is adopted, it will be subject to any germane amendment.

Mr. POAGE. Will they be subject to amendment after you have adopted one substitute for another substitute? Does that not preclude the opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. SPENCE. No, it does not, in my opinion. The expeditious passage of this bill will strengthen our economy, hasten the defeat of our enemies, and add to the extent of our victory.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, it seems to me that the gentleman cannot possibly finish in 5 minutes. I suggest that the extension be for 20 minutes in order that he may explain this bill to us.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire additional time?

Mr. SPENCE. I will take 5 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Kentucky continuing for 5 minutes?

Mr. BURDICK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, and able chairman of the committee, if he can give us any assurance that if this House sees fit to pass legislation limiting wages there will be an opportunity given to limit profits?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes. Any germane amendment, I think, would be in order. Before the bill would be perfected, it would be open for amendment. That is my opinion.

Mr. HUBER. That is most difficult under the present procedure. I just want to say to this House that I am unwilling to limit wages and freeze the salaries of low-income workers in stores or factories and yet allow the manufacturers of munitions and other war goods to become millionaires. If you limit one, you should limit the other. Let us take the profits out of war and do it today.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUBER. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. That is one reason I tried to get the chairman of the committee to yield. He has been trying to explain the Kunkel bill, how it freezes the wage level, and he was trying to distinguish the difference between the wholesale price and the consumer price features of the Kunkel and Spence amendments. If you will permit me to continue, the gentleman raises the most important question in the whole bill. We are being asked to freeze prices, and to freeze wages, but what will happen to excess profits? Of course, that whole subject is under temporary consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means and will not be, in my opinion, fully considered for some weeks, if at all. The question then comes up in the Senate whether taxes on excess profits will be considered along with corporation taxes and increases in individual income taxes. Nobody knows. Now, the gentleman has put his finger on the crux of the whole issue before this body, freezing the wage scale without taxing excess profits.

Mr. HUBER. I will say to the gentleman that I have the same feeling. It is necessary and urgent, they say, that we must take this action this afternoon, but next month, or 2 or 3 months from now or next year we eventually will get around to collecting these excess-profits taxes. I wonder if some of these people who are worried about this 24-hour delay are not interested in getting into communication with the pressure groups back home to find out if they have any objections to the proposed bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUBER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. This is stand-by control; the President can push the button. Does not the gentleman feel we ought to have some assurance—and I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman speaking on excess-profit taxes—from the President that he will not push the button for wage controls unless contemporaneously therewith there is coupled an excess-profits tax? The gentleman must remember that the President under this bill has control of the timing of price-and-wage control.

Mr. HUBER. If we allow the President to send our American boys to death 7,000 miles away, we can give him the right to control excess profits or anything else needed to stop the sacrifice of American boys and bring this emergency to an end.

Mr. CARROLL. I want to make this one point. The gentleman from New York is absolutely correct. It is the real difference between the Kunkel amendment and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. This is stand-by legislation. If we put the onus and the responsibililty upon the administration as to when they freeze prices and wages, then it is incumbent upon us to go forward also with an excess-profits program.

Mr. HUBER. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. JAVITS. I heartily agree with the gentleman speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, everyone knows that when war is on and we are mobilized under complete controls under the direction of the President, democracy ceases until the war ends.

If we carry out our theory of being the policeman of the world to settle every dispute among nations anywhere and everywhere, war will not cease so far as the United States is concerned, and controls, even mild at first, will become absolute. The President has not asked for rigid controls at this time and the reason, I suspect, is that he does not think we are at war; that the Korean situation will clear up without further involvment. If he is right in this conclusion, he has, of course, asked for enough controls to carry through on our attempt to settle the dispute in Korea.

I look upon the matter differently—as everyone knows I have been against our getting involved in foreign entanglements for I know that the longest period of peace everywhere in this world since the first page of history was written is a period of less than 3 years. Wars will continue just as long as human nature remains as it is. Wars cannot be stopped by more wars—peace cannot be forced at gun's point for more than a temporary period. As soon as a nation is again ready to pursue war, it will pursue it.

If our policy is to remain as it is now—to quell every uprising or invasion, anywhere in the world, we shall continually remain at war as long as time lasts. Controls will be necessary, of course, because we have human nature here as well as other nations. The tendency in business will be, as it always has been, to exact the last pound of flesh. Hording is a part of human nature. The instinct to live is strongly rooted in the whole human race, and on food products this fear of having no sugar, or anything else will cause people to hoard. This fear deprives people of any consideration for their fellowmen, and if they can get sugar, they are not much concerned with the fact that their neighbors may not be able to get any. So some control is necessary. If we go into all-out control now it would be the proper move if we are in fact to be engaged in another world conflict, but if the Korean situation remains localized, no such controls are necessary.

Congress turned down my proposition which I have worked and voted for—namely to keep out of foreign entanglements. Those entanglements have now embroiled us in the first steps toward a world war—at any rate it has involved us in the Korean war. Since we are at war, regardless of the reasons why we are the fact remains that our boys are being killed and wounded on the battlefield it has become the duty of every American to support them in all things that will protect them as far as a Government now can protect them.

I always considered that our efforts in the United Nations would not produce a deterrant to war. The only contribution made by the United Nations as such is to present a UN flag to our command in the Korean battle front. Where are the men from England, France, and South America? Not a man has showed up except those in English battleships and a few fliers from Australia. We might as well make up our mind that there is not anything to the United Nations in the plan of active force to stop the invasions of weaker governments by more powerful ones. We are, just as I suspected, in a position where we shall have to carry the financial war burden and the manpower burden of any action taken by the United Nations. In other words there seems to be no concerted action of force available except our own.

If we remain at war, which we cannot escape, if we intend to police the world, wartime controls will increase until there will be nothing left of our democratic freedoms. I propose to vote for the power the President has asked for in the original bill but not for any proposition to increase that power.

(Mr. BURDICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to address a question to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Would the gentleman from Kentucky inform me what the plans of the Committee on Banking and Currency are in relation to rent control?

Mr. SPENCE. I may say to the distinguished gentlewoman from California that if the present conditions increase it is very obvious that we must have rent control. The Committee on Banking and Currency will meet to consider that question in the near future, I think. We have a Rent Control Act now which is still in effect, but I have no doubt it will not be adequate if the inflationary conditions which now prevail as the result of our military activities grow. We will certainly have a hearing on that subject before long if price and wage controls go into effect. Of course, if price and wage controls and the other things in this bill do not go into effect, it would be a futility to have rent control. I think they ought to have complete controls if conditions warrant it.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. In other words, we will not leave Washington until some provision has been made to extend rent controls if they are needed?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes, I will say that is a fair statement of what I think will happen.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I note that the Kunkel bill is supposed to expire in March of 1951. The new Spence bill by its terms in section 13 provides for termination at the close of June 30, 1952. Insofar as the Kunkel bill is concerned, I see no need for consideration of additional rent controls except for those areas which have been decontrolled and which may be subjected to inflationary trends. However, insofar as the Spence bill is concerned, I would think, in view of its termination date, provision should be made in this bill for adequate rent controls throughout the administration of the act.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, the reaction of the American people to the immediate and courageous decision by the President to resist Communist aggression in Korea has been most heartening. I am convinced that most American citizens will respond with equal support to forthright leadership for mobilization on the home front to match our efforts on the fighting front. We can only be strong militarily if we are strong economically. The most important single force for peace in the world today is the productive strength of the United States. The inflation of the last few weeks threatens to interfere with our economic strength. We must move quickly and boldly to prevent the dangers and distortions and weakening forces of inflation which has taken hold so strongly.

President Truman has asked the Congress to appropriate approximately $10,500,000,000 for immediate military needs, $4,000,000,000 for military assistance abroad, and has indicated that further money may be needed. Even before one cent of these funds has been appropriated, much less spent, we have seen what can be done by a few selfish and short-sighted individuals by pushing up prices through hoarding and inventory accumulation and speculation. These self-seeking activities of the few cannot be permitted to endanger the well-being of the many. The Government has the clear responsibility to prevent profiteering and speculation which benefit a small number at the expense of all the people and of the defense effort.

We must not delay one day longer than absolutely necessary in taking all essential steps to prevent further inflation. We all remember how extremely difficult it is to stop inflation, let alone to roll back prices once they have been increased substantially. Every day there is failure to move against inflation, makes more difficult the job of mobilizing our country for an all-out effort.

The rise in prices in recent weeks has been primarily the result of speculative and inventory buying. There is no evidence that this hoarding is at an end. Once defense spending really increases in any substantial amount, such spending piled on top of spending for inventory accumulation and hoarding will aggravate the inflationary pressures and make for even more and larger price increases. Exhortation and patriotic appeals will not be enough to stop this tragic development. Greed on the home front cannot be permitted to run loose and result in fantastic profits for the few while our boys are dying and being wounded on the battlefield. Many veterans of World War II were sorely disillusioned to come home and find so many war-made millionaires. It must not happen again.

I do not believe that the legislation we will vote upon today or tomorrow or the next day is legislation to meet a short-run emergency. I believe we must be prepared for a long, hard pull—maybe 10 to 15 years. To do this we must set our sights high. We must lay our plans now to make our economy strong while we are making our military defenses strong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of the present defense production bill but also in support of a total program necessary to meet the present demands upon our economy. Such a total program has three main parts.

First, we must have ever-increasing production, in order to meet our defense requirements, the requirements of other nations, and the needs of our own economy. This is the key to a successful program today. H. R. 9176 is designed to see that we meet our production needs.

We must not forget that it was the tremendous increase in our productive capacity and output that spelled success in the last war.

What the Communists really fear, is our productive capacity.

I noticed an item in the paper the other day that the bazooka was manufactured and shipped to Korea in 4 days. That is our great strength, and that is what will win this race between democracy and communism. It is the expansion of our productive capacity that we must look to.

Mr. Chairman, today we are short in electric power capacity in this country. We entered World War II with an excess power capacity of 40 percent. At no time during the war did it drop to less than 18 percent. Today we only have 12 percent excess power capacity. We are short in steel. We were producing at 102 percent of rated capacity even before Korea. Do you remember just before and even during the war, Mr. Chairman, that there were some who hesitated and dragged their feet and opposed any expansion in steel and in the other basic industries? Why? Because they were afraid that they would be left with excess capacity in peacetime. But they were wrong. Instead of excess capacity we have had shortages. Capacity has not been sufficient to meet our ever-growing domestic needs.

Mr. Chairman, this is the point I want to emphasize—expansion of our domestic capacity is the greatest weapon we have in fighting communism.

In the long-range operation of our civilian and defense economy, we need housing, schools, and hospitals. We need to expand the production of power, steel, and aluminum. We need our reclamation and flood-control projects. These are all essential programs in the long pull that is ahead.

Mr. Chairman, because I believe this is a long pull, any sound program must take into consideration our farmers, our wage earners, our shopkeepers, and our independent businessmen. For instance, our defense plans must not shut out small business. Our defense plans must not encourage monopoly.

We must see that the small-business man can make his contribution. We ought to pass immediately H. R. 9243, which is designed to assure that participation of small business in the defense effort.

Stand-by power for the President to enforce rationing and controls over prices and wages is a necessary part of our present defense program and I shall support it. We may need such controls but only as an aid to the increase of our production and to insure that we get the most for our tax dollar. Controls are not an end in themselves. What could OPA have accomplished in the last war without the War Production Board?

We must also have a revised tax program. It is preposterous to talk for 1 minute of imposing price and wage controls without, at the same time, imposing an excess-profits tax. An excess-profits tax is essential even if controls over prices and wages are not now necessary.

The President has already requested a new system of taxes which will raise an additional $5,000,000,000. I am strongly in favor of such an increase. But it is not enough—it is inadequate for our present needs. To meet the inflationary strain placed upon the economy by nearly $15,000,000,000 in defense and foreign-aid expenditures, as they are presently estimated, we need at least a $15,000,000,000 added tax program now. These taxes should be raised from two main sources. The President's program will bring in $5,000,000,000; but more important, we must reimpose a steep excess-profits tax. That program could raise $10,000,000,000 more. I believe that such excess-profits taxes should be based on current earnings.

A realistic tax program must be geared to fight inflation and to help as much as possible to operate on a pay-as-you-go basis in meeting the expenses of a sound defense effort. Deficits in the Government budget are needed when there is widespread unemployment and inadequate total buying power. A deficit now in the early stages of what promises to be a long and costly defense period makes no sense. Today, and as long as this defense period continues, we need as nearly a balanced budget as we can create.

(Mrs. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, I am not an encyclopedia.

Mr. COX. I would like to see done, as regards the question that is before us, that which in its statement of policy the Kunkel bill says ought to be done. I am wondering if the bill does that. In other words, the language that I have in mind is this:

It is declared——

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my 5 minutes begin when the gentleman from Georgia has concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. How much of my time has expired?

The CHAIRMAN. One-half minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield the other half minute.

Mr. COX (continuing):

It is declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security, and to accomplish the objectives of this act, that if price and supply controls are invoked by the President, wage controls authorized herein shall simultaneously be put into effect.

Can the gentleman inform the committee if the Kunkel bill makes good that declaration of policy?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I am very sorry I cannot, but I can call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on page 2, section 2, of the unnumbered bill introduced this afternoon, there is a pledge that whenever anywhere in the world any of the member nations of the United Nations, or those who have subscribed to the Atlantic Pact, get into trouble, that we are to come to their aid and fight their war. That is in there. And also in there is what might be construed, and I think should be construed, as a surrender of the independence of the Republic.

H. R. 9176, the unnumbered bill just submitted and similar proposed legislation we are now considering, each grant to the President arbitrary and unlimited power over all civilian productive activities.

In each is carried the statement that—

This Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.

That language implies the surrender of our freedom of action as a nation, a pledge to participate in every war in which the Security Council of the United Nations may choose to involve us.

Enacted into law, this type of legislation would give us a government similar to that which now exists in England, where a farmer cannot even turn a furrow, an industrialist manufacture an article, a storekeeper purchase or sell merchandise, unless he complies with bureaucratic rules, orders, or regulations which prescribe to the minutest detail the extent and method of operating.

Even superficial knowledge of what has happened in England under this form of government should cause the rejection of this bill.

If this and similar proposed legislation, because of fear or hysteria, can be put through Congress, the end of the Republic has arrived; Stalin and the Communists need no longer attempt the overthrow of our Government by force or violence.

I cannot, I will not, support any legislation which, in my judgment, by subterfuge ends our form of government, brings about the Communist objective.

The argument is that only under bureaucratic control can our Armed Forces win this war.

No war is justified except as it becomes necessary to protect the liberty of the citizen, the welfare and security of the Republic.

If, to win a war, the freedom and the opportunity of the citizen are destroyed; if, for the form of government under which our Nation has grown great, is substituted either socialism or a dictatorship, then the war, when won, has served no useful purpose.

The war won, our people would find themselves with a military victory, but without the blessings, spiritual and material, which the Republic has given us.

The argument for this form of legislation rests upon several false assumptions.

One is that our people—workers, farmers, businessmen, and industrialists—are so greedy, so selfish, so lacking in patriotism and the willingness to sacrifice, that they will either fail or refuse to contribute to the utmost of their ability to the support of our fighting men.

That assumption is not true. If it be true, we have already lost the war. This was cannot be won unless we have an all-out, united effort.

It is true that in this, as in every other age and land, there are some human jackals who would feed on the sufferings of their fellow man. But they are few in number. Specific legislation, designed to prevent their efforts, to drastically punish violators, can and should be quickly enacted, vigorously enforced.

A few profiteers thrown in jail or, in wartime, publicly whipped, would stop that traitorous activity.

Another false assumption, sometimes unwittingly, entertained by the proponents of this and similar legislation, is that under the direction of the bureaucrats we would the more quickly get larger quantities of better munitions of war than if production and transportation are under the jurisdiction of producers, i. e., workers, farmers, industrialists.

Our military experts never have been, and they are not now, trained—they have never learned by experience—to produce at the lowest cost in the greatest quantity the most efficient munitions of war.

War is always wasteful, for always, if a battle or a war is to be won, there must be available when needed an excess of supplies, and this regardless of the cost.

Common sense and ordinary good judgment as well as experience force the conclusion that those who have had years of training, who have demonstrated their ability, as have those groups, to which I have referred, have the know-how and the facilities to produce the most of the best of the things needed to wage war successfully, and that in the shortest possible time.

The Nation's production crew—individual, group, and as a whole—is the best in the world.

We must proceed upon the assumption that on the whole they are patriotic, willing to sacrifice to support the sons, brothers, fathers, husbands, who have enlisted or been drafted to fight.

Unless that assumption be true, the Communists have already won this war. Without a united effort we cannot win.

Our military experts may or they may not be the best in the world, but they are all we have and, in my judgment, when we become involved in armed conflict, we should permit them, not the State Department, nor any other executive department, nor the politicians, the bankers or the profiteers, to tell the Nation either what it should make, when, where, how or in what quantity it should be produced.

Those at the head of our Armed Forces should tell us what we need, how much, when and where it should be delivered. Then, without any restrictions by rule, order or regulation, those who have heretofore carried the burden of making this Nation what it is should be given the task of producing and transporting, of fulfilling the requests of our military experts.

The power given under this type of legislation, destroying the freedom of the individual, impairing the form of government under which we have grown great, giving added authority to the bureaucrats, is never wholly relinquished.

In my opinion, this type of legislation tends to defeat the only purpose which justifies war, the protection of the liberty of the citizen, the welfare of the Republic.

As stated, it is based upon the false assumption that the bureaucrats know more about production than do the civilians; that the bureaucrats are less selfish, less greedy, more willing to sacrifice than are others.

There is one other and, to me, a conclusive reason why this proposal should not become law.

It might be defined as the demonstrated incompetency (if not worse) of this administration to deal successfully with any policy, domestic or foreign.

President Roosevelt once told us:

Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on rocks of loose fiscal policy.

Any government, like any family, can for a year, spend a little more than it earns. But you and I know that a continuation of that habit means the poorhouse.

During the last 5 years of peace and, if judged by the standard of national income, the five most prosperous years in the history of the Republic, this administration has, each and every year except two when the opposition was in power, operated in the red. Proof conclusive either that it did not want to or was incapable of avoiding the rocks, the poorhouse, to which President Roosevelt referred.

The foreign policy which it has followed has been disastrous. This administration, by its foreign policy, has failed to prevent our involvement in this war. By its lack of foresight, it appears to have given us a second Pearl Harbor in Korea. Proof positive that this administration either did not desire or was incapable of establishing peace, avoiding war.

This and the preceding administration coddled and protected Communists—our present enemies—here in America.

This administration in its foreign policy, by design or unwittingly, advanced the interests, increased the power, of the Communists who are now directing the fight against our men in Korea.

To me occurs no reason, to me it seems folly, to entrust to an administration, to a group of individuals, which has failed so miserably at home and in our foreign policy, the direction of this, a supreme, effort to save our Republic.

If the people's representatives, here in Congress assembled, lack the intelligence or the courage to write and successfully enforce legislation which will save us from the dangers now threatened, I know of no way of better announcing that fact to the people than by the passage of this type of legislation.

The people will then have the opportunity, on the 7th day of November, next, of electing a Congress made up of individuals who, regardless of their political affiliation, will act for the preservation of the citizen's liberty, the welfare and security of the Republic.

A Congress which will not shirk the duty, surrender the responsibility imposed upon it by the Constitution.

(Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point.)

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I received a letter from a constituent, Mr. Charles Z. Heskett, attorney at law, Cumberland, Md., who brought to my attention historical facts which I think a great many of us may have forgotten. In order to refresh our minds, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I want to include Mr. Heskett's comments.

In the fourth year of the French Republic and after having adopted the third constitution in four years—an instrument which the French described as the most democratic instrument of government ever evolved by man—the French Republic was beset with wars by the Emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia and England. The French Army was in dire straits. The Utopia promised by the Republic had not materialized. Thomas Carlyle records the matter as follows:

"The menacing movements of the people of Paris, who were beset with the reality of famine and the phantom of monopoly, the ravings of Chaumette and Hebert in the commune, compelled the convention (the French Assembly) to make deplorable concessions, which resembled zeal, but which were only weakness. The convention decreed a maximum—that is to say, an arbitrary price—below which no bread, meat, fish, salt, wine, coals, wood, soap, oil, sugar, iron, hides, tobacco, and stuffs could be sold. It fixed likewise the maximum of wages. It was making itself master of all the liberty in commercial transactions, in speculation and labor, which exist only in a state of liberty. It was placing the hand of the state amongst all sellers, all purchasers, all laborers, and all proprietors of the Republic. Such a law could not but produce the concealment of capital, the cessation of work, the langor of all circulation, and the ruin of all."

Does the above legislation have a familiar sound to you? Six years after the enactment of these total war measures, France was governed by an absolute tyrant, namely, Napoleon Bonaparte, who, after his victory at Austrilitz, crowned himself Emperor. Perhaps, a few people in Washington, need to know something about history.

With kindest personal regards.

Very sincerely yours,

CHARLES Z. HESKETT.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that there be read in my time an amendment I propose to offer to the Spence amendment when it is before the House for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE to the amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 16, after the word "any" in line 17, strike the words "fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable;" and in line 24, after the word "such", strike out in lines 24 and 25 the words "fresh fruit or fresh vegetables" and insert in each instance the words "agricultural commodity."

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, the Spence amendment as now drawn provides that adjustments may be made in the ceiling price of fresh fruits and vegetables if it is found that the producers have encountered unusual increases in cost of production and other factors which result from the hazards occurring in connection with production and marketing. It is difficult for me to understand why that authority should be limited to fresh fruits and vegetables. The producers of the basic storable commodities, wheat, corn, cotton, rice, peanuts and tobacco, may be faced with similar circumstances of unusual cost of production or hazards. The wheat producers can face some unusual condition of production, some disease or rust which will make the portion of the crop they produce bring them much less than the cost of production. Insects, droughts, floods and other disasters can visit any group of farmers regardless of the commodity they produce or whether it is perishable or nonperishable. I am hoping that when the amendment is offered it will be acceptable to the committee to treat the producers of all commodities the same.

I should like to state further, for the information of the committee, that I shall offer an amendment, not yet ready, to page 16, line 7, which seeks to limit the ceiling price of agricultural commodities to either the parity price or the average price received on June 15, 1950. I have been unable to find anybody to tell me what is sacred about June 15, 1950. I shall ask the committee and the House to accord to those who must produce the food and fiber to feed and clothe our people, and doubtless the people in many other lands, the same privilege that they extend to those who work in our industrial plants.

On page 15, the period for determining the wage scale is the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950. It is difficult for me to understand why the wage earner should get the benefit of the highest wage during a 30-day period, but in the case of the agricultural producer, the man who must feed them all, he is tied down to 1 day, June 15, 1950. I think you will find it will be very unfair to the producers of many agricultural commodities, because you are going to find on that particular day some of them were in a very favorable condition, but on that particular day my limited investigation during the afternoon discloses you are going to find some agricultural producers in a very unfavorable position. So why should we extend to the wage earner, who has my complete sympathy and support, the 30-day period for the highest wage and not extend the same privilege to the agricultural producer who gets his wages out of the commodity which he produces?

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I am concerned about that provision, too, and I would like to ask the gentleman this question: It appears as a fact that there was a very considerable rise in food prices from April 1 to June 15. June 15 is the peak of that rise. Now, I want to ask the gentleman whether or not, in view of the fact that we are trying to get a period before the sensational rise took place in contemplation of what happened in Korea, it would be fair to fix a date for anything, whether labor, prices, or food, preceding the day of these sensational rises in food that started on April 1?

Mr. PACE. I must reply to the gentleman from New York that that is the difficulty the agricultural producers are in. The food rises the gentleman refers to were not rises in farm prices; they were rises which the farmer himself had no benefits from. He had already sold his crops. I agree with the gentleman there was a rise there, but it was from the processor and wholesaler on down through the retailer and the consumer.

Mr. JAVITS. Suppose I should move to amend, which I have a mind to do—and I would like the gentleman's advice on the subject—to roll back to April 1, 1950. Would that bear on the farmer or would it come off the processor and distributor?

Mr. PACE. I am compelled to state to the gentleman I would have to analyze that date in order to advise him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the gentleman consider that carefully so that we may have his considered advice on tomorrow?

Mr. PACE. I will be delighted to.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I know the gentleman is well qualified in the field of agriculture. Perhaps he can answer a question which seems to be popping up in my mail very frequently. Many of the residents of my district, which is entirely a city district, are at a loss to understand why the surpluses, particularly in perishable commodities, cannot be used to stabilize the markets and prevent undue inflation in the cost of such perishable commodities. Would the gentleman be willing to comment on that and state why that should not be made a part of this bill, to permit the Secretary of Agriculture, if possible, to use the perishable commodities in order to stabilize such market?

Mr. PACE. May I say to the gentleman that under section 407 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 the Secretary now has the right to sell any commodity in surplus that is owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation at the support price which, as the gentleman knows, is always below parity, from 90 percent down to 60—to sell it at the support price plus 5 percent, plus reasonable carrying charges. So, the law now permits and fully authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to take surpluses available and move them into the market, providing he does not dump them in a manner that will demoralize and break the market.

May I say to the gentleman that our Committee on Agriculture just this morning, in order to move these perishable surpluses in the hands of the Commodity Credit Corporation reported a bill to authorize the Secretary to give them away and to pay the cost of transporting them to some central point in each State. So, the Secretary not only has not been able to sell them, he has not been able to give them away, with the other fellow paying the transportation, and now we are authorizing the Secretary to give them away and pay the transportation.

Mr. YATES. Would not the gentleman's bill that was presented to the House last year, known as the Pace bill, give some alleviation to the inflation that is now taking place in this country with respect to perishable commodities, by giving a necessary flexibility to the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. PACE. Let me answer that in this way, that that question was asked the Secretary of Agriculture last week, and he said emphatically yes; it would contribute very much to alleviate that situation.

Mr. YATES. Does the gentleman agree with that?

Mr. PACE. Yes; I do.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman refers to an amendment to the Spence substitute.

Mr. PACE. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Is the gentleman aware that under the Kunkel substitute price is not controlled except at the wholesale level?

Mr. PACE. That was my understanding. I do not think, frankly, that that cures the evil, because the gentleman from Texas knows as well as I that there is a terrific spread between the farm and the table and there is also a great spread between the wholesaler and the table.

Mr. PATMAN. My object was to point out that that is a defect in the Kunkel bill. It does not apply to anything but the wholesale level.

Mr. PACE. I regard it as a very serious defect.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HARVEY. In further pursuit of the presentation the gentleman has made, I would like to ask the gentleman in this particular instance whether he would suggest that the alternative of only substituting the parity price be taken or the date as given in the bill.

Mr. PACE. No. We are in this sort of shape right now, and I do not know what to do about it. Cotton has jumped up since the Korean conflict about 6 or 8 cents a pound. Many mills have purchased their cotton at the high price. The Government sold two or three hundred thousand bales this week at that price. Now, those mills have, we will say, 38-cent cotton. They are making, or they will in a few weeks make that into textiles. What will happen if we roll that textile price down to a basis of raw cotton at 32 or 33 cents, and they have 38-cent cotton in the product? It seems to me that some of us are going to have to get together on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. It seems to me that some of us here overnight are going to have to give consideration, not on a permanent basis, but purely on a temporary basis, to the situation where a processor is caught with raw products at a high level, to at least let him get rid of the processed goods at that level. Now, it may work out itself. If the President does not invoke ceiling prices for, say, 3 or 6 months, then that in itself might allow them to be able to move such goods out at the comparative cost.

Mr. HARVEY. The reason I propounded that question, particularly I have in mind many of the products of the farm, especially livestock products. We also experienced a similar sharp increase, and there is such a great disparity between the parity price and the present price or the price as of June 15 that naturally under the law they would have to take the higher price and not reflect the stable level for those livestock products.

Mr. PACE. I think you have the identical problem in the case of many wholesalers of meats, that they have acquired supplies of meats at a pretty high price and when you roll that back, in my judgment, you are going to bankrupt many of them.

Mr. HARVEY. May I say in conclusion that I think this is of such far-reaching import that it should have a great deal of consideration before we hastily pass such legislation.

Mr. PACE. I certainly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I may have misunderstood my colleague, but I do not agree with the proposition that cotton went up some 6 or 8 cents a pound due to the Korean war.

Mr. PACE. No; I said "since."

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It went up when it was announced that the acreage in the United States was reduced 31 percent. That is when cotton went up.

Mr. PACE. That is exactly right. I say, too, that cotton did not go up on account of the Korean conflict but, as my colleague says, it went up following the report on the cotton planted as of July 1. The result was the same. Cotton is now up to 38 cents.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HORAN. Is not this a question the great Committee on Agriculture of the House has had under consideration, at least privately, by individuals, for a long while?

Mr. PACE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. HORAN. Have they not been able to arrive at conclusions?

Mr. PACE. On many of these problems we have not.

Mr. HORAN. The reason I asked that question is that I am wondering if we should try to write legislation here on the floor overnight that we have not fully considered and at least held some hearings on and had all sides and all facts aired.

Mr. PACE. We certainly should not. On the agricultural angle, I have not had an opportunity to confer with my chairman. I am hoping he may be able to call our committee together tomorrow to have at least a quick look at the agricultural provisions.

Mr. HORAN. The gentleman thinks this should be fully aired by those capable of considering it?

Mr. PACE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I wonder if it would be possible in writing this bill, and I am asking this of my friend because I know he knows more about it than I do, to make some provision that in fixing any price under the controls it should not be less than parity or some percent of parity?

Mr. PACE. The bill providues that. I object to it for this reason: It says the higher of parity or the price on June 15.

Mr. COLMER. I am not talking about the June 15 price, I am talking about the provision that no price shall be set at less than say full parity.

Mr. PACE. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, but that may require too great a roll back.

Mr. COLMER. I wonder if one of my friends would not be in a position at the proper time to offer such an amendment.

Mr. PACE. That is provided on page 16 of the bill at this time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman know whether the market prices on this June 15 date were considerably higher than parity on major commodities?

Mr. PACE. I am going to ask the gentleman from New York if he will check that. I checked the agricultural prices on that date. I found many commodities out of position on that particular day. That is the difficulty in trying to fix one 6-hour period, you might say.

Mr. JAVITS. What would the gentleman think of giving the President discretion to pick a period between April 1 and June 24, 1950, depending upon the quotations and the different situations?

Mr. PACE. It is customary to provide, as is done in the case of wages here, that the wage would be the highest wage during a 30-day period. Probably the gentleman will not agree with me, but my philosophy is to let Congress write the ticket and not leave too broad discretion in the hands of those who would administer the law. We should at least set the limits and fix the standards to guide them. We should be governed here by the experiences we had and the lessons we learned during the last World War. We must not discourage production, but should encourage and increase it.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. POTTER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak generally on the issue before us and not on any particular amendment.

These are trying days. These are days when our every thought reverts back to the men who are doing the fighting in Korea. I suppose the remarks I make here today would be better left unsaid—that is, from a political standpoint. But I feel compelled to speak at this time and get a few things off my chest.

Mr. Chairman, the men who are fighting in Korea are making the sacrifice of their lives, and so it behooves none of us to worry about any political sacrifice which we may be making.

Mr. Chairman, this is no time for business as usual. This is no time for politics as usual. We cannot afford semimobilization, or piecemeal mobilization. Whether we call our action in Korea a police action or a small minor incident, or the beginning of world war III, I can assure you that the men fighting in Korea not only think—they know—it is war. I say that Congress has no right—Congress has no moral right to reach into the homes of American families and pull out its citizens and force them into duty which will jeopardize their very lives and then be niggardly in the performance of duties and responsibilities that we have on the home front.

Mr. Chairman, I despise Government control. I have opposed them in the past and will in the future when Government controls have been asked for unnecessarily in peacetime. But, Mr. Chairman, despite my dislike for Government controls, I hate war more. Despite my hatred for war, I have a greater hatred and a greater fear—and that is my hatred and my fear of international communism.

Mr. Chairman, we draft men to go into the service to do our fighting for us, so we should not hesitate one instant to mobilize for total war. Many of you here today were in this body during the last war. I was not. I humbly ask the indulgence of the membership to permit me to make a few personal references to my service in the last war, something that I have never done before and I assure you will not happen again.

I was a combat infantry officer. I can well remember when we hit the Siegfried Line we were ordered to halt at that line with the enemy in front of us and on both flanks. Our troops were rationed—mind you, we were rationed on gasoline and we were rationed on artillery ammunition. That artillery ammunition was so necessary at that time so that we could set up a harassing fire to keep the enemy from closing in on us. But we were rationed. At that very moment, Mr. Chairman, I well remember getting an issue of the Stars and Stripes, the Army newspaper, telling the story of the coal strike. I belonged to the Twenty-eighth Infantry Division. Most of the members of that division were from Pennsylvania. Many of the men in the outfit were the sons of coal miners. Let me tell you that strike cut the very moral fiber of those men. This same Twenty-eighth Division has just now been called back into Federal service.

At the same time we heard of a woman in Detroit who was working in a defense plant and who had just received her check. On the way home, riding the bus, she kissed the check and said, "I hope this war never ends." A man next to her slapped her. He said, "That is for my son who was killed at Pearl Harbor." He slapped her again, and he said, "That is for my son who was killed in Normandy."

Yes, I can remember time and again of getting stories of industries fighting to get their contracts at 20 percent plus costs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] has expired.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I remember distinctly the effect it had on the moral fiber of those men when they heard of the immense black-market rackets.

The reason I have stated these incidents is the fact that we must remember, and we should know that the morale of the troops that we have in Korea and that we will send to Korea depend a great deal on what we do in the next few weeks. When the Government of the United States takes 10 men or 10,000,000 men and asks them to put their lives in jeopardy, we have no right to do other than to prepare for total mobilization.

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped I could find some one of the substitute bills that I could support. To be frank with you, at the present time I do not know what I can do. The original Spence bill, of course, was wholly inadequate, and I am not too sure but that the Kunkel bill and the later Spence bill are not wholly inadequate.

Last week I signed a statement with 14 other Members of this body calling for legislation for total mobilization but leaving the responsibility to the Congress and not to the President to pull the trigger. I still concur in those views.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POTTER. I prefer to yield later.

However, I believe the time to pull the trigger is now. Food prices are going out of sight. The cost of living is reaching a stage which is making it most difficult for people of low income and with fixed income to live. If this is allowed to continue, of course there will be new wage demands. There will be many, many serious economic dislocations. You know as well as I that price and wage controls are needed. You know as well as I that within a very few weeks the President will ask for those controls. The longer it goes on the more difficult it will be for our citizens to make the necessary adjustments. We are doing no one a favor by prolonging this inevitable fact. As long as the threat of controls hangs over the American people, there will be an increase in the hysteria which causes hoarding and which in itself accelerates inflation.

Mr. Chairman, I doubt if there is a man in this Congress today who seriously believes that the Korean incident is not part of a master plan dominated and controlled by the atheist leaders in the Kremlin. I do not believe there is a man or woman in this room who deep down in his own heart does not believe that once this Korean question is over another crisis will develop. We are put in the position of a man in the boxing ring who has got a knock-out punch, a good right hand, but whose managers have told him not to use his right but to counter.

How long can we continue to block the jobs, the opposition of our enemy, to sacrifice ourselves piecemeal all over the globe, whenever and wherever he sees fit to call the shots? One of these days we are going to have to recognize a most unpleasant fact, that we do have this good right hand and that it may be necessary to throw tradition to the wind and use our good right hand at our discretion when and where we want to.

Mr. Chairman, the people of this country are looking to the Congress for leadership. They will despise our action if we look for political advantage, regardless of what side of the aisle we may sit on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. POTTER. It is time for this Congress to show the same intestinal fortitude as the men in Korea; it is time for this Congress to show some guts and pass legislation which will go into effect immediately to stabilize our economy in order to facilitate the effort of our men in Korea. At the same time we should enact legislation along the lines recommended by the distinguished gentleman, Mr. Bernard Baruch, for total mobilization which may carry things that may be unpleasant to many of you but which are absolutely necessary at this time. An excess-profits tax, certainly; universal military training, yes. We must train our men for whatever eventuality may confront us. This will do more to show the men in Korea that we do not consider their sacrifice a thing of minor concern, and that we are interested in getting them out of there as soon as possible so that they can enjoy the fruits and benefits of a free world and go home to their families and loved ones and live a life of peace. But this can be achieved only when Communist aggression is stamped out.

CONTROLS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Michigan who has just spoken, that it is time the Congress demonstrate intestinal fortitude; and I agree, too, that any sacrifice we make on the home front is certainly minor and insignificant compared to the least sacrifice by our fine servicemen on Korea.

INFLATION

One of the greatest mistakes made during World War II was the failure to put on price and other proper controls sooner than we did. We were too late inaugurating controls. Another serious thing that we did was to take controls off too soon. By taking the controls off too soon we caused the 60-cent dollar we have today.

One of the most serious problems confronting us today outside of winning the war and the loss of life and limb is inflation. It is possible for our heroic young men to win the war on the battlefield and for us to permit the losing of the war here on the home front by reason of worthless dollars.

It goes a little further than that. It is possible for us to lose the war by reason of worthless dollars. Before we win the war, it is possible for dollars to become so cheap that wage earners will not work for the cheapened or worthless dollar, or the producers will not produce for the cheapened or worthless dollar.

It is necessary that we retain stability of our money; otherwise people have less incentive to work, even during a war effort.

SIXTY-CENT DOLLAR

The first OPA law in 1941, actually adopted in 1942, was very much criticized. It was opposed by some of the most effective people in our Congress. But we passed the best law we could. One of the cruelest things that ever happened on the floor of this House was the fact that we had to come in before the House every year and ask for a continuation of this unpopular and in many instances referred to as obnoxious controls. We came before this House, not under a gag rule, never, but under an open rule.

Now, on questions of taxation and other things that were not near as important as the question of price control, the committees were given closed rules, and I am not objecting to that, but I do say the cruelest thing that happened during that war was the fact that we just had to fight and force through every year a continuation of price controls under an open rule on the floor of this House where any kind of an amendment was in order. I do not see how we did as well as we did, but we did very well until 1946 when many controls were absolutely necessary. However, the House voted them off. There were six or eight separate roll calls—I have forgotten which. That killed price control and because we killed price control the value of our money went down, down and down to the 60-cent dollar we have today. That was the cause of it.

Let us resolve here and now that we will not repeat any such performance as that but any control bill we pass, let us pass it for the duration of the emergency and not be compelled to come in here every 6 months or year and fight through the extension of an unpopular act. Any control bill is an unpopular bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, there is no satisfactory way to administer price controls. There are too many borderline cases and exceptions that the people think should be made in the law that we cannot make. It is like relief. There was no satisfactory way to administer relief. There was no person on relief who could not point to other people who were getting more than he was getting and actually prove it. There is no way to administer exact justice. We are doing very well if we administer equal justice. So with a price control law, you are going to have something that is very difficult to administer. Any law that we pass, let us pass it for the duration of the emergency.

We can have a race between prices and wages and cause this worthless money I have been speaking about. Today prices are shooting up. At the retail level, if you please, meat prices have gone up as high as 20 cents a pound in one week, other prices in proportion at the retail level. If we permit that to continue, wage rates are going to have to be increased also. One way it will be demanded and finally obtained, or it will be received under existing contracts between labor and management. You will recall that in the General Motors contract the wages are tied to the cost of living index, and even though they do not demand more wages, they automatically receive more wages if we permit the cost of living to go up, and other people in different groups, where they do not have that favorable contract, will demand it. Every day the wages and salaries of 62,000,000 people are going down and down and down. That cannot continue very long until we will have some serious repercussions in this country. When you have these high prices like we have now, then there is a demand for high wages and salaries to offset these high prices, and they go up as high as the prices on comparable bases, then prices go up again, then wages go up again. There is a race between prices and wages that can cause us to have worthless money.

I agree with what the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Mrs. DOUGLAS] said a while ago about increased capacity for certain commodities or certain basic materials, I will say. We need more electricity, as the distinguished gentlewoman states; much more electricity than we have now. We do not have enough. We need a much greater steel capacity. We could use 10,000,000 tons more steel today than we can possibly make. Steel is a basic material.

Now I desire to invite your attention to the fact that any bill that we pass here should certainly have strong provisions that will encourage the production of basic materials as well as other materials and articles. It is production that holds down inflation. Production is the answer to inflation. So, we must have more production.

I invite your attention to one or two things in the bill offered by my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]. If I read his bill correctly, and I hope he is on the floor and I hope he corrects me if I am in error, his bill insofar as price fixing is concerned relates to wholesale prices only; it does not relate to retail prices.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the gentleman will turn to page 10 of the print of H. R. 9283, which part is exactly the same——

Mr. PATMAN. I will take the gentleman's word. Does it apply to retail prices?

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes. I will read it to the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. All right, that is enough for me. All I want is just the gentleman's word on that. I misunderstood him. I read the word "wholesale" in there and did not see "retail," and I thought it would only apply to the wholesale price.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the gentleman will let me read that statement, I will. It is quite short. The first four paragraphs under section 202 apply to wholesale, and then you come to subparagraph 5 which reads:

In the case of a new article, and in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not entirely convinced from the reading of the language. I hope to read it more carefully, but I will take the gentleman's word for it if he says it applies to retail prices.

COUNTRY GOING SOCIALIST?

Many people are saying that this country is going socialistic. Are we going socialistic or communistic? There has never been a time in the history of the United States when more people owned their own homes, their own farms, their automobiles, their personal property, including savings, and more life insurance, than in the United States today.

The country that is ripe for socialism or communism is a country where the people are poor, where they do not have anything to divide. Only people who have nothing to divide are ripe for communism or socialism because they are supposed to divide with others what they have.

As long as we are encouraging people to own their homes and their farms, and making it possible for them to get the money at a low rate of interest over a long period of time to pay for those farms, and as long as they take advantage of that and own their own homes in the cities and have as much as they have today, with good jobs and good wages, there is no danger of this country's going toward socialism. It is going in exactly the opposite direction, and that is the direction in which we want our country to continue.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, for several days now since the first committee print was available I have been studying the price-control section. If my words of counsel are worth anything at all, it is because of my 25 years of experience in business before coming to Congress and my 8 years of experience here, many of those years during the war years when we had price controls.

The first speech I made in January of 1943 was against the inequities of the OPA functioning. I fear we are again making the mistake we made back in 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945. We are going at this thing piecemeal. We are going to do too little too late. In my opinion, the only country that actually made price control work and work as equitably as possible on its citizens was Canada. They put price controls on across the board—wages, prices, profits, everything—at one time. Then the function of their price-control board was to remove controls selectively. We tried to put the controls on selectively, and every time we put a control on a commodity we created additional inequities. Every time we allowed an adjustment in the price control we created a hundred maladjustments. That is exactly what we are headed for again.

As far as I am concerned, the original committee bill was a spineless fraud under the circumstances, and I do not care who sponsored it or who asked for it. I say they did not ask for enough to take care of the situation that exists in this country today.

What are we looking for in a bill of this kind? We are looking for a piece of legislation to control inflation, and inflation is already on the way. I do not care when we put a bill into effect, we are going to freeze inequities. I do not care how carefully we write it, we are going to freeze inequities. It is impossible in a free enterprise system for everything to be equitable at any one time. It is always fluctuating, and so it will be regardless of the day or the period we select as a base when we put this bill into effect. When we put the bill into effect we will see special pleaders coming forward to take care of the prices of agricultural commodities. We will have others to take care of the price of labor and we will have others to take care of the excess-profits taxes. We will have special pleaders of all kinds. I say to you that the only special pleading that should be done today is for the complete benefit of all the people of the United States.

Every Member of this House should read the speech that was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER]. There is not a Member of this House who has the right to speak as authoritatively as he did. There are some others that have reason to speak authoritatively, but no one that I know of has more reason to speak authoritatively, as he did, because he probably sacrificed more than any of us.

I say every Member of the House ought to read his words. We ought to come to the House tomorrow, not with the idea of obtaining partisan or special class advantage, but with the idea of doing a job where we can go back and look at ourselves in the mirror and say that we did the job which was needed for the American people. Yes, we imposed hardships. We imposed inequities; but who is there who will say that inequities and hardships are not being imposed upon those boys who have been sent out to Korea to fight and who are fighting with their backs to the sea at this time for you and for me?

I say that if any man gets upon the floor of the House and makes a special plea for some partisan effect or for some special interest effect in the light of the job that is to be done that that man is unworthy of Membership in this House. I say every one of us should subordinate every selfish interest and every partisan interest to do this tremendous job which faces us, because I agree with the gentleman from Michigan when he says that this is not the ending, this is the start. This is perhaps the start of the fight for the preservation of the free enterprise system and the free constitutional government system throughout the world.

I believe we have to gird our loins for the battle with every strength we have, moral, physical, and spiritual, or we are going to be left at the gate when the race is over. And remember this, that in the kind of war we will have in world war III, no nation and no people can win—we all lose.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I send two amendments to the Clerk's desk.

The amendments are as follows:

Amendment to Spence substitute offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 45, line 23, after the word "act", insert "pursuant to this act."

Page 46, line 6, after the word "general", insert "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

Page 46, line 13, after the word "general", insert "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

Page 46, line 14, strike out the period, add a comma and the following words: "and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President or such person as he may designate shall approve or disapprove the request."

Page 46, after line 18, add a new subsection, subsection (d), as follows:

"The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within 90 days after the approval of this act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman intend to offer either one of his amendments at this time, since he can only offer one?

Mr. CELLER. No, Mr. Chairman; I am simply placing them on the Clerk's desk for consideration on the morrow.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I shall address myself merely to the two amendments which I will offer to the bill, and which will be voted on tomorrow, according to the parliamentary situation. They refer to the exemptions granted by the President, or whoever he may designate under the antitrust laws, to certain firms engaged in war work—exemptions from antitrust sanctions.

Those exemptions to the antitrust laws are highly important. They are exemptions which must be, indeed, jealously guarded and reluctantly given, and only given when they are in the national interest and are absolutely necessary for the purposes of quickening and improving and increasing war production.

The amendments which I shall offer have been cleared through and have been approved by the office of the Attorney General, and by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. They, in a word, would put a brake upon the granting of these exemptions to the antitrust laws. I presume that when the authority we will pass is implemented by the administration, that the Secretary of Commerce will have the paramount word with reference to the administration of this act and particularly it shall be he who will grant these exemptions under the antitrust laws.

Now, the Secretary of Commerce is not the administrative agent who enforces the antitrust laws. That is the function of the Attorney General and Federal Trade Commission. This is partly recognized in the pending bill which provides that before the Secretary of Commerce shall grant the exemption from the antitrust laws he must consult with the Attorney General. One of the amendments which I shall offer goes a step further than that and provides that that consultation shall be with the Attorney General and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission as well. Why do I add the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission? For the simple reason that the Sherman Act is within the direct purview of the Attorney General. He enforces the Sherman Act. But the enforcement of the Clayton Act, with the exception of its criminal provision, lies within the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission. Thus the Federal Trade Commission might likewise be considered and its judgment as to exemptions from operation of the sanctions of the Clayton Act respected.

These exemptions are to be granted, not only from the operations of the Sherman Act but from the operations of the Clayton Act. Therefore, it is proper and appropriate that the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission as well as the Attorney General be consulted.

My amendment likewise provides that the exemption shall not be granted if either the Attorney General or the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission objects. If either of those two distinguished representatives of our Government objects, then the final decision must be made by the President or whomever he may personally designate for that purpose. Thus there would be provided necessary and reasonable brakes upon the administration official who would be empowered to grant these highly important exemptions. My amendment would supply the brakes against great pressures of great corporations—supply the brakes against possible favoritism; brakes against greed and selfishness. Nor would war productio be impeded or delayed.

During the last war, comparatively few exemptions were granted. Actually, only one such exemption was granted over the objection of the Department of Justice by Donald Nelson of the War Production Board. This referred to practices of certain railway-rate bureaus.

During the last war the general practice was to suspend punishment for violations of the antitrust laws, but in flagrant cases prosecutions were had. Such suspension did not mean condonement of the violations, and in a number of instances, prosecutions were resumed after the war.

Under the instant bill, as in the previous act, where exemptions are granted, there can be no prosecutions whatsoever at any time. Thus we must be watchful and vigilant and see to it that exemptions are granted only for the best of reasons and when granted must be carefully scrutinized. Remember exemptions must be distinguished from suspensions of prosecutions.

The amendments I propose do exactly that.

The second amendment provides that there shall be a survey made by the Attorney General concerning the operations of these exemptions. In the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 we put into that act the exact language of one of my amendments which I seek to insert in the pending bill.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. I think the gentleman should have the amendments printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CELLER. I am speaking this afternoon so that I will have placed before all Members of the House the amendments, and I shall insert in the RECORD communications I have received from the Department of Justice and from the Federal Trade Commission approving these amendments.

The second amendment to which I have directed your attention is as follows:

> The Attorney General is directed to make and request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and to the President, within 90 days after the approval of this act, and at such times thereafter as he may deem advisable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys, including such recommendations as he may deem desirable.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has another amendment along similar lines that he expects to offer?

Mr. CELLER. Correct. I have already referred to it.

Mr. PATMAN. In view of the fact that the Department of Justice does not have an economics division, and the Federal Trade Commission does have such a division, I think the gentleman's amendment is timely, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. CELLER. I thank the gentleman very much.

In pursuance of that provision in the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act, which I seek to insert in the pending bill, a preliminary report was made by the Attorney General in 1944, or shortly thereafter, and four distinct surveys were made, and they were very important, very cogent, very interesting and helpful to the Members of the House and to the administration. Those reports covered aluminum, steel plates, tin plate, and air transport. I think what we did in 1944 we should do now again, because the present situation is on all fours with events around 1944.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. Will the gentleman tell us exactly at what point in the committee print these amendments are to be inserted?

Mr. CELLER. They would be inserted on page 46, and are amendments to section 708, 708 (a), and 708 (b) of the Spence substitute. Those provisions of the Spence substitute, namely, 708, 708 (a) and (b), and so on, relate to these exemptions under the antitrust law.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. YATES. I think the gentleman has some very desirable amendments, but I wish the gentleman would explain why he refers the question only to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission rather than to the Commission as a whole, inasmuch as the Commission must act through a majority of its members. Does not the gentleman believe that the question is of such importance that it should be considered by the entire Commission rather than by the single chairman?

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman, such a matter will be considered by the entire Commission. It is customary to refer the matter to the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, and he, in turn, refers it to his colleagues on the Board.

I may say further that the Federal Trade Commission approves that form of amendment.

Mr. YATES. In other words, then, the Commission as an entirety will be the ones to determine it.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MULTER. I think it is safe for me to say that it was the intent of the committee when we considered the antitrust provisions of the law in connection with this bill that there should be no change in the law as it affects anyone who is properly in violation of the antitrust laws. But we tried to write into this bill provisions which would permit the Government to carry on in the event of an emergency and that if anybody, any industrial plant complies with the Government request for help they will not be in violation of the law during the course of the emergency, but then that they could not continue in violation of the antitrust laws after the emergency had passed.

Mr. CELLER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Let me say that these provisions that we seek to insert in the Spence substitute in no way interfere with war mobilization or war production; they are simply safeguards to prevent certain types of greed and selfishness, and the desire for inordinate profits resulting from monopoly power.

It is distressing to me that at the first signs of economic emergency, there is a mad rush to see who can scrap the antitrust laws first. This happened during the NRA days of the depression; it occurred to a large degree in the last war. Again, today, at the first signs of shortages and war rumblings, businessmen are all too eager to reinstate so-called voluntary allocation systems, planned rationing, and other devices which have so often been tools of monopoly power.

I realize full well that adequate national mobilization of resources requires some collective actions on the part of industry which may or may not accord with the free competition that in general is essential to our success in peace or war. I strongly protest the idea, however, that in order to fight communism abroad, we must entrench monopoly at home and abolish with a single flourish the economic and political philosophy which has formed the basis of the institutions of this Nation since its inception and given us the higher standards of living.

Restrictions of production, unfair methods of competition, cartel arrangements, price rigidity, these have been the characteristics of industry after industry studied by the Subcommittee on Study of Monopoly Power, a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee which has been investigating monopolistic and restrictive practices of this country's economy for the past year. There is nothing in the record to show that these malignant practices are less baneful in war than they are in peace. On the contrary, in wartime, restrictions on output, territorial divisions, suppression of patents, and numerous other devices of monopoly power create bottlenecks, artificial scarcities, and serious technological deficiencies at the ultimate cost of countless lives. In times of war, not only is it essential that we do not let the concept of competition become eclipsed by monopoly through abdication of our antitrust laws, but it is necessary that we double our vigilance against the strangling and deadening effects of monopoly power.

Some of us remember that great American corporations were found to have made cartel arrangements before World War II, by which this country was blocked from prewar development of synthetic rubber, optical glass, and other essential materials. In some cases, the exchange of information with foreign cartel members even included betrayal of American military designs. Some of us remember the great difficulties that our Government faced in obtaining conversion of plants to war production, and in persuading industries like steel and aluminum that expansion would be necessary to win the war. Our Government was forced to make concessions, such as building war plants interlocked with existing plants, and granting patent rights for inventions developed at public expense. These concessions in many cases were demanded for the sole purpose of building monopoly powers for use after the war.

There are even now situations that ought to be investigated, to discover whether monopoly power is denying Americans the use of the most efficient type of storage battery, and utilization of deposits of strategic minerals said to exist in this country.

There were enough cases uncovered by the Truman committee during World War II of great companies looking toward their postwar monopoly position at the cost of their immediate service to the war effort, to indicate that a watchful eye must be kept on all exemptions from antitrust law, merely to protect war production itself.

I believe that the effective use of our resources for defense requires more than the voluntary cooperation of the vast majority of businessmen whose patriotism is beyond question. It requires also a constant guard against the few who would take advantage of the country's need to build unlawful powers for selfish purposes.

As to the amendment requiring surveys of the Attorney General and reports thereupon to Congress and the President concerning operations under the granted exemptions from antitrust laws, I wish to emphasize that it can in no way hinder or obstruct the war and defense effort. The sole duty imposed upon the Attorney General is one of reporting. To reject this proposal is in effect to argue that Congress and the Nation should pursue its wartime activities in blind ignorance of the economic facts which are recurring throughout the Nation. It is said that ignorance is bliss, but we cannot afford to conduct a war which extends to the four corners of the globe and fail to be cognizant of exactly what consequences our conduct is having upon the economic structure of the country as a whole.

This amendment has the approval of the Department of Justice, in fact it was written in conjuntion with the reprensentatives of the Attorney General. Its benefit are of long range, insofar as these studies will present a graphic picture of the economic phases of the American economy in its transition from peace to war. They are of short range in that a continuing panorama of the Nation's industrial structure will be made available to the Congress and to the people.

One of the great principles for which this country is at present fighting and arming itself is that of freedom of information. The Congress and the people are entitled to know the status of their economic institutions. They would be foolish were they to refuse to take advantage of their freedom to attain such valuable and essential knowledge.

I herewith insert the communications of approval from the Department of Justice and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, August 2, 1950.

HON. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At a conference yesterday with representatives of the antitrust division, you asked that this Department express its views with respect to certain proposed amendments to subsections (a) and (b) of section 508 of H. R. 9176, the "Defense Production Act of 1950." As amended, these two subsections would read as follows (changes are indicated by single quotes):

"SEC. 508. (a) No act or omission to act 'pursuant to this act' requested by the President, and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commisison Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General 'and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission' when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register, unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

"(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the conditions that such officials consult with the Attorney General 'and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission' not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder, 'if objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President shall himself approve or disapprove the request.'"

The inclusion of the words "pursuant to this act" appears desirable in our opinion, since it avoids the possibility that subsection (a), as it now reads, might be construed as applying to activities not coming within the over-all scope of the act.

Except for the provisions relating to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission and provision for personal decision by the President in the event of objection to a request for exemptions, subsections (a) and (b) are substantially similar to provisions contained in the Small Business Mobilization Act of 1942 (50 App. U. S. C., sec. 1112).

In view of the Attorney General's responsibility for the enforcement of the antitrust laws and his close familiarity with the operation of the Federal Trade Commission Act as well, both by virtue of his position as the chief law officer of the Government and his direct responsibility for enforcement of orders entered under the latter act, we are satisfied that the Attorney General could discharge his responsibilities under the provisions requiring his review of proposed exemptions and that he could do so promptly, effectively, and without delaying the administration of the program contemplated by the Defense Production Act. This view is supported by our experience in the administration of similar statutes during World War II.

Considering the importance of the matter in question, the provision for leaving the final decision to the President in the event of objection also seems desirable in principle. We believe, however, that the President should not be precluded from delegating the power to make this decision to some other responsible person in the event that his many other duties render it impossible to give the matter the personal attention it would warrant. Accordingly, we recommend that the last clause of your proposed subsection (b) of section 508 be modified to read as follows: "The President, or such person as he may designate, shall approve or disapprove the request."

For the reasons stated and subject to the modification suggested in the preceding paragraph, we favor the adoption of the amendments proposed by you insofar as they relate to the Attorney General. We express no opinion as to the necessity for the additional provisions relating to the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission or the effect of these provisions upon the administration of the act.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, August 2, 1950.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In accordance with your request made at a conference yesterday with representatives of the Antitrust Division, I am pleased to express the views of this Department concerning a proposed amendment to H. R. 9176, the Defense Production Act of 1950. The amendment would consist of a new subsection under section 508 of the bill and would read as follows:

"The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within 90 days after the approval of this act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable."

This provision is substantially the same as section 205 of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944 (50 App. U. S. C., sec. 1660). There are two minor differences, other than mere changes in language, between the 1944 statute and your proposed amendment. Your proposal would (1) authorize the Attorney General to request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him the surveys referred to, in addition to making them himself, and (2) provide for submission of the Attorney General's report to the President as well as to the Congress.

Since legislation of the type contemplated in H. R. 9176 necessarily has far-reaching effects upon our economy, it is of great importance that in its administration careful attention be given to the preservation of our competitive and free-enterprise system. Accordingly, we favor adoption of the amendment in question, the purpose of which is to evaluate the operation of this legislation from that standpoint.

Yours sincerely,

PEYTON FORD,
Deputy Attorney General.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, August 1, 1950.

Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN CELLER: In response to your request, I am glad to offer my views on the amendment which you propose to introduce regarding section 508 of the defense production bill, H. R. 9176.

Your insertion of the phrase "pursuant to this act" corrects what must have been only an oversight in the drafting of the bill. Without the insertion of this phrase, the bill could be interpreted as authorizing the granting of exemptions for presently unlawful acts which have no relevance whatever to the purposes of the defense production bill.

With regard to the second feature of your amendment, I am in complete agreement, for the reasons set forth in Commissioner Ayres' letter of July 27, with the proposal to insert the words "and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission" at each point in the section where the term "Attorney General" appears.

As to your final proposal to add at the end of subsection B the words "that if an objection is made by the Attorney General or by the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President shall himself approve or disapprove the request," the objection can be made that such a procedure would place an unnecessary, heavy burden upon the President. However, I am sure that both the Attorney General and the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission would be mindful of the fact and accordingly would not harass the President with objections to minor or trivial exemptions but would confine their objections to matters of major importance. It would appear to be completely in accord with principles of sound public administration that in such matters the power to resolve the dispute should be given to the head of the official family rather than to one of the disputants.

Because of the very short time available, I have not had any opportunity to ascertain whether or not these proposals are in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely yours,

JAS. M. MEAD, Chairman.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time to ask some member of the committee on the majority side to answer a question. At page 41, lines 2 to 4, of the committee substitute there is a totally new provision from that which appeared in the original bill. That provision reads as follows: "including any new agency or agencies which are hereby authorized to be created by the President when deemed necessary."

I wish the gentleman would tell us whether it is proposed under this provision to establish a mobilization production board or any agency similar to the War Production Board of World War II. This is completely new language from what was in the original bill as it was presented to the House during general debate.

Mr. PATMAN. Since the first bill was introduced this amendment was prepared. It also includes rationing and wage controls. In view of these two additions it is necessary that the language read by the gentleman be inserted.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman know whether it is contemplated by the President to set up what would be equivalent to an OPA?

Mr. PATMAN. I am not able to say; I not not know what the President has in mind.

Mr. JAVITS. Does not the gentleman believe that for the information of the House before we vote on this whole subject we should know tomorrow just what is implied in that new language; that is, what agencies, if it is known, what agencies the President contemplates to set up in the way of OPA, a War Production Board, or otherwise, under this completely new grant of power which we did not see before and which is now in the Spence substitute.

Mr. PATMAN. Any agency set up to administer the act could be considered the same as the OPA or WPB, and probably would be, although it is possible for these two provisions to be administered by existing departments, like the Department of Commerce or the Department of Labor.

Mr. JAVITS. May I say to the gentleman I would hope very much that we could know tomorrow, that being the purpose of the overnight delay, whether the administration has in mind the organization of new specific agencies.

Mr. MULTER. May I attempt to answer the question?

Mr. JAVITS. Yes. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MULTER. When Mr. Symington was before our committee he tried to make it clear to us it was intended so far as possible to use existing agencies. Naturally, it is necessary to have the power in this bill. If existing agencies should not be sufficient for the purposes, then a new agency may be created. One of the primary differences between this substitute and the Kunkel bill is that the Kunkel bill sets up a new agency to do all of these things. The Spence bill and the substitute for the Kunkel amendment gives the power to the President to use existing agencies wherever possible and, according to Mr. Symington, that is the intent and the desire, but if a new agency is necessary he then may create it.

Mr. JAVITS. I think I reflect not only my own views but that of many Members of this House when I say that in consonance with the spirit in which we are proceeding in respect to this bill I certainly hope that the President will use his authority to set up separate agencies like the OPA and the War Production Board to do this job. We found during the war, and we found since the war, that the way to do a job of national importance in a national emergency like this is to get America's best brains. America's best brains are generally devoted to business and the professions and they do not often want to get into the existing Government departments. That is not said with any disrespect to the men who are there now. There are some very able men in the Government at this time. When they know it is on a temporary basis in an agency that is to care for this particular national emergency, as they did in the War Production Board, we will get America's best brains for this job and no less than that is what I think we ought to have in deference to what is happening in Korea and the views that have been expressed on the floor here.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. May I say that the gentleman is exactly right. This is a big job. It is a job that has got to be properly coordinated. If it is spread out among every agency of Government, different agencies will be taking action which will affect other agencies and the jurisdiction and functions of other agencies. It should be concentrated in one over-all board so that we will know what we are doing.

Mr. JAVITS. Another thing, may I say to the gentleman from California, it should be above politics.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Absolutely.

Mr. JAVITS. The way to get it above politics is to set up emergency agencies to do this job.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. I answered the same question when the gentleman asked me yesterday and I told him what was contemplated. The criticism was made that my bill did not permit the delegation of any of these authorities. That is an incorrect statement. You will notice a paragraph in there which reads:

SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate.

In other words, the thought in my bill is the creation of an over-all agency along the same general line as was the case in the last war and which the gentleman has in mind, and also that certain functions will necessarily and properly be delegated to other branches of the Government such as the Department of Agriculture. There is a specific provision in the bill that permits that delegation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: One of the greatest acts that we have done here in the last few weeks, and which had enormous impact on the world, was the vote with only one dissent on the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. Is there a chance that the gentleman from Pennsylvania can get together with the majority members of this committee and work out and agree upon a substitute which could come in here tomorrow and get the same kind of a resounding vote of confidence in this House?

Mr. KUNKEL. I do not know about that. Certainly there would appear to be a very strong chance that substitutes will be introduced tomorrow.

Mr. JAVITS. The gentleman does not feel that can be done in this case?

Mr. KUNKEL. I would be glad to cooperate.

Mr. JAVITS. I would like to call the attention of the House to one other point. I intend to offer an amendment tomorrow with respect to this agricultural section which is found on page 16.

The House will notice that there is established what is apparently a completely arbitrary date, June 15, 1951, as the date to determine the maximum price for agricultural commodities. Now, that date has no relation to June 24, 1950, which is the day before the Korean episode began. It bears no relation to any other date which relates to maximum prices or to maximum wages (May 24 to June 24, 1950) in this bill. I certainly hope very much that the Members of this House from the cities will at this time, when we are talking about the provision for maximum prices for food, which is going to determine the living standards of their people perhaps for a good many years to come, will carefully examine what is proposed. We all want to be more than fair to the farmer. The farmer, just like the industrial worker, is just as necessary as the soldier in the kind of a job we have ahead of us. But, I think it is absolutely essential that the city worker and the industrial worker be fairly protected in whatever is done, and that we just do not shut our eyes to the responsibility we have as Members from the cities. I think the Members from the agricultural districts should be the first to say that the only way you get anything made fair is by the attrition of people who have different interests, and that therefore we should not just blindly leave it to them. We should try to make up our own minds as to whether this is fair to the people we represent in the cities.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman, in offering such an amendment, will, of course, remember that agriculture took a drop of about 40 percent below the high point in 1947 whereas labor since that time has received increases in various industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I am sure that the gentleman will keep that in mind, whatever proposal he might care to advance to the House, because after all the gentleman from New York has, in my opinion, always endeavored to be fair, and what both he and I want is to try to be fair to all segments of our great population. We must also keep in mind that costs which the farmer today must meet are nearly as high as in 1947. The men I hire today on my farm have not taken any considerable drop in wages since 1947. However, the barley I sell today for $1.40 per bushel brought $2.35 3 years ago. Rye sells today for $1.10 less a bushel than in 1947. The gentleman, I repeat, has always been fair and I am sure he will consider these factors.

Mr. JAVITS. I appreciate the gentleman's comment. I assure the gentleman I will be fair. I point out to the gentleman that during the war the income of agriculture tripled whereas the income of industrial workers just doubled. We have had that out before.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Of course, the gentleman knows that the income of agriculture prior to the war was so pitifully small that any reasonable amount would triple it or even quadruple it.

Mr. JAVITS. I was not making that point with the idea of depreciating the gentleman's statement; but only by way of bringing out all the facts. I take the gentleman's injunction very sincerely and I will do my utmost in trying to be fair.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I think it should be pointed out, and I think the gentleman has a just point, that even though the income of the farmer has dropped, the fact still remains that food prices have gone up, and while wages have increased, the workers have to pay additional wages for the food.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I want to say to the gentleman once again, as I did before, that the price that the farmer receives for the product he has to sell is not always reflected in the price that the consumer pays, by a whole lot.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the gentleman and of course that is so. Yet we have to deal with the situation of a sensational rise in the prices of foods not alone since the Korean struggle began but a constant upward climb since April 1.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments which I have sent to the Clerk's desk for consideration tomorrow be inserted in the RECORD at the inception of my remarks this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I realize the difficulty in writing such legislation as this and the problem that the committee has. I take this time particularly to ask some questions, and why such a section as 303 was placed in the measure, in the so-called substitute on page 8. Can anybody give me a good reason as to why this was placed in the legislation? It deals primarily with minerals and metals.

Mr. PATMAN. That was one of the things Mr. Symington said we must have.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Symington and all the departments have been asked consistently for the past 5 years since Public 520 was adopted as a stockpiling measure if they needed any further legislation to acquire minerals and metals. That is the reason I cannot understand why this provision is placed in this measure.

Mr. PATMAN. I assume that during the emergency they would be willing to pay more for these materials than they have been in the past.

Mr. DURHAM. They are doing that at the present time, of course.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know.

Mr. DURHAM. They are operating under a 25 percent differential because of the high prices on the "Buy American" plan. They have the money to buy these minerals and metals at the present time with the so-called 5 percent funds which we placed in the European Recovery Act, which at the present time stands with an unexpended balance of around $200,000,000, because we cannot acquire them from those countries offshore at the present time. So I see no particular reason why such a provision should be in the measure.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DURHAM. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE of California. What the gentleman is saying is that Public, 520, passed in 1946, the Seventy-ninth Congress, is sufficient for all necessary purposes. I call the attention of our distinguished friend from Texas to the language on page 8, line 18, referring to purchases of these strategic and critical minerals and metals, and I ask for an explanation of this kind of language. It states here:

> Except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss of resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

Mr. DURHAM. I think the gentleman is raising quite a serious question there, because in the stockpiling program you have metals and minerals which have a life expectancy, and you necessarily have to rotate those metals. You might have to sell them at a loss, in order not to lose the whole thing.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Not only that, but could not this be considered an implied repeal of the provision of the Stockpiling Act which permits the 25-percent differential for the domestic producers? This language not only states that the Government shall not pay more than the market price for these critical and strategic minerals and metals but it says that higher prices can be paid for foreign production.

Mr. DURHAM. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. ENGLE of California. If there is any stockpile which is valuable to this Nation it is the stockpile from the domestic mines. This bill is apt to do exactly the reverse.

Mr. PATMAN. The reverse is not intended, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. DURHAM. I certainly hope the gentleman from Texas is correct. I would like a full explanation as to just why such a provision arose. They have told us they needed no further legislation to acquire stockpiles and materials for the stockpiling of materials.

Mr. PATMAN. I hope the gentleman will read the hearings between now and tomorrow. I think he will find in the testimony an explanation which will be satisfactory to the gentleman .

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Symington said no later than this morning that no legislation was needed for the acquisition of stockpiles of critical materials for the stockpiling program in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. With reference to the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], the testimony before our committee is that if we do not procure from certain foreign countries critical materials, even though there is domestic production, then certain foreign products would get into the hands of potential enemies. If we do not buy, they will buy them. I am sure the gentleman would not want that.

Mr. DURHAM. We can do that under the present Public Law 520. We have funds to do that, and we can do it now. We can commit ourselves up to 20 years if we want to.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Incidentally, the language mentioned by the gentleman is the same in all three bills, the committee bill, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]. I appreciate his comment; and if it should be necessary to change the language, of course, the House should do that. But I do want to reinforce what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] said. It certainly was not the purpose of the committee to produce the result mentioned. We were satisfied with the statement of Mr. Symington, and I believe the gentleman from North Carolina would be satisfied. I think there is an abundance of material in the report throwing light on that problem. It is an extremely important problem. We need production both of our domestic producers and foreign producers.

Mr. DURHAM. I agree with the gentleman, but the fact is that we have the money today to buy material to put into the stockpiles. We can buy the materials in any part of the world we want to, or where we can get it. At the present time we also have over $200,000,000 of 5-percent funds which we were not able to expend because of the fact we cannot secure materials from countries who participate in the plan. I feel sure this is a limitation on the "buy American provision" in Public Law 520 and, in my opinion, will in no way add one item to our present stockpile of materials and should be stricken from all three measures before us.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to ask the members of the committee to explain three provisions in particular which I am somewhat concerned about. There are many broad grants of authority in the bill which I am not quite sure I understand the implications of, but I do not want to take the time of the committee to explain more than three of them at this time. One of them is on page 9, where the President is given the power to create new corporations. Is there any precedent in our recent history for the creation of such corporations by the President, and if so, can any member of the committee give me any examples of that?

Mr. MULTER. The RFC, of course, originally started before the war, but during the war it was authorized to help in various war activities. You have the Defense Plant Corporation which was created as a separate subsidiary. You have other corporations which were also organized during the war for the express purpose, as Government-owned corporations, to do various war jobs.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Were they set up by the President, or did Congress provide the charter, and provide the authorization for them? I am sure in the case of the RFC at least the Congress laid out the charter.

Mr. MULTER. That is right.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. And provided the organization.

Mr. MULTER. That is correct.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Were there any cases even during World War II where the President had the power to reach out and create a corporation as he does under the broad powers outlined in this bill?

Mr. MULTER. The creation of the corporation has its counterpart in every instance in a congressional authorization—in legislation of the Congress authorizing it. But somebody must actually physically go forward with the formation of the corporation, and we are here giving the authority to the President when he finds it necessary to bring these corporations into being. Of course the gentleman understands they do not come into being automatically.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I appreciate that. But this places the power in the hands of the President as an individual to create any Government corporation that he may see fit.

Mr. MULTER. That is, within the limitations and restrictions of the bill. They must be for the purposes set forth in the bill. They must be related to the national security and to the efforts which we are seeking to further by the bill.

Mr. PATMAN. May I add also for the purpose of providing coordination.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I do not find those limitations in the bill. All I find is the power that will be granted to such corporations, if they are established.

Mr. MULTER. You must read the sentence in connection with section 302 and section 303. Section 304 reads:

For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized.

Only those two sections. I was reading from section 304 on page 9.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Yes, I appreciate that, but sections 302 and 303 certainly are broad in their objectives, and it does give a great deal of leeway to one person, to have the President authorized to set up these corporations without any further authorization from the Congress.

Mr. MULTER. If you agree with the principle as sought to be accomplished by sections 302 and 303, then I think you will agree that the President must have the power to create these new corporations for these limited purposes.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I am not so much concerned about the fact that there shall be such corporations.. What I am concerned about is giving the President authority to create them without the Congress specifically authorizing it.

Mr. MULTER. Surely there is no great distinction between the President saying to a department, "You go ahead and do these things," and bringing into being a wholly owned Government "corporation which will do those things. It is much better if you have a wholly owned Government corporation do certain manufacturing, rather than to set up a department of Government in the manufacturing business.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I do not dissent from that. The question I have is as to the advisability of permitting the President to do these things without specific authorization from the Congress.

Mr. MULTER. The question of advisability is a matter of principle that we will have to lay down here.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Yes. That is right.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman from New York has just stated that the Government could create a corporation to do some manufacturing. Is that provided for in this section? As I interpret section 302, it is with reference to the granting of loans to private business, and the power to create the corporations is for the purpose of implementing that board. Is that not true?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. Section 302 does cover loans and guarantees of loans, but section 303 provides "to assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels," and so on.

Mr. YATES. But that gives no authorization for manufacturing or producing facilities.

Mr. MULTER. Yes. Page 9, subsection (c), says:

The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

But I think it would be a fair interpretation of that language. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to whether or not it can be interpreted as broadly as I have interpreted it. But it certainly does give him the power to buy, transport, and store these products and make loans in connection therewith.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I have two more questions that I would like to ask. The second question I have is with reference to page 26, where the bill begins to set forth very broad licensing powers in the hands of the President. I can recall legislation during World War II that existed for export licenses, and things like that. This is much broader than anything that I am familiar with in World War II legislation. Was there such broad legislation as this in effect at that time?

Mr. MULTER. We are inclined to overlook the fact that during World War II there were no actual licenses issued to each person who was in business, or to each person to whom was loaned the money. Nevertheless, the law provided, just as it does here, for these licensing provisions. As a matter of fact, the Federal Reserve Board, I think, one time granted what was known as general licenses, without issuing specific licenses to each person. That law was that anyone lending money, any bank or private company engaged in the business of lending or financing these various industries, had to file a statement with the Federal agency advising what they were doing; and under the general-licensing provision they were deemed to have a license. The same with anyone engaged in the sale of products; the law said they must have a license. The Administrator issued what was known as a general license. If there was any violation, the court suspended or revoked the license, but no specific license was issued in each case.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Is this substantially what was done in the other law?

Mr. MULTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. And does not go any further than that language?

Mr. MULTER. No.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. A third question is that on page 30 the bill contains this language:

The President is authorized * * * including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this title * * *. Due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this act.

I am wondering to what extent this amounts to a bypassing of the National Labor Relations Board or the National Conciliation Service in the settling of these disputes. We have had some controversy at least in the newspapers on this subject, and I am wondering if this could be interpreted as a means of bypassing what these agencies may be trying to do.

Mr. MULTER. This title, unlike others, proceeds along different lines. In most other statutes we suspend all other laws inconsistent with the law we enact; here we do just the opposite. I call the gentleman's attention to the last sentence which reads:

Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor-standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

In other words, this must be construed with and follow existing statutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. In other words, it would be in addition to and not in place of.

Mr. MULTER. In addition to and not in place of, yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, during the past 2 days there have been many confused pleas from the well of this House. Their justification is a matter of speculation, but I do not want it to be charged per se that every Member is confused. I believe that many Members are thinking calmly and clearly.

There could not possibly be enough confusion to obscure and black-out the basic principles, facts and circumstances that are self-evident. When the President of the United States, having full knowledge of the workings of the Congress of the United States, requested the immediate passage of the Defense Production Act of 1950, he most assuredly knew then that if he tied in price and wage controls and rationing it would result in prolonged debate and would cause a delay in the procurement of the vital materials needed by the United States. He stated then that he would request additional controls as the circumstances dictated. There can be no confusion about his position on that matter.

We could not be confused on the issue that the President desires and that it was in the interest of the Nation for him to have the power to requisition needed materials. In justice to the Nation this House should have passed these controls before now.

There is another matter about which there can be no confusion, Mr. Chairman. As a basic principle, good legislation comes after the proper committee has procured ample testimony and facts and has prepared legislation to meet the circumstances revealed by that testimony and those facts. Our Committee on Banking and Currency should begin immediate hearings on price and wage controls and rationing and such other controls as are necessary to meet the needs brought on by our participation in the Korean campaign and such other requirements as might easily be required by our fight against communism. The committee should investigate immediately into the causes for unwarranted increases in the cost of things the people must buy daily so that the legislation they recommend and the legislation this body passes would aim at the heart of the problem.

It is not a pleasant spectacle to the American people in their concern for the general welfare to have a Kunkel bill or a Spence bill or any bill except one drawn by the proper committee after due hearings and deliberation and based upon the demands of the circumstances. The people want and are entitled to legislation that is consistent with the problem at hand and they cannot get that type of legislation out of the midst of a political struggle. And I now, Mr. Speaker, urge that the Committee on Banking and Currency begin hearings as quickly as possible on price and wage controls, rationing and such other measures as are necessary to keep a stable economy while we fight communism abroad.

It seems to me most consistent with the circumstances in which we find ourselves to immediately pass the Defense Production Act of 1950 with stand-by controls, and to then request our Committee on Banking and Currency to recommend as quickly as possible adequate legislation in the field of further controls.

There can be no confusion about the soundness of this. Controls voted today without adequate machinery for enforcement and without proper thought and consideration of the entire problem will result in more chaos and confusion than stability.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas, my very good friend, to the fact that there is a necessity for some sort of price roll back, if my mail is any indication of the sentiment of the people.

Mr. LYLE. It is my judgment that it is not only unwise but most difficult to attempt to legislate on the mail that comes to the Members of Congress. Such mail is refreshing, inspiring, helpful, and useful, but it cannot alone be the basis of legislation that affects 150,000,000 people.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. May I ask the gentleman if it is his recommendation that we pass the original bill? Should we vote down both substitutes and pass the original bill? He stated that we should have standby price controls and wage controls.

Mr. LYLE. The House is going to have some kind of wage and price controls. It ought to be flexible. There is no machinery, and you know it, whereby it could become effective immediately.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYLE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. With regard to this stand-by legislation, there are those of us who would not be satisfied with that kind of a measure because of the fear that it would not be used in dealing with the labor situation.

Mr. LYLE. In answer to my dear friend—and there should be no confusion about this, either—it is fundamental that if you have controls over prices you must control wages also. But there is another thing. You cannot simply control wages of the men who work in the steel plants and like places. You must also control the wages of people who work on commission, people who make profits in all fields.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, let us move along by first supplying the President with the authority he requests, and then as rapidly and as orderly as possible enact those additional controls that our situation demands. Good and adequate legislation comes, not from under park benches, as do some good ideas, but it comes out of the proper functioning of our great committees.

(Mr. LYLE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for this time in order to make a brief statement and at the same time see if I can get a little information on some parts of this bill. So far as I am personally concerned, if my Nation is in trouble, and it is, I am perfectly willing to go straight across the board and take any steps that are necessary to insure an early recovery from that trouble. That feeling, I am sure, is shared by all good Americans. Some may have differences as to the approach to the problem, but we all have that feeling.

I have listened to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] on a number of occasions in answering questions refer to the existence of this emergency. I have heard any number of Members, virtually every single speaker in this well, refer to the fact that this Nation is in an emergency. Yet there is no reference to a declaration of the existence of an emergency in this bill. I am wondering why that has been left out. I am wondering if the gentleman from Texas can give me some light on that.

Mr. PATMAN. I assume it is because the present trouble is looked upon more as a police action than an over-all war. We are not ready to admit that we have a national emergency.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman has admitted it and every Member of the House has admitted it. The President has admitted it by asking for absolutely unlimited powers.

Mr. PATMAN. We hope it is temporary.

Mr. BARDEN. My stars above, do you not hope this law is temporary if we pass it?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BARDEN. I read over on page 2:

It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations—

And so forth.

Is this to last as long as the United Nations set-up remains in existence?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, there is a definite date that it will expire, in June, 1952, or whenever the Congress, by concurrent resolution, declares this temporary emergency at an end.

Mr. BARDEN. There we go again, "temporary emergency." We are not declaring any emergency so how could we pass a resolution declaring the emergency over, unless we say it exists, puzzles me. Let me say to the gentleman, I believe in meeting an issue right square in the face. Somewhere back yonder I heard a little verse which said: "When we once attempt to deceive, oh what a tangle do we weave."

Now, the thing that troubles me here is why can we not approach this thing from the front door and say that the United States of America is facing an emergency? As a result of that, the people of America through their Representatives are willing to take this step, grant these powers, and entrust the Administrative head of our Government to guide this Government out of that emergency. I think that is the way the American people would want it; that is the way I justify voting for these unusual powers; that is the way the gentleman from Texas better justify his voting for these unusual powers. Yet, in the wordage of this bill we are faced with everything normal, and over here in the very caption of it, why it uses the words "and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes." Why, you could wind up the Social Security Act that way.

Mr. PATMAN. I believe you will find that the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson, testified today, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General Bradley, testified that they believed $10,500,000,000 would be enough to take care of this present emergency, which they considered temporary. They do not consider it at all an all-out emergency.

Mr. BARDEN. Wait a minute. An emergency? The gentleman says "not an all-out emergency" but it is an emergency.

Mr. PATMAN. It is a temporary emergency; yes. We hope it is temporary.

Mr. BARDEN. How temporary?

Mr. PATMAN. We hope it is temporary.

Mr. BARDEN. Now, that is a little bit like defining how high is high, is it not?

Mr. PATMAN. This ends in 1952.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Or at such earlier times as the Congress, by concurrent resolution, or the President, by proclamation, may designate. So, it will certainly end in 1952 and it can end earlier than that by proclamation of the President or resolution of the Congress.

Mr. BARDEN. Let me say to the gentleman from Texas, we have granted powers like this before, but never in our lives have we ever done it except upon the declaration of an emergency, and I do not think that can be denied.

Now we come to this: A bill bounces in here yesterday afternoon, took a couple of hops and turned out and changed its color and here it is again, and we are traveling when we pass some 48 pages of law here that fast, it really troubles me when we do it in that fashion. If the President declares an emergency, as a matter fact I think the gentleman will agree with me that there are probably 60 percent of these powers that would be his powers as a matter of right, as the President of the United States, if he declares an emergency.

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly, but I do not think we are willing to admit now that we are in world war III. If that is what the gentleman is trying to get me to agree with, I am not going to agree; therefore I think the President is right in not declaring a national emergency.

Mr. BARDEN. I just say to the gentleman we are in the next war after World War II. I do not know what number the gentleman wants to assign to it, but when a quarter of a million people are shooting at each other and killing each other, that is not backyard play stuff. If an emergency exists let us declare it and pass appropriate legislation, if it does not exist then nothing is required but peacetime legislation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman proposes to make any observation with reference to title V of the bill. Does he find in that title sort of an undercover monkeying with the Taft-Hartley law?

Mr. BARDEN. I will say to the gentleman that that was my real purpose in taking the floor.

Mr. PATMAN. It is just the opposite of the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARDEN. I will have to ask the gentleman from Georgia to clarify that statement. Does the gentleman want to say something on that point?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Georgia suggested that it would affect the Taft-Hartley Act. I invite the gentleman's attention to the last sentence in section 503, which reads:

> Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

Mr. BARDEN. I believe I have labored with more labor laws than the gentleman ever will, I hope.

Mr. PATMAN. I am sure the gentleman has.

Mr. BARDEN. A lot of it I have not enjoyed, either. But I want to know who testified as to this section before your committee. Who was it? Where did it come from?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. If the gentleman will yield, the part the gentleman refers to is not in the committee bill.

Mr. BARDEN. What is this bill, the Spence bill?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. It is in the bill offered by Mr. SPENCE but not in the committee bill.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman does not mean to tell me the committee has not approved this bill?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. The gentleman is speaking of Mr. SPENCE's substitute.

Mr. BARDEN. One of us is badly mixed up.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. No, I do not think either of us is.

Mr. BARDEN. I am talking about this bill that was offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]. It is headed "Committee Print." Did not the committee print this bill?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. No.

Mr. BARDEN. The committee has not approved this bill?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. No.

Mr. BARDEN. Does the gentleman know anything about this bill?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Yes. I am quoting the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]. He said this to the House this morning.

Mr. BARDEN. Wait a minute. I do not want any hearsay unless the gentleman can give me some trace of where this section came from.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am trying to, sir. The committee did not approve Mr. SPENCE's substitute nor consider it. He offered it in his own name this morning, and it does not represents committee action. The committee did not pass on it one way or the other. When the gentleman referred to the committee bill, I naturally assumed he referred to the original bill which is before the House, H. R. 9176. That was the reason I said title V is not in the committee bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARDEN. If I have made a mistake, was it not a perfectly normal one? Who was it said that if he saw a feathered bird in the barnyard, with a flat bill and webbed feet, and it walked around and said "Quack, quack," and associated with ducks, he would naturally assume it was a duck. I naturally assumed this bill was a committee bill.

I am still worried over this title V. I happen to be chairman of the Labor Committee, and we have a staff, we have counsel, and we try to work with the Labor Department and with the other agencies of the Government. There is not one single agency of this Government, not one department head and not one single member of the Committee on Banking and Currency that opened his mouth about any need for additional legislation of this type. I do not know how far this legislation goes. I have read it. I asked the committee counsel, "Where is the gimmick in it? What is it in here for?" If it is what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] says, then there is no necessity for it. Just go on and use the existing law we have.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. It seems to me what the gentleman has said confirms what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] said this morning, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], which represent my views. It would be far better for us to come back to the committee bill, H. R. 9176, and pass that. It embodies the powers that we are pretty much in agreement on. Then the Committee on Banking and Currency could begin at once to hold hearings.

Mr. BARDEN. Let me say to the gentleman that I am approaching this matter rather seriously.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I know that, of course.

Mr. BARDEN. I want to do the thing which is necessary and helpful and wise for my country.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Why nobody knows the gentleman from North Carolina would question that.

Mr. BARDEN. We are in more trouble than just a little police action, and we are making plans for it. I want somebody who can stand up here and tell the 435 Members of the House just what this bill means and what it does and where the authority for this statement comes from.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. When the debate opened on this measure, I said then, and I want to say again, that as far as the provisions of the bill as reported by the committee are concerned, there is no emergency. No one has pointed out where there is any lack of steel for any defense project in being. If there is an emergency at all it is on the price control side. As a matter of fact, if the emergency had not been there, if the demands had not been coming in to Members of Congress from all over the country to do something in that field, you would not have any Spence substitute, and I do not think you would have any Kunkel substitute.

Mr. BARDEN. I am perfectly willing to work and study and investigate and take no chances so far as passing legislation which might be needed. But I have discussed this matter with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCCONNELL], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, and we can find no reason for it and no source for this language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made some very helpful and interesting observations in respect to the so-called labor sections of the Spence substitute. Could the gentleman advise us, in the light of his long experience in connection with labor legislation and the development of such legislation, whether or not the language contained in the Spence substitute would be so broad as to permit the President to resort to injunction, for instance, to settle labor disputes or to use the military forces of the country to settle labor-management disputes?

Mr. BARDEN. I wish I could give the gentleman an answer which would be at least satisfactory to myself, but I do not see any provision here for any appeal or any relief from any ruling which may be made. I do not know what could be done by some board which might be consistent with anything that might be done under this language. I reckon anything that was not inconsistent would be "consistent," and that gives them a rather large field of operation. I do not know—I just cannot answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HALLECK. On page 30 we find this language:

> The President is authorized after consultation with labor and management to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting the national defense.

Now then, "to take such action"—some have said to me might be so broad as to permit any sort of action such as an injunction or the use of the military, or anything else that the President might see fit to use and certainly so far as that language is concerned, I think it would do serious damage to the emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which are presently in effect.

Mr. BARDEN. I could lift that paragraph out of this bill and bring it in under a separate resolution and offer it on this floor and start the worst fight you have ever seen over that one paragraph, but when we see it in a 48-page bill like this, we are more or less inclined to take it and go right along. The things that I see in there that are troublesome are going to affect some other folks, whose views are not always in accord with mine, more than they are me.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. I appreciate very much the statement the gentleman has made in discussing the difficulties in trying to write a perfect bill on the floor of the House. Would the gentleman enlighten us, because of his experience, as to his views on the provisions of the Kunkel bill, which is before the House the same as the Spence substitute?

Mr. BARDEN. I am sorry. I have not even seen the Kunkel bill. Both were introduced or offered today.

Mr. MONRONEY. At a later time may I ask the distinguished chairman of the Labor Committee to examine the provisions of the Kunkel bill and give us his opinion on that as well?

Mr. BARDEN. Well, I do not know that it will be of any value, but I will be glad to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

(Mr. VURSELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, today I want to discuss the resolution I recently introduced to provide for the building of a bridge accoss the Wabash River between New Haven, Ill., and Mount Vernon, Ind. There has been considerable criticism of my action, particularly by the newspapers at Evansville, Ind. I want to give the people interested my reason for introducing the resolution, and the facts as I see them.

I welcome fair and just criticism. Those who have served with me for 8 years, and the people who know me best, at times may question my judgment, but they seldom question the sincerity of my purpose.

The press sometimes misrepresents one's purpose and gives the people the wrong impression through a barage of criticism, misleading cartoons, and only partial facts. I think that has happened in this instance. However, I have always believed that truth will catch up and win through.

Mr. Chairman, when I was elected 2 years ago to represent the new twenty-fourth district, I gave up years of seniority on a major committee and transferred to the Committee on Flood Control, believing I could render a greater service to the people because of the flood problems along the Wabash and Ohio. I believe everyone in the valley who has followed my work will agree that I have rendered a real service in pushing the projects of flood control affecting five or six counties. There is much to be done along this line in the future, and it will be done.

I believe all will agree that in this session of the Congress I rendered an outstanding service to everyone interested directly or indirectly in preventing the passage of legislation that would have gone far toward wrecking the oil industry in southern Illinois.

WHO BLOCKED WHAT?

The press has intimated that I, with others, have helped to block the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission from constructing this bridge across the Wabash River. I told the people in the vicinity of New Haven over 2 years ago that I would try to be helpful to them in securing such a bridge. I now offer definite proof that such charge of obstruction on my part is not true.

The Indiana Toll Bridge Commission has been talking about building such a bridge for several years. Rather than block them, I tried to help them. Here is the proof:

On March 2, 1948, 2½ years ago, at the suggestion of Mr. H. J. Phelps and other business men of Norris City, I contacted Governor Green's office by letter to his administrative assistant, Mr. Leslie P. Volz, and asked him to confer with the Governor. I strongly recommended that the State of Illinois agree to build the approach at New Haven, Ill., in an effort to be helpful to the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission to construct the bridge then, they are now talking about. In reply I received the following letter:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., March 29, 1948.

Honorable CHARLES W. VURSELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLEY: Your letter received expressing your keen interest in the building of an approach to accommodate a bridge across the Wabash River.

Herewith enclosed is copy of letter which I have just written to Mr. H. J. Phelps, chairman of the Norris City Lions' Club road and bridge committee, relative to the Wabash River bridge, which is self-explanatory.

For your information, it appears from what Mr. Polk, chief State highway engineer, has told me, that the Governor has agreed that the State should build a connection to this bridge.

With personal regards and all good wishes, I am

Sincerely,

LESLIE P. VOLZ,
Administrative Assistant to the Governor.

That should prove to everyone that I was trying to help, rather than block the building of the bridge. Governor Green was defeated, which prevented his further cooperation.

TOLL BRIDGE CROWD

Another reference in the press suggested I had joined the toll bridge crowd. Well, let us see about that.

There are only two ways the bridge in question can be built. If the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission builds the bridge, or has it done, some organization will be given the authority by the Federal Government to issue and sell bonds to the public which may be redeemed in 30 years. The Commission will then collect sufficient tolls to pay the cost of operation, and set aside a sinking fund with which to redeem the bonds as they come due. At the expiration of 30 years, under present law, or earlier if sufficient tolls are collected to retire the bonds, it will become a free bridge.

There is another way the bridge can be built, and that would be a free bridge. If Governor Stevenson, of Illinois, and Governor Schricker, of Indiana, would each have their legislatures appropriate one-half of the cost of the bridge to be paid out of State revenues, and then construct the bridge, tolls would not be necessary and it would be a free bridge. Possibly these two Democratic leaders have enough power with the people of their States to get such laws passed to build a free bridge. However, I doubt it.

People on both sides of the river want the bridge built. None of us like to pay tolls, but often we would rather have the bridge and its convenience, particularly in times of high water, even if we do have to pay to cross it.

It is not a matter of any personal interest to me. I seldom cross the Wabash. I like Illinois best. I was simply trying to render an honest, and what I thought to be a fair service to the people. The chances are 99 out of 100 that any bridge built will be a toll bridge. If we get a bridge, we will all have to join the toll-bridge crowd.

In order for the White County Bridge Commission to build a bridge, a resolution has to pass the Congress. Not so with the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission. All it has to do to build this bridge is to bring a plan to the Army engineers and the Secretary of the War Department which they will approve under Federal law, sell bonds to raise the money, and then begin the construction of the bridge. If they have not done it, why blame me?

Knowing the desire on the part of a great many people in my district that this bridge be built, when I was approached recently by former Congressman Clippinger who informed me that the White County Bridge Commission would like to have its authority extended to build this bridge, I gave the matter consideration.

In order to give full consideration to the matter, I held a conference which was attended by a representative of the United States Army engineers, the attorney representing the Committee on Public Works and Flood Control, an attorney from the legislative counsel of the House of Representatives, and Mr. Clippinger representing the White County Bridge Commission.

As the result of this conference, the resolution was drafted which I introduced.

In introduced the resolution in good faith believing I could assist in rendering a transportation service to the people of my district who want to cross back and forth into Indiana.

I would have introduced such a resolution for any responsible group of citizens in my district, regardless of their political views, who would have assured me they were capable of, and desired to build the bridge.

POSTPONES CONSIDERATION OF BILL

I am not interested in who builds it. I only want to follow the wish of the people I represent. To prove the sincerity of this statement, I shall request when the resolution comes before the House of Representatives again in the next few days that further consideration of the resolution be postponed for this session of Congress.

I take this action so the people who are interested may have an opportunity to more fully consider the facts surrounding this controversial question. The criticism and opposition to the resolution, I feel, has confused, rather than clarified, the thinking of the people as to the intent and purpose of the legislation.

A news article in the press carried in various papers Monday, July 31, adds to the confusion and I quote the article in part:

The Indiana Toll Bridge Commission wants to build the bridge and make it toll-free as soon as the bonds are retired. It opposes the building of the bridge by the White County interests by pointing out it has collected tolls on the New Harmony Bridge since 1930, and many of the bonds are said to be outstanding.

First, the people should know that if the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission builds the bridge under the Federal law it will be financed with 30-year bonds and the people will doubtless pay tolls for 30 years before the bonds are retired and it becomes a free bridge.

Furthermore, the record shows that the White County Bridge Commission under Federal law acquired the New Harmony Bridge in 1941 by issuing bonds to be paid out in 20 years. Every bond has been paid on time and it is predicted that the bonds will be retired in probably 19 years instead of 20 and no more tolls will be collected.

The action I am taking however will give the Indiana Toll Bridge Commission an opportunity to break their talking filibuster of the past few years and give them, or anyone else interested, an opportunity to get going on this project if they so desire. It will be interesting to watch and see whether any action is taken.

A PUBLIC AGENCY

Mention has been made in the press that the White County Bridge is a private bridge. That is not true. The White County Bridge Commission was created under an act of Congress April 12, 1941, under a bill introduced by Senator LUCAS. Here is what the law says:

Section 4 of the act provides for a commission composed of three citizens of Carmi, Ill., to direct the affairs of the White County Bridge Commission. Section 4 of the act says:

The commission is hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of such bridge as may be acquired and its approaches by an issue of negotiable bonds, which bonds shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 20 years from the date of approval of this act.

The commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorney, and other such assistants and employees as they may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the commission may determine.

The law states that "each member shall qualify and be approved by the Federal Works Administrator here in Washington."

The law further states:

Before the issuance of bonds herein provided, each member of the commission shall give such bond as may be fixed by the commissioner of public roads, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The commission shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from its members, and may establish rules and regulations for the government of its own business.

Section 9 of the act says:

The commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act.

The law states that—

Maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $1,200 and of each other member of the commission named not to exceed $600 per year.

According to the records I have before me, the New Harmony Bridge opened for business on January 1, 1931. In 1941, according to the records, it was acquired by the White County Bridge Commission.

The records show that all bonds have been retired at their maturity date, and as of the month of June there is a sinking fund in the amount of $55,801.23. It appears that all bonds now outstanding against the White County Bridge Commission should be liquidated and the bridge be free of tolls on or before June 1, 1960.

The bond issue was to run for 20 years from 1941. If they liquidate the bonds on or before 1960, the bridge will become free 1 year earlier than anticipated.

Let me close by saying, my only purpose has been to try to serve the best interest of all the people of my district.

This whole bridge question is only a small tempest in a teapot, which has been blown up and magnified far beyond its importance.

MORE IMPORTANT BUSINESS

Let us now turn to something a great deal more important and more serious which needs my attention here in Washington and is giving the people of my district great concern and worry.

Our American boys are sacrificing their lives 6,000 miles away from home in Korea in the defense of this country. It is for us now to plan and work to give them and the Government every ounce of power and support. Let us put first things first. The lives of our boys and the defense of our country is now first in every home in America.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, I include an editorial from the New Harmony Times which discusses at some length the operation of the White County Bridge Commission's administration of the New Harmony Bridge:

NOW LET'S READ THE TRUE STORY

It has been the policy of the New Harmony Times to try to deal with facts and not fancies. Pursuant to this policy, when the furor regarding the local bridge was started we contacted Mr. Roy Clippinger, manager of the bridge commission, who furnished us with the following facts.

The bridge commission is not a private interest. The commission was created by Public Law 37 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, chapter 71, first session, Senate bill 324. The commissioners have to qualify with the Federal Works Administrator, in Washington, D. C., and salaries of the commissioners were set by the law at $50 per month, and $100 per month for the chairman of the commission—this cannot be changed. There are no stockholders, the purchase of the bridge was entirely from the proceeds for the bond issue sold at the time of the creation of the White County Bridge Commission.

The law specifically states that when the bonded indebtedness has been paid that the bridge shall be given to the States of Indiana and Illinois.

Those of us who live here are aware that considerable money has been spent to keep the river under the bridge. From Mr. Clippinger we got the figure $562,965.16 as having been spent since the creation of the commission, June 13, 1941, for this purpose. These programs of maintenance are not undertaken without the consent and orders from the consulting engineer. This consulting engineer is the representative of the trustees. The maintenance figure given does not include the usual maintenance that must be taken care of.

The purchase price of $895,000 for the bridge and $50,000 for the ferry was made through money derived from the original bond sale of $945,000. When the bonds were sold the American National Bank & Trust Co., of Chicago, were made the trustees, and all money aside from that required for operation and maintenance of the structure is deposited with them to be used for the retirement of bonds and for interest to the bondholders. These trustees, through their engineer, have a control on the maintenance expenditures, and at all times are well aware of any work that is being done or that is needed to be done. Again, there are no stockholders to receive dividends as the only indebtedness is that to the bondholders.

The income of the bridge has not always been at the level of today; in fact, there was 1 month in its history when the gross income was $38.40 (April 1933).

We have heard the time required to retire the bonds on the Henderson Bridge mentioned in connection with the local bridge. Those who make this comparison are not aware of the facts: Tolls on the Evansville-Henderson Bridge had to retire only one-half of the cost of the structure; the other half was at the cost of Indiana taxpayers. This reduced not only the principal but also the interest that was required. The traffic on United States 41 is over eight times as great as over United States 460.

The commission was set up with the bonds to all be retired in 1960. The commission is, and always has been, ahead of schedule in the retiring of the bonds. When the bonds were sold they were divided into classes, difference classes to be redeemed different years. Their redemption is well ahead of schedule.

During times of high water, as many people have found out to their personal benefit, the bridge at New Harmony is open when all other means of getting into Evansville are closed. This is no accident, nor was it done without expense. The fill across the Illinois bottoms was built by the State on land jointly purchased by Phillips Township and the Harmony Way Bridge Co., then owners of the bridge.

In speaking of high water, it is true that when this is the only means of crossing the Wabash there is an increase in traffic which means an increase in revenue, but from the standpoint of the retiring of bonds it also means an additional expense which far offsets the benefits. As an example, during the high water of this spring it was necessary that the bridge spend $18,756 to prevent the river's cutting to the west enough to endanger the bridge structure. This same has been true during all of the former high waters since 1943. This problem is not a result of malmanagement; it is a result of the river's tendency to cut off its west bank. This tendency became apparent soon after the bridge was built and even before the bridge was open to traffic it was necessary that a land pier be converted into a river pier.

Few realize that the tax bill of the commission is $11,500, that the insurance is $5,000. Frankly, few people have any idea as to the amount of money involved in the operation and maintenance of a toll bridge; it is not a matter of just paying the collectors and the light bill.

The bridge budget, which is submitted to the engineer and to the trustee for approval at the first of the year was shown to us and is as follows: Operating expense, collector's salaries, light, heating, uniforms, etc., $29,586. Maintenance expense as set up this year was $25,710. General and administration expense, including commissioner's salaries, bridge manager's salary, salaries for bookkeeping, auditing expenses, trustees, and fiscal agent, fee for consultant, advertising, taxes, insurance, etc., $42,910, making a total for this year of $102,756.58. This is not a typical budget as in the maintenance expense there is included two items of $8,060.58 and $15,000 which were owed to contractors for work done last year, representing an expenditure that depends entirely on what the river does to the west bank, and how much the commission is forced to do in the preservation of the bridge to keep it in an operating condition.

Since the White County Bridge Commission took over the bridge in 1941:

Bonds paid	$367,000.00
Spent for river maintenance	562,965.15
On deposit with banks and trustee	60,597.01
Total spent aside from regular maintenance and operations	990,562.16
Total income	1,606,596.10
Total as above	990,562.17
Total operations and regular maintenance from June 13, 1941, through June 30, 1950 [1]	616,562.17
Average operations and regular maintenance per year	68,448.33
Average per month	5,704.02

[1] In this figure is included collector's salaries, taxes, interest, insurance, painting the bridge, auditors, commissioner's salaries, and supplies—in fact all of the expenses aside from river maintenance and the retiring of bonds.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I would like to call attention to the fact that there is absolutely nothing comparable to title 5 in the Kunkel substitute, in view of what the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] just said.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the committee a question with reference to page 23, section 408 (a) of the Spence bill? It provides there:

Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of section 403 of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision—

And so on. Then, if you will turn back to page 17, you will see what section 403 is. It says:

It shall be unlawful, regardless of any obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver, or in the regular course of business or trade, to buy or receive, any material or service—

And may I comment there, that term would include labor services—or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this title or of any regulation, order, or requirement issued thereunder, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

I come from an industrial area in Pittsburgh, and we in Pittsburgh do not like blanket injunctions. We do not like injunctions that can be issued even without somebody coming up and giving the reason why, and without restriction as to number or method of issuance. In fact, we do not like injunctions at all.

Now, if there is a labor organization, for example, that would simply solicit its members in person or through its publication to take certain actions which they believe under the Constitution they have a right to do to obtain a good contract through the principles of collective bargaining, how far does this injunctive power go in preventing such action? What are the limits on this injunction power, how many people can be covered? Does this provision in any way limit or exclude blanket injunctions, or, as we have called them, yellow-dog contracts? Or, if you once sign such a contract, then you cannot assert any rights whatever, whether labor or management?

Mr. MULTER. May I answer the gentleman briefly?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MULTER. This provision is the identical provision we found in the controls during World War II. I think you will recall that the courts in interpreting that said you cannot enjoin anybody to work. You cannot issue an injunction against anyone to compel them to go to work and remain on the job if they refuse to work. You must read it in connection with the intent of the act, as far as section 403 is concerned. If anybody attempts to violate the price-control provisions, or any other provision, you must be in a position to move in and stop it before the damage is done.

Mr. FULTON. Then, why do you have the word "service" in section 403, if it refers just to price control, rather than matters that have to do with employment?

Mr. MULTER. There is a volume of adjudicated cases that came about during World War II which interpret and restrict this language, and that is why we tried to use language that had already been interpreted by the court instead of going out and writing new language which would require a new interpretation by the courts.

Mr. FULTON. The committee means by this bill that in peacetime, which we now are in, although there is a crisis at hand, that in these times of peace, you are to then invoke war controls for labor, service, and employment?

Mr. MULTER. I mean to say that if we must invoke controls, price controls, wage controls, and other controls we ought to go all out and make them enforceable.

Mr. FULTON. Does that include having controls such as the President had put in the railroad bill that he once submitted here, to put people in the Army if they failed to agree to certain terms of employment? And, secondly, would this provision cause the issuance of blanket injunctions even without service individually on individual members, for example, of a labor organization?

Mr. MULTER. I am afraid I am not in position to answer the gentleman's question; but certainly, if railroad transportation is necessary in order to transport vital materials that are needed in Korea or anywhere else in connection with this all-out effort that we are embarking upon, that we have got to go all out.

Mr. FULTON. I am sorry that there are not specific provisions in this Spence bill for protection for labor and management in legitimate negotiations, for collective bargaining, and for new contracts that are entered into by such legitimate means.

Mr. MULTER. If it is not here, let us put it in.

Mr. FULTON. I agree.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina brought out an important point. I am sorry that no member of the committee momentarily at the table could answer his question regarding the purpose of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] in title 5. I believe, however, he will find that it was not the purpose of the author to change the provisions of the Taft-Hartley bill, and that the import of the title is not as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] fears. It confirms the wisdom of the suggestion by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] that we come back to the original bill which did receive the consideration of the Committee on Banking and Currency and which conveys some powers that are desperately needed.

It was suggested a while ago by the gentleman from Indiana that the emergency needs were not shown. A reading of the committee hearings will show, however, that Mr. Symington, Secretary Sawyer, and others stated that these powers are required, and they are required at once. I see no value in our speculating very much over failure to use the word "emergency." There are technical implications and certain legal meanings are involved. Just one consideration, for example: Never before in human history has a nation proceeded as we are now proceeding in defense of an area, a spot of earth, under the mandate of an international organization, the United Nations; and there, again, are certain legal implications. We have at our command now the help, though it is small, of other nations; and 48 other nations have officially aligned themselves with us in resisting the aggression of the North Koreans. For us to say we are involved in a war rather than a police action at this stage might carry some grave misunderstandings internationally. Mr. Symington said as much in his statement.

I do agree, however, and I believe the mood of the House is just that, with the point of the speech of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] to the effect that this is a grave hour, and that we must make our decisions with that in mind is correct. We believe that an emergency in the usual sense in which the word is used is upon us.

Mr. Symington further said that while he regards it technically as a police action it is one phase of a war. He also expressed this thought, and while it is repetition of things that have been said before I say it for emphasis, that the best hope for peace is for us to take vigorous action and to grant powers that would ordinarily be of an emergency character. The best hope of preventing a global war is to prepare ourselves and to have a larger mobilization of forces. Executive powers so sweeping must be carefully defined. They must be adequate but, Mr. Chairman, we must proceed in the spirit of the bipartisan policy that has characterized defense measures. I am sure that progress has been made today in that very sphere of action. This legislation must represent the contribution of the minority as well as the majority.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McCONNELL. I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman in yielding to me at this time. He raised one point I would like to pursue just a little further here. He stated that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], or whoever is the author of this bill, had no intention of repealing the Taft-Hartley law. Let us assume that is correct.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. That is my impression. He will speak for himself.

Mr. McCONNELL. Let us assume that is correct. What is the purpose of title V? I have talked to Members on both sides of the aisle, men who disagree with me as far as the philosophy of government is concerned, also as far as my labor views are concerned, men of decidedly different viewpoints, and I discover in talking with them that there is general dissatisfaction with title V. That being the case, what was the purpose of title V? With whom did the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] consult before it was written, or, perhaps putting it another way, who wrote title V and what was the purpose in writing it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am sorry I cannot answer that question. It was only in response to the question asked by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] regarding the committee bill that I rose to point out that the committee has not had an opportunity to act upon Mr. SPENCE's bill. In the interest of precise legislation I wanted to point out that the title V he discussed appears in the Spence substitute and not the committee bill. Many of us prefer the committe bill, feeling still the urgency for action on the price and wage front, feeling that the two must be geared together to some extent. I have no great difference of opinion with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] on major policy. I share his feeling of urgency on that score.

Mr. McCONNELL. Of course, this provision is not in the Kunkel bill, referring to title V. It is the new Spence bill.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Yes. May I say at this point that I have asked our staff to prepare an outline that can be set out in parallel columns—it will be in the RECORD in the morning if the House grants that permission—showing what each of these measures, including the Deane substitute, provides with reference to each of these major subjects. I think that should be helpful in the consideration of this bill tomorrow.

Mr. McCONNELL. The gentleman realizes that under title V the President would be empowered to go to great lengths in dealing with labor and management. Has that general thought or idea been considered when these provisions were written?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. No, that was not considered. The gentleman is correct if he assumes there was no consideration given by the committee of that matter. That is correct.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLE of California. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas that in making objection to subdivision (b) of section 303, relating to the acquisition of critical and strategic minerals and metals, I did not object to the Government's acquisition of foreign minerals and metals. I think we should get all we can from that source. What I was saying is, I believe that the provisions of that subsection are more limited than the existing law for the same purpose.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I thank the gentleman for that clarification.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I would like to ask a question of the gentleman, calling his attention to sections 402 (a) and (b). I wonder whether the gentleman can tell us whether it is intended by section 402 that the fees for any of the professions are covered under this section.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Is the gentleman speaking now about the Spence substitute?

Mr. YATES. Yes. The section provides that the President may issue regulations or orders—

(1) Establishing a ceiling or ceilings on the price, rental, commission, margin, rate, fee, charge, or allowance paid or received on the sale or delivery or, the purchase or receipt, by or to any person of any material or service.

And then it goes on in subparagraph (2) "establishing a ceiling or ceilings on any salary, wage, or other compensation paid to or received by any person, for any type of employment."

Does that apply to the professions as well?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I had not intended to discuss the Spence substitute, and I do not want to undertake to speak for the gentleman. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] wants to speak on that point, I will yield to him.

Mr. MULTER. I think under the general definition of "services" that medical services are included. There are provisions, however, for exemption, and if the President sees fit to exempt them, they will be exempted.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman means, then, that it is within the discretion of the President to exempt certain classes of persons from the provisions of this bill?

Mr. MULTER. Yes.

Mr. YATES. But until the President acts, all types of professions are covered or intended to be covered under the bill; is that right?

Mr. MULTER. That is right.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Under the old OPA bill, in section 302 (C), there was an exemption of newsprint and newspapers from the coverage of the bill.

Mr. MULTER. That is in here too.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am advised that that is included in the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Is that included in the Spence substitute, so that you do not have coverage either, first, of newsprint supply, or, second, licensing of newspapers, so that we have freedom of the press?

Mr. MULTER. That is in there, and they are exempted, including radio broadcasts.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MONRONEY. Not newsprint as such. Newsprint was covered in OPA, but the operation of newspapers was exempt. Under the old OPA Act the price per ton of newsprint, which was a roll of newspaper, was covered by price control, but the cost of a newspaper for sale or advertising or things like that was exempt under the freedom of the press theory of the Constitution.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Does not the gentleman from Oklahoma agree that this is a good illustration of the need of committee consideration of the detailed application of policy to particular industries?

Mr. MONRONEY. This is one of the things that I believe. We are not too far apart between the Kunkel amendment and the Spence substitute, to where a week of hearings and adequate testimony would probably give us a bipartisan bill. If anything is needed in this critical time it is going to be a bipartisan approach to the handling of our economics. We cannot possibly do this job if we are going to have a fight between one side of the aisle and the other side of the aisle, because both Democrats and Republicans are doing business and will be affected by this law, and we need the best law that Congress can possibly write.

Mr. FULTON. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. The table I referred to in debate is as follows:

Comparison of H. R. 9176 and the substitutes offered by Mr. Spence and Mr. Kunkel

	H. R. 9176	Spence amendment	Kunkel amendment
1. Priorities and allocations	Contains proviso against consumer rationing.	Permits consumer rationing	Permits consumer rationing.
2. Power to requisition	Power runs to equipment, supplies, and facilities.	Same as H. R. 9176	Power runs to any article or commodity; uses national security clause found in Selective Service Act.
3. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.	Provides loan guaranties, loans for plan expansion, and right to purchase raw materials.	Same as H. R. 9176	Same as H. R. 9176 plus limited authority given RFC under sec. 5 (d) in last war.
4. Price and wage stabilization	None	Provides for standby general or select controls. Base period month preceding June 25. Contains new title V dealing with settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.	Provides for general freeze. President authorized to create Office of Inflation Control. Price controls cannot be invoked without wage controls. Freeze date 2 weeks prior June 25.
5. Control of credit and commodity speculation.	Provides for control of consumer credit, real estate credit with prohibition against discrimination against conventional lenders. Also provides for control of speculation on commodity exchanges (sec. 411).	Same as H. R. 9176. NOTE.—Printing error, 7 lines omitted from 601.	Consumer installment credit only.
6. General provisions	Contains general provisions relating to the authority granted and provides for termination June 30, 1952.	Contains 2 provisions made necessary because of the addition of wage and price controls.	Comparable to H. R. 9176. Termination date is Mar. 31, 1951.

Deane bill differs from Spence amendment in following aspects:

First. Commodity speculation is eliminated (sec. 411).

Second. Wages are tied to individual commodity. For example, if President set price for steel he would have to establish a wage freeze on those engaged in making steel.

Third. Termination date is June 30, 1951, in regard to price and wage controls.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to see if I can cast some light upon the question raised in reference to title V. The question was posed here as to whether or not title V would interfere with the application of the Taft-Hartley law. It seems to me those who addressed themselves to this subject more or less skated all around it but did not come to grips with the real question.

Of course it does. This whole bill interferes with what we understand as our normal legal rights as citizens. Certainly it interferes to some extent with the right of a man to sell property at the price he names upon his property. It interferes with the rights of labor, as during the last war we had our War Labor Board, and at least we had public opinion as a sanction for the prevention of strikes. The whole purpose of the bill is to substitute the authority of Government in order to keep production going where people are not able to agree upon the terms by which they do business.

Title V refers back to title IV, and title IV refers to services along with the prices of commodities. It does give the Executive the authority to fix prices and fix terms by which people do business, either in rendering service or otherwise.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] in discussing this matter under the rule the other day said it was a question that was coming before us, and further, it would cause us to search our souls as to how far we feel we can or must go.

Others on the floor have stated that if we fix prices on commodities we will have to fix wages because you cannot let one go without controls and control the other. That is the real question we have before us. I am inclined to favor controls across the board, and a roll-back of prices and wages to pre-Korea, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] said here this afternoon, and as the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINNON] said yesterday. But I think we ought not to kid ourselves. It seems sometimes we shy away from the torturing truth which faces us. Of course title V is not in keeping with our labor laws which we have enacted for peacetime, because our labor laws all have as their purpose, whether they have that effect, to encourage collective bargaining and agreement. Whereas this bill proposes to substitute the authority of the Government for voluntary agreement in the interest of continued production. It is the antithesis of our way of life.

Many of us feel that we have had it forced upon us by the menace of communistic aggression. But I only arose to say to you that that is a cold, unvarnished fact. Let us not dodge it. Let us face it. Only when we face that fact can we come to a decision. That was my purpose in rising here. Of course title V is the antithesis of the purpose of our peacetime labor legislaton. I am not going to tell you how it should be drafted. Perhaps it should be considered more in committee. I believe all bills should be well considered. But I just arose here to inform the House that in my judgment as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the answer would be "yes"; it does affect the terms of the Taft-Hartley Act, and also to say that I hope we, as representatives of the people, will face the facts and face the exact issue and not dodge it. Then maybe we can come nearer to arriving at a correct conclusion.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBS. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. It seems to me that the gentleman's analysis of Title V is correct. It is intended to meet a situation other than a normal situation. But in doing so it seems to me the language giving to the President authority to take any action which he may deem appropriate is entirely too broad, and unnecessary to meet even an emergency situation and is the type of carte blanc authority which this Congress should never give to the Executive, and for which we would be justly criticized if we did give it to them.

I wonder if the gentleman does not agree that the language of this bill is entirely too broad and that it also should have the scrutiny and consideration of the gentleman's own committee before we are confronted with such provisions as are incorporated in title V.

Mr. JACOBS. I know I would like to have further study upon it before I would say whether I am for it or not. I will point out that in section 405 this language is found:

> Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform services.

I assume that language was calculated to say, in effect, as the provision in the emergency section of the Taft-Hartley law says, that no individual shall be required to perform any service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, in answer further to the question of the gentleman from New York, the point I am thinking about here is that the language of title IV is not so drafted that it applies to a collective situation as where a union calls a strike, but would apply to individuals. I believe I am correct in that interpretation of the language of title IV, so that the meaning of section 405 might well result in requiring individuals to perform particular service for other persons if you put a sensible interpretation upon the whole of title IV. I do not know just exactly what effect it would have. I am somewhat confused about it, except as to the general purpose, which I believe I have stated correctly. I believe some Members have shyed a little from meeting face to face the real issue, but I think it should be studied a little further. Maybe it will be necessary.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACOBS. I yield.

Mr. MULTER. May I compliment the gentleman for his manner of approach to this very serious problem. Although I had nothing to do with the drafting of title 5, I made a hasty comparison of title 5 with section 1507 of the War Labor Board Act. Obviously, this is an attempt to settle any such labor disputes that may come into being, all within the framework of existing law, including the Taft-Hartley law.

Mr. JACOBS. May I ask you if title 5 is exactly the same language as that under which the War Labor Board was set up during the last war?

Mr. MULTER. It is not the exact language, but I would say the principle is attempted to be enunciated similarly.

Mr. JACOBS. You would say substantially the same?

Mr. MULTER. Substantially, yes.

Mr. JACOBS. Of course, I thought it probably was. I just wanted to say that when we get down to the proposition of where we have to devote our total effort to the war, it means that men who are toolmakers, men who are engaged in manufacturing, who have investments, that we are calling upon them to make some sacrifices to match, in a small way, those of our boys who are tapped on the shoulder and put into uniform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBS. There is not anyone in this House, and there is not any constituent back home who likes it, but it is a condition that is forced upon us. It is trite to say so, but as long as I favor taking a boy from his home and putting him in uniform, I am not going to be squeamish about saying to a fellow, "You must stay on this vital job," or say to a man who owns a factory or a facility, "You must devote it to the war effort," or in saying to a man who makes a large profit, "60 percent of this total effort is devoted to the war, so that we are going to take 60 percent of the national income to pay for this war as we go." I am not going to be squeamish about that. I do not like it but can someone show me how we can avoid it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to proceed for just a minute.

In order to take up where we left off with the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], may I ask a question? On page 26, at the bottom of the page, is that not the place where newspapers, periodicals, and other printed material, as well as radio facilities are eliminated from controls under the Spence bill?

Mr. MULTER. That is the language I had in mind when I answered your question, when I said they were permanently exempted from control under the Spence substitute.

Mr. FULTON. Under the Spence substitute it is not intended to control the sales price of daily or weekly newspapers, either at news stands or by mail, wholesale or retail, nor is the bill to control the price of advertising of any kind?

Mr. MULTER. Nor to motion pictures, periodicals, or books.

Mr. KUNKEL. And if the gentleman will yield, it is also in the Kunkel bill spelled out at greater length.

(Mr. BATTLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Chairman, as we debate the economic safeguards needed to back up our boys on the battlefield, I am sure we all have the same objective in mind—the objective of gearing our economy for the greatest production to help keep the fighting in Korea from spreading into world war III, and to help finish the job of winning the peace that was never completed after World War II.

Mr. Chairman, the main lesson in controls that we learned the hard way in World War II is the interdependence of one economic factor upon another. It is impossible to control one segment of our economy without throwing the whole system out of kilter. For example, a policy of priorities and allocations without price control is an open invitation to inflation and economic disaster. Likewise, the price of pork should not be controlled unless the price of corn which the hogs eat is also controlled, and so on.

The safest estimate of this international crisis is that we face a long, drawn-out fight for our existence. Russia is determined to dominate the world one way or another. Her tactics in Korea show the world that she is willing to do it by armed aggression if she cannot accomplish it by insidious infiltration. We face an all-out war if Russia goes much further, or we face the temptation of false security when we win temporary victories. They are equally dangerous and we must be prepared to meet either contingency.

As long as American blood is being shed, the least we should do is to make an all-out effort on the economic front to back up our boys on the fighting front. We should do everything possible to eliminate war profiteering and prevent inflation. Every segment of our society should share the burden of controls equally. Less essential works should be postponed, production increased, critical materials stock-piled or substitutes developed and machinery set up to adjust inequalities.

In order to keep our economy sound, a pay-as-we-go policy should be adopted immediately. We have a debt of nearly $264,000,000,000 already and we must not lose the peace by ruining our economy. This would mean a Communist victory too. The only chance we have of avoiding an economic disaster is to pay as we go. This will necessitate the raising of taxes to meet the demands. In addition to being the soundest policy, it would not be fair to ask our boys to fight a war and then return home to carry the brunt of the war debt.

This all-out program will take courage. There will be inconveniences. There will be pitfalls. But the courage we will need is small besides the amount of courage our boys making their brave stand in Korea must muster. And our inconveniences will be trifling compared to theirs. We should not fear all-out mobilization, for it will be a source of strength. The gravest threats to our freedom in this crisis are not Government regimentation and controls—but military defeat abroad and inflation at home. We must be prepared to suffer a little discomfort or a great defeat. When we see the issues clearly, the choice is made for us. Mr. Chairman, I urge Congress to meet this emergency with courage and conviction—with an all-out effort on the military, economic, and diplomatic fronts to win the peace.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the members of the committee who are bringing these various bills, amendments, and substitutes here. I have tried to examine them, and as far as I can find out there is one group that is not being controlled and that will not be controlled unless the criminal penalties of these bills are different from what I have been able to find so far.

In the Military Defense Assistance Act of 1949, which became law last fall, was a provision I wrote which I called the "anti-5 percent" or the "anti-deep-freeze" provision. It is as follows:

SEC. 412. Whoever offers or gives to anyone who is now or in the past 2 years has been an employee or officer of the United States any commission, payment, or gift, in connection with the procurement of equipment, materials, or services under this act, and whoever, being or having been an employee or officer of the United States in the past 2 years, solicits, accepts, or offers to accept any such commission, payment, or gift, shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment for not to exceed 3 years, or both.

I ask the members of the committee: Is there any such provision in the Spence bill or in any of the pending amendments?

Mr. MULTER. I do not think I caught the gentleman's entire question.

Mr. VORYS. What I want to know is this: We are talking about the people being ahead of the Congress. I will tell you one group of people who are ahead of the Congress, those who are swarming down here planning to make money out of this dreadful emergency through the purchase and sale of influence; that is a group that is ahead of the Congress, and I think we ought to catch up with them.

When I attempted to put this penalty provision into the military assistance law last fall the administration opposed it in the committee and in conference, I find general penalty provisions, in these present bills and amendments something like this: "Whoever violates any provision or regulation shall be fined and imprisoned" and so forth, I do not think that the Administration, based on the view they took of this section 412 I have just read, which is in the law now but solely applicable to mutual defense assistance are going to have any regulations that prohibit 5-percenters and deep-freeze deals, I do not think they are going to approve a drastic penalty which will prohibit the sale and the purchase of influence through commissions, payments of gifts by those now in Government or those who are selling the influence they accumulated while they were in Government.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. JACOBS. Would the gentleman also agree with an amendment such as I offered to one of the security bills which was adopted in this House some time ago, that the statute of limitations should not run as to any person holding an office or a position in government until he is out of the government?

Mr. VORYS. I would certainly agree to that; and I confess that I am somewhat amazed that these bills and amendments which purport to put controls on the general public do not, as far as I have been able to find out, provide any controls upon those who try to buy and sell influence. We are, therefore, likely to find out some time later that this sort of thing has been going on again in connection with this present effort. I ask the committee whether they have such a provision and whether they would be willing to consider such an amendment?

Mr. MULTER. I think that the bill as written, the Spence substitute, is broad enough to cover that situation. Just as in World War II when we had prohibitions in war contracts against sales, commissions, and other payments or the use of influence to get contracts, we had similar provisions there to prohibit that kind of practice, section 402 (a) subchapter I on page 12 is broad enough to permit the making of such orders, rules, and regulations.

Mr. VORYS. I may state to the gentleman that the statute which specifically prohibits the use of influence by prohibiting gifts, payments, compensation, and so forth, was opposed by the administration; and I do not think that such regulations will be issued.

Mr. MULTER. I think there is a much different situation now and I think we will treat with them the same as we did in World War II if it comes to making unconscionable profits or profits they are not entitled to, or trying to sell influence under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS. I merely wanted to point out that the scandal we had last fall of the 5 percenters and deep freezes came about because there was no criminal law to prevent it.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out that at least twice today and I think perhaps once yesterday the statement was made that there is no immediate need for the enactment of the bill as reported by our committee. The point was attempted to be made that there is nothing in our economy today which requires an allocation of matériel or raw materials. During the examination of Mr. Symington before our committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] asked Mr. Symington there very pertinent and important questions:

Mr. WOLCOTT. What power would you expect to use immediately?

Mr. SYMINGTON. One power we would have to use imediately, if we are going to back up the military people, is the right to allocate steel. Another power we would have to use immediately would be the right to allocate aluminum. There is not enough steel or aluminum to handle the new military orders coming up unless allocation is provided promptly.

* * * * *

Mr. WOLCOTT. You expect to use the powers in title I, "Priorities and allocations," in respect to steel, aluminum, and perhaps some others?

Mr. SYMINGTON. Definitely some others.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Immediately?

Mr. SYMINGTON. Yes; we would have to use them right away.

That should set at rest once and for all any argument against the need having been established for the immediate enactment of the bill as reported by our committee.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my very good friend the distinguished and able gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] has just mentioned the question of steel, which the committee report—page 5—refers to as the backbone of our economy both in time of peace and certainly in time of war. The report refers to the national capacity for steel production—and the picture is quite a favorable one—but it does not mention—and I do hope it has not been ignored—the situation regarding the source of steel, which is iron ore. You cannot make steel out of any substitute; there is only one source and that is iron ore. You can produce synthetic rubber, you can produce synthetic gasoline, and other synthetic items of strategic value, but you cannot find a substitute or a synthetic article for iron ore.

The iron-ore situation in the United States is serious. This, briefly, is the picture. I have the honor to represent in Congress the most important iron-ore district in the world—the Mesabi Iron Range of northeast Minnesota, which has produced 75 percent of all this Nation's iron ore for the last 50 years. Unfortunately, the high-grade ore of Mesabi is not unlimited. According to a 1946 estimate of the United States Bureau of Mines, there was only 992,000,000 tons of Mesabi ore remaining. The easily accessible high-grade open-pit ore is rapidly being depleted at the present time at the rate of about 65,000,000 tons a year. At the present rate of consumption, the Mesabi iron ore will be exhausted by 1960, or if we accept the most optimistic reports it may last until 1965. With a 10- to 15-year reserve of iron ore remaining, I say that the Congress must consider the development of new sources of iron and steel.

Iron ore mining cannot be expanded overnight so far as capacity is concerned. In view of the importance of steel, in view of the fact that today the shortage of iron ore is so serious, I wish to remind the committee that we in Congress must make a decision regarding our policy as to the future source of iron ore. Shall we allow ourselves to become completely dependent upon Canadian and Venezuelan iron ores, as has been suggested and contemplated or shall we take steps to develop a source of iron and steel within our own continental borders which will strengthen our national economy and give us a security in time of emergency?

Fortunately, we have an unlimited amount of a hard iron formation, known as taconite, which can supply our iron and steel needs for a thousand years if Federal assistance is given for its development. Under section 302 of the bill the President is given power to make loans for the development of technological processes in the production of essential materials. May I ask the members of the committee if it is in accord with the intent of that section that the President have the authority to give loans—long-term loans—let us say on a 30-year basis, to companies that today have processes which are commercially feasible to produce high-grade iron ore out of this taconite rock.

The big problem in taconite development is that the amounts of equity capital required are so enormous, comparatively speaking, that no single company today can get into the taconite field and finance the enormous investment required to create the necessary new plants. Taconite production is not mining like that involved in production of direct-shipping ores—it is a manufacturing process. Taconite must first be quarried, crushed, and ground up fine as flour, the silicate washed out and from the powder, iron ore concentrate is extracted. My question is, Will section 302 of the measure under consideration permit the granting of loans for taconite development? Will the gentlemen of the Banking Committee answer the question? Will this authorize the President to make the necessary long-term loans to companies to develop taconite?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think there is no doubt about that. I think in the discretion of the President that those loans could be made.

Mr. BLATNIK. I appreciate the favorable answer on this very important point, and I appreciate the opportunity given me to call it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLATNIK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD. I know the gentleman's sincere and long-standing interest in trying to find a suitable supply of ore for our steel production, particularly his interest in the St. Lawrence waterway, which would provide us with an adequate supply of iron ore. It seems to me that perhaps it might be cheaper and quicker for us to embark upon that program in conjunction with or ahead of the program that he is suggesting here this afternoon. I would like to have his reaction on that.

Mr. BLATNIK. My answer is that both are essential. The taconite development is a slow process and will take years before you can produce substantial amounts, such as forty and fifty million tons a year. The construction of the St. Lawrence waterway and the development of taconite run hand in hand. They complement each other and together they would insure a future supply of iron ore and would prolong the high-grade ore reserves we now have remaining. Both of them are essential, and I am heartily in favor of embarking on both the St. Lawrence waterway and taconite development immediately.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLATNIK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand then that a process which is going to take years and years to develop, as stated by the author of this substitute, to be envisioned and embodied within the provisions to which he referred, is intended to be covered in a proposition like this?

Mr. BLATNIK. I am not speaking of the process. The taconite manufacturing is already available. The process is here. What I am saying is just that the capacity to produce steel cannot be enlarged overnight. A taconite plant is a matter of gigantic proportions, requiring a heavy initial capital investment. I said it would take years to produce taconite concentrated in sufficient amounts by this process. I am talking about an annual volume of fifty or seventy-five million tons instead of five or ten million, which can be developed in the very near future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we should have immediate, all-out mobilization, military and economic. I favor right now, price and wage controls and elimination of profits from war. If a bill can be adequately and carefully shaped up in this debate to achieve those objectives I will vote for it. But I doubt that it can be done in the present parliamentary situation. If it is not done the committee should immediately undertake the drafting and presentation of such legislation. Proper steps now may preclude a third world war and we should strengthen our economy and our armed forces now, not later. In undertaking the limited objectives which will probably be achieved in the present legislation, and the stronger objectives which I hope will come about with dispatch, I feel that a "watchdog committee" should be established from the Congress; and if I am recognized for the purpose I hope to offer the following amendment as a new section at the end of the bill:

A joint committee consisting of five Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker and five Members of the Senate to be appointed by the President of the Senate shall be set up to assist in the proper functioning of the powers delegated and regulations and orders issued under this act. This committee shall choose a chairman from among its members and may sit at such times and places as the committee shall decide. In order to assist in the effective and orderly prosecution of the defense and other programs set up under this act and to provide recourse in the Congress for citizens feeling aggrieved or who have suggestions to offer for the improvement of any programs set up under this act, this committee shall hear petitions from citizens whether representing industry, labor, agricultural or other groups or individuals.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the committee, in cleaning up this question regarding newspapers, periodicals, and books, if they would look at page 24, section 214, of the Kunkel amendment. You will find there a specific statement excluding the rates, for example, of common carriers, public utilities, insurance, persons engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio broadcasting station, and also rates charged for any professional services. My point is this: Why does not the Committee adopt that section and put it into the Spence bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman from Florida will yield, in answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may I say that the language referred to there is the exact language that was in the old OPA bill. It is likewise part of the Kunkel substitute and part of the Deane substitute. It is not included in this legislation.

Mr. FULTON. Will the gentleman put it in the legislation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Insofar as the term "commodity" is concerned it does not appear in the legislation, but I am working now on the draft of an amendment to offer to the chairman here to include the words "service or utility" in place of the term "commodity" and striking out section 1 in the proviso. That will adequately take care of the situation.

Mr. FULTON. The Spence amendment at page 26 in subsection (d) (1) in respect to newspapers, periodicals, and so forth specifically states that no license shall be required, but it does not go further and say that the bill shall not control the rates.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would insert in section 703 a new section (c), in the bill known as the Spence substitute. That is on page 40.

Mr. FULTON. Will the gentleman be kind enough to submit that amendment to me in advance of offering as I am interested in it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am having it drafted at the present time and am going to offer it to the chairman.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. As I understand it, the gentleman from Florida is in support of what is known as the Baruch plan?

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. As I understand that plan, I am very emphatically for it. I think we are making a very serious mistake in considering only halfway measures here today.

(Mr. BENNETT of Florida asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. MONRONEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, tomorrow we are going to vote on this most important bill. I think from the debate today and probably from the debate tomorrow you are going to find a most troublesome, perplexing, and complicated parliamentary situation with amendments pending to both of the substitutes offered, with the supporters of those bills claiming that their bill, and theirs alone, will do this or that, that their bill is really the one that will do this over-all freeze and control wages and prices, and everything will be rosy if we pass their bill.

I have had a good many years experience in price-control legislation, and I only wish it could be that simple. I wish that when you finished writing the bill, whether it was in your own office or in committee or on the floor, you could say, "Well, we finished that, and prices will be held stable and there will be no inflation."

Unfortunately, as my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE] knows, this is a most complicated economy. An over-all freeze or anything else that you have is going to find very difficult going as you get down to the end of the price line. You can freeze the price of ice cream and fluid milk, but you might find that the freeze on ice cream will provide a better profit for the milk dealer than on the fluid milk, so the fluid milk goes into ice cream and does not go into the bottles of the babies of America.

You can go down the line and find that the steel you might freeze in price is finding its way into kiddie cars and missing the harvesters or the plows that are needed for America.

The one thing I have been trying to focus on today—I do not know whether we will have any luck or not—is that I believe the President's program does not go far enough. I compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Kentucky on trying to seek the answer, but I just wonder if we can write the kind of a bill we need on the floor of the House. I wonder if we can do it in our offices.

I remember when a price-control bill, which was the counterpart of the bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] was offered by my good friend, Congressman ALBERT GORE, of Tennessee. It was, I believe, a great bill in 1941. Gentlemen, the year is 1950 and our experience with price control has been seven long, tough, hard years of trial and error. I believe there are problems we have discovered that go beyond that bill which we had in 1941.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. All I would like to say is that I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Oklahoma in his observations as to the difficulties you encounter when you have price control. I would not offer a bill embodying price control and rationing and wage freezes at this time if I were not sure that within the next 2 or 3 months it would be absolutely essential for the country to adopt those procedures. If we are going to have to do it sooner or later, then we should freeze the economy as much as we can at a time when the prices, particularly in the channels of distribution, are determined by natural economic causes.

I feel with every week or month that we let go by it is made more impossible to do the job which we should do when we do have a natural economy. I felt that the Gore bill was too late. I might say to the gentleman from Oklahoma also, who I know supported that bill vigorously, that the basic part on price controls and rationing in my proposal is taken directly from the bill which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] introduced at that time, and which received a great deal of study, and a great deal of debate. So it is nothing new or hasty and it is nothing that has been drawn out of a hat.

Mr. MONRONEY. I agree with the gentleman completely. I respect and admire him for his courageous stand. I believe if the House itself today on both sides of the aisle in a nonpolitical way could say, "We have before us the Baruch plan for price control," and vote on it and be through with it, that we would pass it by a great majority.

But there is no Baruch price-control plan before us. It is an idea, and in trying to take that idea and put it into legislative language and put it into law so it does not blot out this industry or that industry or distort a situation or freeze anything at below the cost of production, perhaps in our farm economy, I believe the House would be glad to go along if it were as simple as passing an idea. If we could resolute in favor of vigorous controls and against profiteering and establish a war economy and get on with the job—that we would have support on both sides of the aisle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that we dare not wait 2 or 3 or 4 months. But I wonder if we are doing the economy of our country, which is such a delicate, complicated economy, a favor by denying perhaps a week of hearings or maybe 10 days of hearings by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

I wonder if we would not be in better shape if we could come in as a united Committee on Banking and Currency. Other committees are dealing with the war effort and they come here united. You never see a fight between the two sides of the Committee on Military Affairs, and not very often do you see disagreement between the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But this affects the progress of the war just as much as perhaps the draft and other military legislation.

Mr. KUNKEL. We spent 4 months studying the original price-control bill, and by the time we got through we were still in the same difficulties that we were when we started. I do not believe any committee of this House or the other body or any other legislative assembly at any time is going to be able to bring to the floor a bill which will operate perfectly. Any bill that you bring in has to embody a framework and on idea. Then it is up to the President to get an administrator who will try to carry forward that idea within that framework of the authorization which is passed by the Congress. I do not think a week's study of a subject as complex as price control would mean a thing. But I think the dislocation in prices which might occur during the week, and then another week perhaps on the floor, and then some more time that might elapse might prove disastrous and cause us to lose the advantage we have in doing these things when we have a natural determination of prices such as we have at the present time.

Mr. MONRONEY. I wonder perhaps if that does not illustrate what I have in mind. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in our colloquy yesterday admitted that his bill had absolutely no rent control in it; and that we go back to the ineffective rent-control bill of peacetime without any other controls. We face as much of a problem on the side of rent control as we do pricewise on other things.

When I asked him why rent control was not in there, he said it was too difficult to write in at this time. The chairman of the Labor Committee stood on this floor and criticized the substitute offered by Mr. Spence. I asked him about the labor provisions in your bill, and he had not studied those.

Here is a big segment of this picture that the chairman of the Labor Committee has not even observed. He criticized the Spence bill, but he has not read the other.

I have great respect for this House of Representatives, for its rules, for its procedure, for its study of these problems. I just hope that in our effort to give the President what every Member wants to give him; that is, enough power to meet this emergency and crush Communist aggression wherever it breaks out; in our eagerness and zeal to do that, I hope that we do not pass legislation that within 2 or 3 weeks we will find we are getting less production instead of more production, and that we are getting more luxuries and fewer necessities; that we are blotting out the low-cost production that the working man needs, for socks and shoes and overalls, and getting silk shirts. That is the thing I am talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. LYLE. I think the gentleman and I will agree that ill-considered legislation controlling the economic life of the Nation, without proper machinery, will result in considerably more confusion than stability, and more harm than good; that it is beneath the dignity and power of this body to legislate off the cuff when we have a bill before us that the President of the United States says is sufficient at the moment to meet the emergency. We ought to pass that and then go into a series of hearings so that we may give intelligent thought to this great problem.

Mr. MONRONEY. I thank the gentleman. I know that prices are going higher. I know the mistakes we made in World War II when we let the thing get away from us and broke the line by 20 percent before we brought it back by the act of October 12.

I also wonder, after seeing the bill that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], in a very patriotic effort, has offered, and has changed two or three times since the bill was introduced; that the distinguished chairman, after he came in with his substitute, has changed it two or three times; and there are dozens of amendments that will be offered tomorrow that may be accepted by the authors of the amendments or the committee of the House.

I just wonder if we realize that we are putting these rules that we are so casually considering, around the neck of American industry and affecting all of the far-flung business around this country—I wonder of the fact that we are going to have an elevation of our prices in the next week.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. Does the gentleman mean to say the chairman's substitute was amended this afternoon?

Mr. MONRONEY. I mean to say it will probably have amendments written into it, just as your distinguished leader will accept some amendments to his bill, without committee consideration and without discussion around the table.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I would like to reiterate to the gentleman that I think all the mistakes he has pointed out will occur, and these problems will occur under any kind of legislation like this that is ever passed by the House. I think the real problem that every Member of the House should face up to in voting on this bill is this: Are you convinced in your mind that these controls are going to be needed in the reasonably near future? If they feel that they are going to be needed in the reasonably near future, then I urge you to vote in favor of a bill along the lines of my bill. If they feel they are not going to be needed, then I think that the gentleman's argument about time and millstones around the neck of the economy obtain in full force.

Mr. MONRONEY. In answer to that I may say that our whole experience of 5 years with price control, left one thing conclusive that no one can dispute: Roll-backs are almost impossible. When material gets in the pipeline from the manufacturer through the long chain of distribution to the retailer it makes it impossible to effectuate a fair roll-back. With all due regard to what the gentleman is trying to do with this period of June 1950 if this stand-by power is invoked, say as of October 15, it would be a complete impossibility to reflect at the retail price line in any given situation, the price prevailing between June 1 and June 30. It is most fantastic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONRONEY. It is almost an impossibility. I think the gentleman will agree with me. The retailer has paid the prices of an advancing market in building his inventory. His inventory of June 30 will have been sold in July and replaced at July prices; his July inventory will be replaced by the August wholesale merchandise, and in October his inventory will reflect September prices. That is the great difficulty of the roll-back provision.

The supply is in the hands of the retailer and you are never going to roll those prices back no matter what law you pass. We are going to have to catch and freeze prices where we find them.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the gentleman will remember, the first draft of my bill contains substantially the present date as the time of the price freeze.

Mr. MONRONEY. It was a mandatory freeze, as I understand it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes; but after talking with Mr. Baruch and other people in whose economic judgment I had a good deal of confidence, naturally when I put the present in I was thinking along the same lines that the gentleman from Oklahoma has just been outlining. They tell me that the main rises which have occurred have been mark-ups in inventory already on hand.

Mr. MONRONEY. My dear sir, I have sat at the buying desk of a very small establishment with my fellow businessman. There is not a day that goes by that they do not get dozens and dozens of price increases at the wholesale level. I think it has been greater at the wholesale level in many lines than at the retail level.

Mr. KUNKEL. But mark-ups that occur on inventories at the wholesale level reach the retail level.

Mr. MONRONEY. Or at the manufacturing level.

Mr. KUNKEL. So that there will not be the substantial squeeze they fear that would occur later if there were to be a roll-back. I agree with the gentleman that if the President lets this go until the 15th of October we probably would have an imposisble situation; but at the same time do not forget that one of the things I am trying to do in this bill is to avoid selective controls which I think are terrible.

Mr. MONRONEY. With that I am in agreement.

Mr. KUNKEL. And I cannot see how you can avoid going into a selective control bill at some later date unless this step is taken immediately and unless the President carries it through, unless it is put into effect within 2 or 3 weeks after the powers are given to him.

Mr. MONRONEY. In conclusion let me make this plea: If the committee gets mixed up tomorrow after the blood runs hot and our blood pressure is up, and we cannot find where this amendment fits into either bill, and we find ourselves in a state of confusion, may I plead with this House to pass the bill that the committee has reported by a vote of 20 to 1; and if we get into that state where neither side nor anyone likes the committee bill, as it has been modified, or changed and amended—and I believe my distinguished Republican friends will agree with me on that—if we find ourselves in that state then let us pass the committee bill and give the President some power to meet this situation, a bill that has been carefully considered, carefully worked out and agreed to by 20 of the 21 members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. We must have some legislation, even if we do not think it goes far enough to suit the need. The bill that the committee has reported should be passed if we canont find an agreement on the other suggestions.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to ask particularly about title V, settlement of labor disputes, in the Spence bill. My questions are directed to the statutory draftsmanship in the main. For example, if you will refer to line 15 on page 30 it will be seen that the language states:

> The President is authorized to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes.

May I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency whether that is not the greatest power ever given to one man in this country. This provision will cover all employment with one man setting the principles without limit, with that one man setting the procedures without limit, and that one man authorizing such action to be taken in employment matters as the one man deems appropriate. How can that question be met? I do not see why that is not giving into somebody's hands complete control of management, labor, and production in this country without restraint.

Mr. SPENCE. The act of 1942 gave the President the same powers. I think the other provisions in there in regard to the present acts and existing laws are reasonable. While the President may fix wages of labor there will be other questions involved. There will be the question of collective bargaining about some things; there will be conciliation and other matters of importance. It does not take away the labor acts already on the books. The settlement of wages could be in the hands of the President. You have got to give the laboring people, however, a chance to present their claims in the future as they have in the past where it does not interfere with this law.

Mr. FULTON. It means that by reenacting this law, with the provision in it on pages 30 and 31, "Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws," that anybody who votes for this bill is voting for reenactment in its present terms of the Taft-Hartley law, which I do not like in its present form.

Mr. SPENCE. They are not voting for the reenactment of any law. It merely refers to the laws on the statute books and which are applicable. This does not repeal any act, it does not reenact any law. It seems to me that is obvious. We do not reenact any other law, we do not repeal any other law. It says that where the law itself does not enter the scope of this act, it shall still remain in effect and shall be operative as it is now.

Mr. FULTON. I think the chairman's statement simply high lights the fact that you are freezing at the present time all labor practices, all collective bargaining practices, and all practices whatever that exist in either labor or management. In lines 21 to 23, on page 30, the Spence bill requires the President to give due regard to the terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective-bargaining practices.

Therefore, if any labor organization wants to try to get further pensions, or a pension plan, or wants to get anything that is beneficial to the members of the union, such as better working conditions, those working conditions are frozen in the North, in the South, in the East, and in the West. The Spence bill unfortunately freezes social gains, as well as inflationary factors. Why does the Spence bill contain the power to freeze social progress which have no bearing whatever on inflation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. This Spence bill on page 30, line 24, requires that the collective bargaining practices must be consistent with the stabilization policies established under this act. As a matter of draftsmanship you are therefore saying in one place in the bill that you freeze at the present prevailing bargaining practice; and just below you say that they must be consistent with the stabilization policies established under this act.

Mr. SPENCE. There is no freeze of wages in the substitute I introduced.

Mr. FULTON. I am reading from the gentleman's substitute which says that due regard shall be given to terms established by prevailing collective-bargaining practices. From what the Chairman says, I think everyone in the country should be on notice that Mr. Denham will be in charge as he always has been. In addition, there will not be any possibility of anyone going back to the practice of hiring halls, and I am sure that many of the men on our merchant ships do not want that practice stabilized and put into permanent law in peacetime. In addition to that, in the Typographers Union, the conditions of work and practices that they have been complaining about, are by this act put into permanent law and continued for peacetime purposes indefinitely.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. On page 15 of the Spence substitute, line 17, there is this language:

> No action shall be taken under authority of this title with respect to salaries, wages, or other compensation which is inconsistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1942, as amended.

Should that not be 1947?

Mr. SPENCE. 1947.

Mr. FULTON. That is a good point, because you have also brought out by your quotation that the bill freezes at the minimum. So, whatever the minimum standards are at the time of this particular bill, they are required to be frozen right at that point. As this bill is written, management and labor cannot go into social benefits that might be negotiated by collective bargaining otherwise than under this act.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 9176, had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 676)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the obligation of the Government of the United States of America as a member of the International Labor Organization, I transmit herewith, for the enactment of legislation or such other action as the Congress may consider appropriate, authentic texts of a convention—No. 89—concerning night work of women employed in industry—revised 1948—and a convention—No. 90—concerning night work of young persons employed in industry—revised 1948—both of which were adopted by the International Labor Conference at its thirty-first session, held at San Francisco June 17 to July 10, 1948.

I transmit also the report of the Secretary of State with regard to the conventions, together with a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Labor to the Secretary of State regarding those conventions. Attention is invited to the recommendation of the interested departments and agencies of the executive branch of the Government, as set forth in the above-mentioned letter, that no Federal legislative action, except with respect to the District of Columbia, be taken.

Under the constitution of the International Labor Organization there is also contemplated appropriate action by a member in respect of territories for which it has responsibility for the conduct of international relations. I am, accordingly, requesting the Secretary of the Interior to transmit the above-mentioned conventions to the governments of Alaska, Guam, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands for the enactment of legislation or other action. In addition, I am requesting the Secretary of the Navy to take such action as may be appropriate with respect to American Samoa and the Territory of the Pacific Islands.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1950.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LYNCH (at the request of Mr. MULTER) was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on tomorrow, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

THE PRESENT ECONOMIC CRISIS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I laid before the House what I thought should be done about the present economic crisis. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the Missoulian, of Missoula, Mont., and sundry letters and telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The matters referred to follow:

MISSOULA, July 25, 1950.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: To our great alarm the prices of meat, bread, sugar, and many other foods have been steadily rising in the city of Missoula. My husband is a veteran attending the University of Montana under the GI bill. We have two babies and have had to struggle these past 2 years to stay in school. We feel that there is no justification for prices to go sky high, or I should say even higher; they were sky high before.

We feel very strongly that controls should be put on prices of foods and on rent. We feel it is our right as voters in Montana to ask you to do what you can to see that controls are put on immediately. We will appreciate your efforts in this direction.

Sincerely,

MRS. ALAN C. VAN HORN.

HELENA, MONT., July 27, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: Isn't it just about time to tromp on someone along the line in an effort to put a stop to this steady rise in prices, especially on food? The prices of meat are prohibitive for the average white-collar worker, particularly the young couples with children.

There is a lot that I don't know about economics, but it does seem that we could stop pampering the farmers for a while with huge subsidies. Most of them have more money than they know what to do with, buying large convertibles for every child in the family and tossing the money around in general. I like to see everyone make a good fair living, but when these greedy, grasping people, worth close to a million, will raise bread 3 cents per loaf, doughnuts (that aren't even worth 40 cents per dozen) to 50 cents per dozen, it makes my blood boil.

It does seem a shame that we have to resort to price control, but evidently a warning from our President does not suffice for some of our so-called Americans. If price control is used, it should go back at least 4 months to be of any help.

We were pleased that you made your usual fine showing in the last election; it certainly shows how you rate with the people of Montana.

Our son-in-law, "Mack" Hughes, is working with Judge Pope in Missoula this summer, and daughter and children are here with us.

Kindest regards and give 'em both barrels on this price situation.

Sincerely,

CTTILIA K. ASHTON.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 31, 1950.

MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge immediate action to adopt Baruch proposal wages-prices.

J. P. WIEBER.

DEER LODGE, MONT., July 26, 1950.

Mr. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Washington, D. C.:

Just a few lines to tell you of food rising prices.

I just got back from town after buying two loaves of bread (from the Safeway store). They raised the price 2 cents on a 20-cent loaf. The local store raised 1 cent per loaf.

I wonder if the Government is going to raise our pension in proportion?

That's why I said in my last letter to you to confiscate all profits to raise our pensions.

Yours truly,

LUKAS DACHS.

P. S.—Besides if you could close all loopholes you could pay all veterans a decent living pension and still have some left. I mean all loopholes of all tax dodgers.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 25, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
Representative from Montana,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to protest the rise in the price of the loaf of bread in Missoula the past 2 days from 19 cents to 22 cents. I feel that this is merely taking advantage of the national crisis and thereby wholly unwarranted. It is certainly too bad that we have to have such unscrupulous businessmen in our country.

I would appreciate your consideration of this matter and would be in favor of rationing of civilian materials if it is necessary.

Thank you for your time.

SHERMAN B. HUBLEY.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 29, 1950.

DEAR SIR: This is a protest against rising food prices. The Government claims there is no justification for the rise. I would like to see prices rolled back to pre-Korean war levels.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. S. T. MELBY,
Housewife.

MISSOULA, MONT., August 1, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: Congratulations on primary victory. No doubt as to further success. Sentiment here for complete wage and price control.

JOHN M. O'CONNOR.

BOZEMAN, MONT., July 31, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. MANSFIELD: This letter is being written to you because of the growing concern in our family over rising food costs specifically and other costs in general. In my opinion there is only one time to hold prices and that is now. In fact, the base period will have to be set prior to the Korean war. We have noted the greatest marked increase in wheat products. Two weeks ago in Bozeman one could get a loaf of bread for 20 cents, now it is 22 cents. A package of hamburger buns 2 weeks ago was 15 cents, now 17 cents. Breakfast rolls have gone up 5 cents a half dozen. Meat and other staples have begun to climb. In none of these products do we have a shortage. To the contrary, we have a definite surplus of wheat products. The only conclusion one can come to is that voluntary controls will not work. Businesses are going to increase prices while they can. That is human nature. I am sure they are genuine patriotic Americans. However, they also look to the Congress to set the pattern of controls during an emergency. I know that something must be done and done quickly.

No one likes controls, but more important, no one likes to create a panic in this country. The economy cannot stand another round of wage and price increases. Wage earners are one of the major groups in this country and they will not stand by while their costs go up and income remains constant. Salary people (in which class I am) are in a much more serious position since there is no chance to bargain for increases. My wife purchased $23 worth of groceries last week which was brought home in a box under one arm. This condition cannot exist very long without serious consequences. Increased taxes on excess profits is not the answer. It is too far around. I would rather pay a 20-percent increase in my personal tax and know that our cost of living will remain constant than to be constantly wondering if my income will be able to meet another price increase.

A few general comments are also in order. Controls must be total this time, not piecemeal. Manpower mobilization is necessary. Skills should be placed where they will do the most good. Also, the individual should have some protection for returning to his former job when he comes back.

If we are successful in reconquering the southern half of Korea, we should push up the entire peninsula. Let's take the initiative this time. I believe world opinion is now fully behind us. We certainly are justified in truly liberating a people.

In closing, may I say that we do hope this price situation is brought under control immediately.

Very truly yours,

G. A. BRYANT.

BUTTE, MONT., July 29, 1950.

Hon. MIKE MANSFIELD,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MIKE: My wife and I, as well as our son, Wallace, were greatly pleased about your well-deserved victory at the primaries here on the 18th. No doubt the results will be as satisfactory to you at the general election; at least we shall do what we can to make them that way.

In addition to expressing our gratification in regard to your renomination, I am impelled to write in regard to the rapidly increasing price of everything sold on the market, not that I feel you require any such information, for we always find you on the right side of all these questions regarding the welfare of the people, but more, perhaps, to just "get something off my chest."

I am sure that any of our citizens that are thinking about our national affairs are greatly disturbed at the recent turn of events. I cannot help but feel that it will get no better until there has been an all-out world war with Russia. Such a thing, in my opinion, means utter ruination of this Nation as a democracy. It is the final showdown between communism and capitalism.

I can recall in the old days when we used to idly predict the coming of this era; it was when we were very active in the labor movement and always thought of our fine employers as the plutocratic class. I doubt, however, if there is one in a hundred of the railroad-labor class that even thinks that way since the communistic doctrine has evolved from the talking stage in world affairs. In other words, we still feel that our way of life under the so-called capitalist domination is the best on this earth.

Such a form of government as we have is, of course, anathematic to everything related to communism, and it seems they are now prepared to use force to eradicate everything that interferes with their despotic desires. And the worst part of my thinking is that eventually they will acquire some measure of success. Not in my time perhaps, but in the lifetime of my sons, likely. This infiltration of our every Government structure, including many of our labor organizations, is something to really worry about. In the event of war we will have great trouble from the few that are members here in our own country.

Now, as to the rapidly increasing prices, it seems to me that Mr. Baruch has a fine idea, provided we go back to a date before the outbreak of this Korean affair. You know and all of us know that a demand for wage increase must follow these other increases; this will cause endless trouble at a time when we require united action. Labor will be branded as traitors and communistic when they make such a demand, but the vendors of our necessities of life go merrily along at their pleasure of soaking the consumer. This is one of the many reasons why we sometimes become impatient with our Government.

Let's not allow them to run everything sky high, then make the "freeze." Every right-thinking American heartily supports the President in his move in Korea because we had endured as much as could be endured if we were to retain a place as a leading world nation. Let us not disrupt this unity by just talking about "control" and ultimately making thousands of millionaires again.

With best wishes, I beg to remain

Sincerely,

J. B. LOVE.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 29, 1950.

DEAR MIKE: I was not opposed in the primary, received a very fine courtesy vote, am continuing to work hard, and now believe that I have a very good chance for election this fall to the State senate. And McGinnis has no chance against you around here re-

House of Representatives

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1950

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Father, who art worthy of more than our highest praise, our deepest love, and our purest devotion, may the hours of this day be radiant in the realization of Thy presence, Thy peace, and Thy power.

May it be the goal of all our aspirations and desires to be one with Thee in spirit and to serve our generation according to Thy holy will.

Grant that in our prayers we may remember more frequently and fervently those who are now on the fields of battle giving themselves so bravely and sacrificially for those treasures of life which we are privileged to enjoy.

May we have the courage to believe that out of the strife and struggles in which the peace-loving nations are engaged there will emerge that which is curative and creative in the building of a better world.

Wilt Thou hasten the coming of that day when all the members of the human family shall be united in the bonds of brotherhood and yield themselves to the kind and kingly sovereignty of the Prince of Peace.

To Thy name we shall give all the glory. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2863. An act to provide for the expansion and disposition of certain national cemeteries.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2160. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize annual and sick leave with pay for commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, to authorize the payment of accumulated and accrued annual leave in excess of 60 days, and for other purposes; and

S. 2591. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to support research and training in arthritis and rheumatism, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, epilepsy and blindness, and other diseases, and for other purposes.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 221]

Abbitt	Granger	Powell
Allen, La.	Hare	Priest
Andresen, August H.	Hedrick	Quinn
Arends	Heller	Riehlman
Boykin	Hinshaw	Rivers
Breen	Irving	Roosevelt
Brehm	Jennings	Sabath
Bulwinkle	Johnson	Sadowski
Burdick	Karst	Sanborn
Burke	Kee	Scott, Hardie
Burton	Keefe	Sheppard
Carroll	Kelley, Pa.	Sims
Chelf	McMillen, Ill.	Smathers
Christopher	Macy	Smith, Kans.
Cooper	Miller, Nebr.	Smith, Ohio
Davies, N. Y.	Morrison	Stockman
Davis, Tenn.	Moulder	Sutton
Dingell	Murray, Tenn.	Thomas
Dolliver	Murray, Wis.	Thornberry
Dondero	Nixon	Whitaker
Eaton	Norton	White, Idaho
Evins	O'Brien, Mich.	Willis
Frazier	Perkins	Wilson, Tex.
Gillette	Pfeifer, Joseph L.	Winstead
Gore	Phillips, Tenn.	Woodhouse

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 346 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 9176, with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday there was pending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], and a substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Are there any further amendments at this time?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, as the Chairman has stated, the parliamentary situation as I understand is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] has submitted an amendment to the committee bill; the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has submitted a substitute. The parliamentary inquiry is along this line: How many amendments may be pending to either the Kunkel amendment or the Spence substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Only one amendment to either the Kunkel amendment or the Spence substitute may be pending at one time, and that amendment must be disposed of before another amendment may be offered. The number of amendments is limited in that way.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If an amendment be offered to the Spence substitute would an amendment to that amendment be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the same thing true of amendments to the Kunkel amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Exactly.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. If one wishes to offer an amendment to the Spence substitute must one wait until the Kunkel amendment is voted up or down?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the amendment can be offered at any time the Member is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Suppose an amendment be offered to the original committee bill that was reported; does that take precedence over an amendment to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Only one section of the original bill has been read, and only that part is subject to amendment at this time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do we understand that an amendment is in order to any section of the Kunkel amendment or to any section of the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JAVITS to the Spence substitute: Page 16, line 7, strike out "June 15, 1950," and insert "April 15, 1950."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention if this amendment is approved to offer an exactly similar amendment to the Kunkel substitute which also defines as the base period for a ceiling price on agricultural commodities, which is what my amendment refers to, the period from June 10 to June 24, 1950.

My amendment seeks to change that provision of the Spence substitute which sets the June 15, 1950, price received by producers, as that on which a ceiling price for agricultural commodities is to be determined. There is a standard in the Spence substitute which my amendment does not disturb and which says that the ceiling price shall be "the parity price for such commodity," then it goes on and says "or the average price received by the producers on June 15, 1950, if that is higher." I am making that date April 15, 1950, by my amendment.

This is the reason for it: We discussed the question on yesterday and it appeared very clear that whereas in other items of industrial equipment and of consumer goods there may have been serious rises in prices beginning with the Korean episode on June 25, 1950, in the case of agricultural commodities a sensational rise had begun on April 1, 1950.

I would like to give the House some figures as follows:

Commodity and unit [1]	Effective parity price, June 15, 1950 [1]	Average price received by farmers		Percentage of parity price, June 15, 1950 [1]
		Apr. 15, 1950 [1]	June 15, 1950 [1]
Soybeans, per bushel	2.55	2.48	2.80	110
Lemons, per box [2]	3.14	1.53	3.79	121
Beef cattle, per hundredweight	17.30	21.80	23.70	137
Veal calves, per hundredweight	19.40	24.60	25.90	134
Lambs, per hundredweight	19.10	23.80	24.80	130
Wool, per pound	51.3	50.4	56.2	110

[1] Source: Agriculture Prices, issued by Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, June 30, 1950.
[2] Equivalent on-tree returns for all methods of sale.

Yesterday when we discussed this question it was made very clear that all of us who represented the agricultural districts and all of us who represented city districts would try to be fair about this situation, we would not try to tax the respective people whom we represent unduly. It appears now that on June 15, 1950, which is the date set up in the Spence substitute, the market price was in certain agricultural commodities very considerably higher than the parity price. That was the case primarily in meat.

These figures extracted from those I have given above are very interesting. On beef cattle the market price was 137 percent of the parity price on June 15; on veal calves 134 percent; on lambs 130 percent and on wool 110 percent. In other words, in these principal items of meat the market price was one-third higher than the parity price.

What is the parity price? The parity price is the relationship between the cost of what the farmer buys and what the farmer gets for what he sells. Not only that but the parity price by the last Agricultural Adjustment Act was adjusted so that it is now far more modern. It is what is called modern parity and takes in the years from 1939 to 1949, hence it takes into consideration the much higher prices which obtained during World War II; so that if you give the farmer 100 percent of parity you will not be unfair to him, you would be compensating him fully for all his increased costs.

I point out that parity price is very different from the support price, which is what is maintained under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and which may range between 60 and 90 percent of the parity price. Under the Spence substitute there is parity price, not 60 to 90 percent, but the full parity price or the market price on June 15, 1950, whichever is higher.

In view of these sensational rises in a few commodities, but very key commodities because meat constitutes about 25 percent of the average moderate families' budget, I submit, in view of the sensational rise from April 1 to June 15, through the Korean episode, of these particular food prices, if there is to be a roll-back the fair date to choose for these commodities is April 15. The reason I do not use April 1 is because the Bureau of Agricultural Economics gets out a record of Agricultural Prices on the fifteenth of the month. I have it before me. April 15 is the date upon which they have found and definitely ascertained what the market prices are, and I have chosen that date.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What percentage of increase would take place from the date the gentleman suggests to the date that is now in the bill?

Mr. JAVITS. It runs from about 20 to 25 percent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Between April 15 and June 15 the increase was about two-thirds of the total increase over parity.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman has given us parity prices for meat products. Should not the gentleman also give us parity prices for corn, wheat, and all the rest of the products for the same date?

Mr. JAVITS. May I point out to my colleague that in those commodities I have not included in my figures, the parity prices were higher than the market prices, hence they are not germane to this discussion as the bill even after my amendment will still retain the parity-price standard as to those commodities. My amendment leaves in the bill the ceiling of parity prices, so where the parity price is higher than the market price, there is no complaint.

Mr. GROSS. Does not the gentleman think it fair to apply that to meat products?

Mr. JAVITS. In effect my amendment does that, because the market price was higher as to meat, than the parity price. I made that clear in my statement to the House.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Does the gentleman's amendment also roll back wages?

Mr. JAVITS. That is determined in another part of the bill at the period between May 24 and June 24, 1950. In view of the fact that there is no comparable situation in wages or in other prices during the period between April 15 and May 24, I have confined my amendment to the particular items which moderate-income people buy and in which there was a sensational rise in that period.

Mr. CAVALCANTE. Can the gentleman give us a specific answer as to whether or not his amendment does roll back wages?

Mr. JAVITS. I have just given the gentleman that language. My amendment deals only with agricultural products, for the reasons stated, because that is the case in which the shoe hurts.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JAVITS. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Under what theory does the gentleman believe he should pick out a certain commodity and go back and roll it back to April, except convenience? This is a war measure, and ought to treat everybody alike.

Mr. JAVITS. I have already made that clear and I would like to point out that my colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] yesterday said that this provision ought to be reviewed. I hope the House will review it now.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would have the effect of depressing the prices of agricultural commodities. We have attempted to enact a bill that will provide for a stable economy, and that there be a just relationship between the price of commodities and the wages of labor. The gentleman from New York selects April 15 as the date to fix the comparable prices of agricultural commodities. That would have the effect of lowering the prices of those commodities and of dislocating their relationship to the other prices and the wages of labor. It seems to me it would be inadvisable to pass legislation of that kind. I do not have the statistics; I do not know just what effect it would have; no consideration has been given to it in committee, and it is of far reaching import. And, I want to say another thing. I come from the city, but if we do not give the farmer a price that will persuade him to stay on the farm and produce, the prices of commodities that he produces will necessarily rise. It is essential the farmer shall obtain a fair price for his product. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] said yesterday when we discussed that very question about fairness to the farmer, which is very important, and I know that my colleague here is going to enlighten us on that score, and I welcome him, and I emphasize that: All we want to be is fair. We want to be very fair about this. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] said, "I agree with the gentleman that there was a rise there"—I am quoting his words in respect to farm products—"but it was from the processor and wholesaler on down through the retailer to the consumer." He said the farmer has sold his crops, so the farmer is not interested now. We are dealing with speculators, and that is exactly what this amendment is designed to do.

Mr. SPENCE. I think it goes very much further than that. I think we do not know just what effect it would have, but I know that it will have the effect of reducing prices.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. I should like to comment on the statement made by the gentleman from New York to the effect that farmers had sold their crops and would not be affected by this roll-back. He says that his amendment would apply specifically to meat animals. Meat animals are sold every day in the year, so farmers have not disposed of their meat animals. They sold them on the 16th of April, they sold them on the 30th of April, they are selling them today, and they will sell them tomorrow. So what the gentleman just said has no point whatever.

Mr. SPENCE. I think it is obvious that we have not had sufficient consideration of the amendment. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if there has been one thing that has come out of the Korean situation it is justification for the bold and courageous stand taken by Admiral Louis E. Denfeld when he testified last year as to this country's lack of preparedness. It is now clear that he is the Billy Mitchell of this period because he sacrificed his career to warn America that it was in danger.

Had his advice been heeded, we would have had from the very outset of this Korean crisis an effective striking force of carrier-based planes and Marines to throw into Korea.

To correct the badly shattered confidence of our people, I believe that the Armed Services Committee of the House of Representatives should request General Eisenhower, Admiral Denfeld, General Spaatz, Admiral Halsey, and some others to give us the benefit of any suggestions they may care to make.

God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. No one could contribute more than Admiral Louis E. Denfeld. America needs men of his character, courage, and ability.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I will be pardoned for saying, as we begin our deliberations on these amendments, that I hope everybody will make an effort to try to treat all groups as nearly as possible alike.

I regret that the legislative situation is such that I cannot offer the amendment which I gave notice yesterday I would offer on this question.

The gentleman seeks to go back to April 15 as the determining price, the market price on commodities, in fixing the ceiling prices when they should be above the parity price. I said yesterday that I intend to ask the House to strike the one date fixed in the Spense amendment on agricultural commodities, June 15, and write in exactly the same provision as is provided here for the wage earner.

It says here that the wage earner's ceiling shall not be less than the highest wage in the period from May 24 to June 24. That is all right with me. That includes the miners' increase after April 15. Many of these new automobile contracts were made after April 15. They will all be protected by the May 24 to June 24 provision.

I ask the gentleman from New York to reconsider his statement that there were no substantial increases in wages after April 15, because there were, and I think the farmers of the Nation, as I understand them and know them, do not intend to ask you to roll back those wage increases which were received up until the time of the Korean conflict. All the farmers of the Nation are asking is that you give them exactly equal treatment, that the highest price during the same 30-day period, from May 24 to June 24, be considered one of the minimums for their prices.

If the gentleman is concerned about the prices of meat, and I know he is concerned about that, then perhaps we may have to deal with that problem separately. I do not at the moment however see the need for that, but certainly when the gentleman offers an amendment which treats with the whole agricultural structure across the board predicated only upon the prices of one or two commodities, I doubt the soundness of such an approach.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. There are two reasons for my amendment. First, it is the fact that parity remains in the bill.

Mr. PACE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. JAVITS. Hence practically every commodity is protected except that those that have had these inordinate rises. Secondly, and very important, wages are not in the same position as farm prices. Wages do not have parity prices, and the Government has not spent $4,000,000,000 to protect them. However, I am not mad about that. And I am not arguing against it. At this point I only point out that it is right to treat the agricultural situation on its own because it does occupy a unique position in respect to the price situation.

Mr. PACE. I have great respect for the gentleman, but I regret I cannot agree with him. I see no more reason why we should roll back farm prices as long as they are reasonable than it would be to roll back wages. If we are going to start this morning with a general roll-back plan and are going to use the Korean conflict as the justification for this legislation, and this bill would not be here otherwise, then let us fix that date.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The speaker has fully demonstrated the fallacy of undertaking to write a bill on the floor of the House of this nature, without any hearings whatever.

The House is trying to write a bill to control every commodity in the United States where the interrelationship of all commodities is so complicated and complex. If we have to have a control bill, let us have a meeting right away. The chairman has said that he will call a meeting next week for the purpose of having hearings on a control bill. Let us hold a committee meeting so that we can put all these bills together and so that the committee can hear witnesses on these problems.

The fallacy of going about this on the floor of the House is revealed when the gentleman from New York who knows nothing on earth about agriculture gets up and tries to write a bill here for agriculture. You could put all the acreage you ever heard of in New York City in a quarter-acre lot, and yet we have a situation here which permits the gentleman from New York to get up and try to write a bill here for agriculture in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] has expired.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. I simply want to add this in conclusion: As far as my part in this is concerned, I intend the best I know how to treat those who work in the plants and in the factories and those who work in the sun in the fields exactly alike. They are both entitled to our most sympathetic consideration. I beg you to not start this morning creating rank discrimination between the two groups. The wage earner gets his wages from the factory, and the farmer gets his wages from the commodities he produces and sells in the market place.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if the Congress of the United States wants to bankrupt a good many thousand cattle feeders, then just accept this amendment. Farmers throughout the Midwest who bought feeders and put them into their feed lots paid an extremely high price during the last few months, yes, up to 28 cents a pound for those cattle. The initial investment in some cases is as much as $250 for each head of cattle. Now it is proposed by the gentleman from New York that we take away from these men who are feeding cattle at least 20 percent of their initial investment through a roll-back to April 15. This will mean that hundreds of thousands of farmers will lose money they cannot afford to lose. Worst of all, it will destroy confidence in the future of the cattle- and hog-feeding business. Surely the Congress will not accept an amendment of this kind, which is confiscatory and entirely alien to what we stand for here in America. Some of these feeders have thousands invested in cattle, and a move of this sort would ruin many of them financially.

I know the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] wants to be fair, but I question his knowledge of this particular subject.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. In just a moment. If you want to put the entire beef and pork supply into the black market, just accept such an amendment as this. Certainly our memory is not so short that we cannot go back to 1942, when our Government said to the farmers, "You can get only 72 cents for your butterfat. You can get 55 cents from the creamery, and you are entitled to a subsidy of 17 cents, and that is all you can get, even though the market value of butterfat uncontrolled would have approached $1 a pound. What happened? Four neighbors of mine did away with their dairy herds as did thousands of other dairy farmers. Production in our Nation was at a minimum, and as soon as the OPA went off butter skyrocketed to over $1 a pound, temporarily. The only answer to the sufficiency of meat or butter for the people in the gentleman's district in New York is production. If you start to monkey with our entire economic structure, you will create havoc all through the Nation. Let us not discourage production of any food, because it is only through profit incentive will farmers endure the drudgery of feeding the rest of the Nation.

Keep this in mind also: If meat goes into the black-market channels, where will you get the insulin for the diabetics of the Nation? Where are you going to get all of these new drugs that we hear so much about today? The cattle that are slaughtered out in the woods for the black market do not produce the essentials of these miracle drugs which offer so much to those afflicted by certain ailments.

So I plead with the House to turn down this amendment most emphatically.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I appreciate what the gentleman has said. The Members of this House know that the able, conscientious gentleman from Minnesota understands more about actual farming problems confronting our farmers, than any other Member in this House. He is a real dirt farmer himself and always keeps his feet on the ground, as we say out West. The gentleman knows that while the farmer is the greatest producer of raw materials, he is also our greatest consumer of goods. The farmer consumes one and one-half times more, per capita, than do the rest of the people of America, due to the fact that the farmer is by far the best customer of durable manufactured goods, such as farm machinery, lumber, fencing, and clothing.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I appreciate very much the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa. Agriculture is the best customer of the manufacturers in the United States and provides a tremendous number of jobs throughout the Nation in the handling of what we raise for the consumer.

Mr. JENSEN. Is it not also a fact that between April 15 and June 15, because of the rise in farm products, a number of the people in Mr. Javit's district and all over America were able to go back to work because of the buying power of the American farmer. Government records prove that every dollar of farm income generates over $4 in wages for the American worker.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. I cannot see the attitude of some of these gentlemen from the industrial east who will not recognize the fact that unless you give to agriculture a little profit, industry itself will never prosper, nor will the working people of the United States receive decent wages.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. The purchase price on June 15 was $17.30 per hundredweight for cattle. The price I want to set on April 15 was $4 more, or $21.80.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Just a minute. I do not yield further. The gentleman talks about parity price. The gentleman does not realize that the farmer has taken a jolt that no other line of industry has taken since 1947. Today I am selling barley off my farm for which I may obtain $1.35. The same grade barley in 1947 returned me $2.50, or in other words it is 40 percent less today. The same thing applies to rye. I am lucky if I get $3.75 for flax, whereas I got $7 in 1947. Eggs are only about 60 percent of parity, but let us take a glance at what we must buy. Just today my farm foreman telephoned me about the purchase of a new wagon. I said, "How much is it?" He said, "$350, equipped with tires." I said, "If we must have it, we have to pay the price." But 3 years ago I could have bought that same wagon for $225. Farm machinery generally because of increases in freight cost and labor costs have all advanced materially since 1945.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The raise has come about, may I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS], because the union people throughout the Nation have received certain boosts all along the line, in wages, yes, on the railroads and in the factories, and this has resulted in increasing the price of everything the farmer has to buy. I hope that the gentleman from New York will revise his line of thinking and will be willing to afford to farmers the same opportunities he strives so hard to secure for the working people of his district. They are all Americans and are entitled to equally fair treatment.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, who is as conversant with our farming problems as anyone in Government.

Mr. HOPE. Is not the proposal of the gentleman from New York in selecting a special date upon which to roll back farm prices eminently unfair unless he also selects the same date for rolling back the prices of the things the farmer buys?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. That would be the fair thing to do. All of us want to do the right thing by the various segments of this great country of ours. We on the farms must have an adequate income, otherwise we cannot provide the food for the people of New York and the industrial East. Everything farmers buy today costs far more than in 1939. We all know that.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Iowa who these 12 years in Congress has fought consistently for agriculture. No man in Congress has done more than has the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN] in awakening the people to the great need for soil conservation in America.

Mr. JENSEN. Is it not a fact that approximately 80 percent of the initial cost of every manufactured article on an average is paid out for wages, so it is an idle gesture and of no use whatever to attempt to control prices without also controlling wages.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Eighty-two percent is the correct figure, I believe. When I buy that wagon for $350, labor, somewhere along the line receives about $270 in manufacturing wheels, tires, lumber, steel box, and freight, coal, and what have you.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to my good friend from New York, whose only fault is his ardent desire for too cheap food for his constituents.

Mr. JAVITS. May I ask the gentleman whether he does not feel it is right that we in the city should at long last begin to argue about these very things we are discussing here as to whether we are right or not?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I cannot feel too sorry for your consumers, because it is a known fact that in the last few years they have been paying a smaller percentage of their income for food than they paid in former years prior to World War II.

Mr. JAVITS. The consumer certainly does not think so.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, let us defeat this amendment, as it will result in a food scarcity created just as the butter scarcity was brought into being in 1942. To secure ample food at reasonable prices, we must have production and that production cannot be secured by discouraging the producer by an unfair roll-back. Let us be reasonable.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

(Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, here we see the trouble we get into when we start trying to discuss the roll-back proposition as of a certain date, using one date for one thing and another date for another.

I regret that I have to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I feel that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is the only workable way that we can handle this thing. I am going to admit right now that it gives the farmer certain advantages; I think we have got to admit that, but here is the part that has me stopped: Even with the freeze of wages and agricultural prices as of a certain date, and other dates for other commodities, the less roll-back period there is involved the better chance you have of making this stabilization measure work.

Let me say further that even after we pass this, unless the stand-by provisions are immediately initiated you are going to have inequities continue to arise, you are going to continue to have maladjustments in its operation because of the inflationary pressure and because of the fact that people are going to think of that age-old law, self-preservation, to take care of No. 1; they are going to withhold from the market; they are going to indulge in panic buying, they are going to hoard inventories and all that sort of thing. So for the moment I say that the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Georgia must be accepted notwithstanding the fact that it gives to the agricultural people a certain advantage. You have got to recognize that inequities are going to become part of the law regardless of what period you take, and the latest period you take is the best period, and the period for wages and agricultural prices must be identical; in other words, it must bear with the same weight on labor as it does on agricultural commodities. Let us put this bill into effect as fairly as possible by preserving the status quo as of the freeze period just as quickly as possible. Let us not go back any further than we have to go back, because as we go back we enlarge the likelihood of additional inequities.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is referring to the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE]; is that not correct?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Yes; and it is my understanding that it will use exactly the same period for agricultural production as is used for wages; and I rise in support of that, although I do not have a single farmer in my district. I recognize the equity of the amendment from the standpoint of practical administration.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JACOBS. I would like to bring to the attention of the Members something else we will be getting into here if we start using different dates for different industries. It was called to my attention this morning that earlier this year there have been a number of wage contracts go into effect that provided for pensions. There have been some price adjustments to take care of those pensions. I understand there have not been any to speak of in the last 30 days. But if we start rolling back on one thing and do not roll back on the other, what we are doing here is engaging in a logrolling operation.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. That is right.

Mr. JACOBS. We should take just one day and make it apply to everything. For that reason I am for the amendment that the gentleman from Georgia is going to offer. If we do not do it that way we are going to get into a logrolling contest here and we are going to get nowhere.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I want to point out to the House that in the last 65 or 70 days scrap steel has gone up 44 percent, zinc has gone up 47 percent, and copper has gone up 22 percent. That is inequitable and is going to make our program cost at least 10 percent more than if it had been frozen as of that day. But it is a fait accompli, it is something we have to contend with.

I want to say something about the roll-back proposition. Any small merchant if he ends up his year's business with 5, 6, or 7 percent net after all costs of operation, he is doing the ordinary thing. Anyone who knows anything about business knows that is true. There are some who will make less and there are some who will make more, but the small man, if he ends up with 5 or 6 percent net profit on his gross sales, then he is conducting an average operation. If you start rolling back prices 10 or 15 percent you will kill small business in this country and it should not be done.

It may be necessary to roll back prices to the period provided for in the bill. If this freeze and roll-back comes soon we will be able to do a fairly successful job of stabilization.

If the price freeze and roll-back of prices are long delayed we will be faced with serious problems of hardship of those who are caught with high-priced inventories. Some consideration should be given to these hardship cases in this legislation.

(Mr. AUCHINCLOSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks after the address of Mr. CASE of South Dakota.)

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment and this discussion illustrate as nothing else could the practical impossibility of selective price control. This discussion and debate makes clear why, if we are going to do this job, we need to take the date at which trial and error have accomplished as much as possible a balanced economy.

When we got into the price-control problem in World War II we were further along in the war. We had some adjustments that had taken place. The roll-back was a difficult thing. But here we have the opportunity now to have a freeze applied before we have gotten very far away from the date at which a freeze can be applied and where we can accept and judge the prices which everyday experience had established.

The point which the gentleman from California has made is to be kept in mind in this connection, and that is that we should take the most recent experience period that we can. If we start going back on one thing, someone can find a case which was not explained to him and could suggest that date.

In connection with the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] about meat, he also mentioned wool as being something that was selling above parity. That illustrates that we did not have an effective price for wool at a certain period. Our sheep population went down to the lowest point it had since 1870. When a market competition came back wool prices advanced. Today wool is selling above parity. Why? Because of the national economics of the situation which tried to correct the shortage we had of wool and sheep in this country.

And today we are facing the tragic situation that Russia has bought practically all of the wool in the wool market. So I think the only sound, sensible thing we can do is to make the freeze as of the last normal date or period we had and accept that as the best that trial and error and experience can establish. If we try to go selectively on one item, whether by dates as in this case or by item, somebody else will think of something else, and the first thing we know the whole thing will be out of kilter. So I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, almost 100 years ago a great President of the United States described the Civil War, on a great battlefield of that war, by saying it was a contest to determine whether a country "conceived in liberty" could long endure. Events subsequent to that occasion have proved that such a country can endure and it can prosper and expand with an ever-growing population of contented and happy people. In spite of depressions and ghastly wars, our country has maintained its liberties and has grown more and more in the respect of the world. But the United States of America cannot expect to endure and to enjoy peace and prosperity unless its citizens are determined to save and preserve those liberties and those freedoms, and that way of life which has brought contentment and happiness to them. We must be ready to fight with our life's blood for these things and we must be ready to make every sacrifice and adjustment in our daily lives in order to unify and secure that effort.

Our country is now faced with the gravest menace which has ever confronted it. The governments of nations all around us have been either overthrown or weakened by the encroachmert of the ideology of communism, which is loud in its promises of freedom, but which in practice places the heavy yoke of slavery on the necks of all the people it dominates. Communism has no conscience as we know conscience; its word cannot be relied on, and its object is to conquer and subjugate all peoples everywhere under its power. Secure in our own liberties and depending on our natural strength, it is evident that the leaders of our country have failed to recognize the true meaning and aims of this alien ideology and their eyes have been closed to the constant threat to overthrow our form of life which in insidious ways is boring from without and within to overthrow our Government. The hour is late and in view of that fact we must prepare for the future and not spend too much time in considering the past; but there are some things which we must remember if we are going to be successful in overthrowing this menace which encircles us, and if we are going to preserve and develop to an even greater degree the form of republican government which our people have enjoyed for so many years. We cannot compromise with communism. We cannot trust the word of their representatives and we must prepare to fight with the sword and bayonet and every weapon at our command, so that this wicked thing may be wiped out and peace may be once more restored to the world.

When the northern Koreans, propelled by the aid and incitement of the Communists, marched into Southern Korea, I, with millions of Americans, heartily approved of the action taken by the President of the United States, through the United Nations, to offer armed resistance for the protection of the newly founded Republic of Korea. No matter if we had been caught napping, no matter if we had been advised that this new republic could take care of itself, no matter if we had fallen down in extending the aid which had been voted to these people by the Congress, no matter if we had been entirely wrong during the past years in our attitude toward Nationalist China, here was an overt act, ill-concealed, to ignite the flames of war in the world, and if our Republic had failed to take the leadership with the other nations dedicated to peace, we would never have been able to erase the ignominy and contempt in our failure to live up to our sacred obligations. We had no choice and the President acted properly.

It has turned out, however, to be a shocking way for us to discover how unprepared we are to face the realities which have been going on in the world for these many years. The Congress has appropriated billions of dollars of taxpayers' money in the belief that our Armed Forces were being modernized and made adequate for our security and defense, and, lo and behold, we find that that is not the case. This revelation comes as a terrible shock, not only to the representatives of the people, not only to the people of this country themselves, but also to the people of the nations everywhere who were depending on the leadership of the United States of America and were confident that it would be forthcoming.

Let us hope it is not too late for us to make up for lost time and produce the trained men and the munitions of war which will enable us to conquer; but I say now, Mr. Chairman, that those who have proved themselves so incompetent during these past years in the handling of our foreign affairs and our national defenses should be relieved of their duties and their places taken by people of greater competence. It is only in that way that the confidence of people everywhere can be restored and that through our efforts victory may be more readily achieved. I believe that the Congress is ready to support and the people will approve any appropriations necessary for the defense of our land, but we must insist that the expenditure of the vast sums of money necessary are entrusted to those who have not already proved their incompetence.

While our boys are fighting bravely and suffering and dying on the battle line, with inadequate training and short on supplies and the munitions of war, the people at home in this country must be prepared to back up our gallant troops with every effort possible and every sacrifice which may be demanded. No one dislikes the disruption of our economy by Government meddling and the control of our daily life more than I do, but we are in a very serious emergency and if we are to save ourselves from utter destruction we are forced to change our way of life for a period of time. I favor giving the President of the United States authority to take whatever steps may be necessary to protect our economy in the support of the defense of our land, and I feel sure that the people of America will support such a program. Unfortunately, there are some among us who are selfish and greedy and absolutely thoughtless of others, who would wreck our economy by the useless buying of commodities and by hoarding them. These people make it necessary to institute governmental controls for the protection of the rest of us. I have the greatest contempt for people who do things like this, and I would like to see the merchants and the storekeepers who have to deal with such people make publice the names of those who carry on such practices. If this is done, I am sure there would be an end to such outrageous conduct.

This is no time for halfway measures; this is no time for compromising with the evil menace which confronts us. Government itself must do its share and make its contribution, and the first thing that should be done is the elimination of all Government expenditures which are not necessary for our defense effort. We must make Government efficient, and except where our defense is involved expenditures should be reduced to the very minimum possible. I venture to suggest that the President of the United States could set a good example, in the retrenchment of Government spending, by putting his yacht in moth balls and by cutting out all other possible privileges which he enjoys. By such an example other Government agencies would be inspired to cut down on unnecessary things and concentrate their efforts and their substance on winning a peace, which we all desire. The United States cannot fulfill its destiny nor can the United States long endure in the light of the present situation unless our economy is strong and unless, as a united people, we are determined to win the victory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE to the Spence substitute: Page 16, line 7, strike out the words "the average price received by producers on June 15, 1950" and insert "the price received by producers during the period from May 24, 1950, to June 24."

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I anticipate and certainly hope that this amendment will be acceptable to the committee.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PACE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I will say that I have no objection to the amendment. I have conferred with the members of the committee, and they have no objection. I cannot accept it on behalf of the committee, but so far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCHANAN to the Spence substitute: Add a new section 409 to read as follows:

"Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio or television broadcasting station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor-advertising facilities, or (4) rates charged for any professional services, or (5) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (6) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. That is practically the same provision that was in the old Price Control Act.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Public Law 421 of the Seventy-seventh Congress, with the two parts I have added, "or (5) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (6) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who helped collaborate and worked with me on this particular amendment in the discussion of yesterday.

I wish to compliment the gentleman for introducing this amendment and to join with my friend in sponsoring this provision.

Mr. FULTON. This amendment goes a little further than section 214 of the Kunkel bill, but is basically that provision, is it not?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is true.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The amendment, with the exception of the two additions which the gentleman mentioned, is exactly the same as the previous law during World War II and practically the same as the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio, myself, prepared and have at the desk at this time. I might say that this matter has been discussed with the leadership on both sides, and I understand there is no objection to it. It simply protects the sources of information of the American people so that under no stretch of circumstances can anyone interfere with the furnishing of information to the American people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is why I added television, which was not in Public Law 421 of the Seventy-seventh Congress.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is correct. I join with the gentleman in support of the amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. With respect to that portion of the amendment which deals with public-utility rates, I recall that during the last war the question arose as to the regulation of rates of local utilities. The original Price Control Act did not permit the intervention of anybody from the Office of Price Administration. Does not the gentleman think that somebody from the Federal service should be given the power to intervene in local rate-regulation proceedings on behalf of the Federal Government, to point out, at least, what impact such increases would have upon the cost of living?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. He has raised a very good point there.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. I have no objection to the amendment but I think it is much broader than originally intended. The way it is worded now it would include everything except the Pittsburgh ball club.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It includes the Pittsburgh ball club as well—but not the Brooklyn Dodgers—of course that is a pun.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. I should like to know why you include motion pictures and the others.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are sources of information, materials furnished for publication. This includes books, magazines, periodicals and motion pictures. They are a source of information.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. I believe it should be pointed out that this exemption does not extend to newsprint. Newsprint will be under control, but the sources of information are not under control, if this amendment is adopted in the Spence bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The whole intent and purpose of this is simply to protect the right of the American people to obtain information without any control over it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Services and materials, that is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio to the Spence substitute: On page 3, line 4, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) The purpose of this section is to impose temporary ceilings immediately on all prices and wages, so as to prevent runaway inflation in the period immediately following the enactment of this act, while measures are being perfected under the other provisions of this act to control inflation over a longer period.

"(b) The maximum price for which an article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of services, and the maximum wage which may be paid for labor, shall be the highest price received by the seller for the same or substantially the same article, or received by the person performing the services or the same or substantially the same services, or paid by the employer for the same or substantially the same labor, on May 24, 1950, and if no such article was sold or services or labor were performed on or before this date, then the maximum price shall be the sale price of the most nearly equivalent article, services or labor: Provided, That whenever the President shall issue any regulation or order establishing any ceiling authorized by title IV of this act, such regulation or order shall immediately become effective irrespective of this section.

"(c) The President shall prescribe such rules and regulations as he considers necessary to carry out the purpose of subsection (b). Whoever willfully violates this section or any such regulation shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I need not remind you how often, in the wake of Pearl Harbor, we regretted that an immediate freezing across all boards had not been applied. We have already seen quick increased prices in the situation in which we find ourselves today.

The purpose of my amendment is simply to get immediate action to stop the spiraling of all costs. It provides that on the day this act is passed everything stays as it was on May 24 last, until the President, under title IV of the act, shall place controls on or shall do what we give him the power to do. We are all getting frantic letters from our constituents protesting against the high prices of an increasing number of commodities. They are very worried and very troubled. All this amendment does is to stop the spiraling and the confusion in order to give the President adequate time to make such revisions as he sees fit.

Mr. Chairman, it is a very simple measure which I earnestly hope will have the affirmative action of this committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I believe the gentlewoman's amendment provides that prices will be set as of the effective date of the act?

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Is the gentlewoman not apprehensive that that constitutes an invitation to people to raise their prices now?

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. That is just what they are doing.

Mr. PATMAN. That is what they are doing, the gentlewoman is correct.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I would be happy if the gentleman cares to amend my amendment to put a roll-back date on, but it seems to me that that is so complicated and that is why I did not do that.

Mr. PATMAN. We have just agreed on the date—May 24 to June 24 for both wages and commodities, but to set the date as the effective date of the act would obviously induce them to raise their prices.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I shall be very happy to accept that amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. That is in the bill now.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I am in perfect agreement with the gentlewoman on her amendment. Our neighbors to the north during the early days of World War II did exactly what the gentlewoman is trying to do in her amendment; and because of that, Canada came through the war in a very fine manner. They froze wages and they froze prices and everything at a given date. After the war they not only reduced their tax rate, as I understand, three times, but have also made a substantial payment on their national debt.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. JENSEN. Certainly there is an example which we can follow and follow with safety.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. It is certainly a good precedent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio) there were—ayes 42, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD to the Spence substitute: Page 13, line 4, after the period in line 3, strike out the language from line 4 to line 8, inclusive.

Page 15, line 14, after the period in line 13, strike out the language from line 14 to line 24, inclusive.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, there has been intelligent discussion of this entire measure today, with one exception. At no time have I heard the word "profit" injected into the debate. The purpose of my amendment is to remove from this control measure the control of wages until there is some action taken by this Congress on a reasonable and intelligent control, within the discretion of this House, of profits. It is entirely possible for this argument to continue without economic justice and I see no analogy, Mr. Chairman, in the debate between prices and wages and profits and wages. There is a school of thought, for which I speak now, which believes the analogy is between profits and wages and not prices and wages, even including the cost-of-living parallel.

May I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that you can engage in black-marketing in prices, but there is no black-marketing insofar as wages is concerned, in the mind of labor or in the mind of management. A freeze of wages is always effective and has been, but a freeze of prices is never effective and never has been.

I am aware of the parliamentary situation with reference to the matters before the Ways and Means Committee. May I direct attention to the fact that only yesterday an amendment was offered by a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means to include in a measure before that committee control of profits, and that was defeated by the Committee on Ways and Means within the last 24 hours.

I am aware of what is going on in the other body. I know a tax measure when I see one. However, there is not in the other body, and there is not here, any formula or present formulas which have to do with the program for control of profits, reasonable or unreasonable, 100 percent or 95 percent, as during the last war, or any semblance thereof. I respectfully submit, Mr. Chairman, that until such time as profits are debated and controlled to whatever degree this House determines, there should not be in this act, stand-by or mandatory, a control of wages. However, if this committee would see fit at this time to have a stand-by on wage control spelled out not to take effect until such time as control action was taken upon profits, I am sure this committee would thereby indicate its customary high degree of legislative action.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction only?

Mr. FLOOD. I yield.

Mr. MASON. There was no motion made in the Ways and Means Committee to include excess profits in the renegotiation bill that we were considering, and no motion of that kind was voted down. I just wanted to make that entirely clear.

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not true, however, as a matter of fact, that the question of excess profits tax was before the Ways and Means Committee in the negotiation of contracts, and negative action was taken with reference to some consideration of excess profits legislation?

Mr. MASON. No; the motion was that we should consider excess profits in connection with renegotiation, and the motion was tabled.

Mr. FLOOD. The answer to my question is, "Yes." Action was taken and tabled.

Mr. MASON. To make it a part of the renegotiation bill which it has not considered.

Mr. FLOOD. And the Ways and Means Committee acted in a way which was contrary to control of profits, p-e-r-i-o-d.

Mr. MASON. Oh, no. Oh, no.

Mr. FLOOD. Then they did not act at all.

Mr. MASON. Oh, no. The Ways and Means Committee can and undoubtedly will consider an excess profits bill in proper time.

Mr. FLOOD. If we live long enough. And until that action to control profits is taken then there should be no control of the workingman's profits—wages.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to strike out stand-by powers to control wages unless we also consider a bill that will curb profits.

The President in his message said that he wanted adequate legislation in regard to profits. But the condition the gentleman imposes upon this committee would make it impossible for us to consider matters that are within our jurisdiction. We have no jurisdiction over tax matters, and if we had incorporated anything of the kind in the bill it would have been subject to a point of order. If we do not consider these essential matters in the bill until this committee considers the tax matter, it means that we are stymied and that we cannot even consider the things that are within our jurisdiction.

There is no freeze on wages in this substitute. The President has the power to regulate them when he thinks it advisable. If we can expedite the passage of the tax bill, all well and good, but certainly I oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and ask that it be voted down.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and take this time of the committee in order to support the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Various groups of organized labor are in accord with the necessity and the idea of wage controls at this time. They do not take second place to any other segment of our society when the critical situation that confronts us now is being considered. They will accept stand-by controls on wages, but they are asking the question, and I am asking the question at this time, Mr. Chairman, what this body proposes to do about controls on profits. I am interested, Mr. Chairman, in a clipping from one of the local papers which is the result of a survey by the Associated Press. It appeared in this morning's Washington Post. It states:

Corporation profits are running at a record rate, with the second quarter total 43 percent higher than a year ago.

This upward surge developed without the stimulus of war which did not boost prices, sales, and earnings until the start of the second half of the year.

A compilation made yesterday by the Associated Press of the earnings of 450 corporations in all fields of business showed these totals:

In 1950, second quarter, $1,625,040,257; 1949 second quarter, $1,132,763,017; increase 43 percent.

In 1950, first half, $2,865,306,259; 1949 first half, $2,319,616,453; increase: 24 percent.

The percentage of gain over a year ago reflects the quickie recession during the first half of 1949 which, of course, makes today's earnings look even bigger by comparison.

But the absolute dollar totals during the second quarter this year are running at an annual rate that would top any other full year.

The point I make is that it is perfectly all right to expect every segment of our society to accept controls in this critical period. All organized labor is asking is that it be treated as every other segment of our society is being treated. We are making this protest in the form of the amendment to let the country know that there is one segment of our society that is not being controlled, and that is profits, and we propose to insist on profits being controlled.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would it not be very easy for us in 5 or 6 months to write an excess-profits bill that could be made retroactive to the 1st of June? If we do not put a limit on wages at this time it would be very difficult in 6 months to roll back wages, would it not?

Mr. BAILEY. With all due respect to the august members of the Committee on Ways and Means, the war may be over before we get action down there, if action is delayed as much on this matter as it has been up to now. It is perfectly all right if it is going to be done, but we want to know when it is going to be done.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL. I want to voice my opinion in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD]. I hope all Members of the House will do likewise.

Mr. BAILEY. May I plead with the Members of this House that they give serious consideration to controlling every segment of our economy in this all-out effort to win world peace, and, certainly, to win the Korean war.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] so ably put the proposition yesterday, this is everyone's war. It is a war in which every segment of our population and every American citizen, is going to have to play its and his part. This is equally true whether the individual be a wage earner or an industrialist.

There is no question, in my opinion, as to the degree of sacrifice that is going to be required of every citizen if this situation worsens. Certainly we should have controls upon excess profits and upon excessive incomes. In the statement made the other day by 15 Members on the Republican side we set forth very clearly our thinking on this subject. In this connection we stated that the preparation for total mobilization requires that Congress immediately draft and enact tax legislation to provide against excessive profits and excessive incomes.

Referring to the matter that is at hand today in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whom I have deep regard, I feel it is not germane in this legislation to take up matters that are concerned with the authority and the jurisdiction of another committee in this instance the Committee on Ways and Means. Certainly that committee should move at the earliest possible moment to take such steps as may be required to insure against excess profits in business and in industry because, again, this is a war that belongs to everyone. Every citizen in this country must bear his and her just share of the burden. But for today the men who are dying today in Korea and who may die in increasing numbers tomorrow and the day after tomorrow have the right to know that the Congress of the United States is moving ahead today to see that steps are taken to keep that important segment of our economy which has to do with the wage structure from running out of bounds as it did on several occasions during World War I.

It is my intention to oppose elimination of this section from the bill at this time and it is also my intention to support adequate legislation which will put ceilings on profits and on incomes at such time as it is brought to the floor of the House for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

(Mr. JACKSON of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

(Mrs. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not on the floor of the House yesterday during the debate, because at that time I spoke of the urgent necessity of passing an excess-profits tax. I also said it was preposterous to discuss for one moment the control of wages without the same time discussing the control of excess profits. We should introduce an excess corporate profits tax immediately. Corporate profits are soaring already. We must take profiteering out of war and we should do so at once. This is a time when each member of the Nation must function as a member of the team. Each must make his best and utmost contribution. Young men who can man tanks and guns and planes and ships are anxious to do their part. They must accept personal conscription, must accept the total restrictions of military service and still give all they have—their lives if need be. Those of us who remain at home because we can work and produce and invest, must do just those things. We must accept less vital restrictions than the soldiers. We must accept the conscription of our excess profits and earnings, we must accept the restrictions of civilian mobilization—and all the while we must produce and work, and produce and work, unstintingly.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. I simply wanted to say to the distinguished gentlewoman from California that I was referring to the debate of today. As a matter of fact, I was inspired to introduce my amendment by the remarks of the gentlewoman yesterday, which I read in the RECORD, on the subject of excess profits, with which I concur.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am not going to vote for his amendment, not because I feel any less strongly about the necessity of proper economic mobilization than the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, but because these are stand-by controls that we are giving to the President. These are only part of a complete economic and fiscal program. It is up to Congress to do the rest of the job. We should not take the stand-by controls out of this bill. But we should pass an excess-profits tax.

I think it would be folly if this Congress finished with what we consider emergency legislation to meet the present conditions in the world and not bring to the floor of this House a bill that would adjust taxes to meet the present situation.

At the point of maybe boring the Members of the House, may I again read some figures that indicate what the profits have been. But, first, let me refute one of the statements made earlier to the effect that increases in prices have resulted almost wholly from increases in wages. This is just not so. There have been some spectacular rises in prices especially in meats and other food items. And in certain basic materials such as steel, zinc, and copper.

Wage rates per hour on the other hand have risen negligibly. The average weekly earnings of labor, which is their hourly rate multiplied by the number of hours they work per week, has risen about 2½ percent since June 15, 1950. The main point to note, however, is that this rise has come about because workers have worked more hours per week on the average since that time. As I have said before, wage rates have not increased. These are the most accurate data available. These statements were confirmed just this morning by Mr. Ewan Clague, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in his testimony before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Now let us just look at profits for a moment.

At the peak of World War II profits of all corporations in the United States after taxes totaled about $10,000,000,000 a year. In the first quarter of 1950, according to Government figures, the annual rate of corporation profits was over $19,000,000,000. Financial statements for the second quarter of 1950 are showing every indication that the annual rate of profits in the second quarter of 1950 will be at least $22,000,000,000 or $23,000,000,000. For the second half of the year, unless taxes are drastically increased, corporate profits after taxes will be at least $25,000,000,000 on an annual rate. This means that after taxes all of the corporations in the United States will be earning at least two and one-half times what they earned at the peak of World War II.

I have before me the profits of three corporations which will show specifically how profits are rising continuously right now. The General Motors Corp. reported a net profit after taxes in 1949 of $656,000,000. This was a profit of about 33 percent on net worth. Today, in 1950 the annual rate of profit for the General Motors Corp. has risen to an estimated $850,000,000 after taxes. This is a profit of about 45 percent on net worth. In less than 1 year this one corporation has increased its profits by $194,000,000. The profit rate has increased from 33 to 45 percent.

Another example is the General Electric Corp. For the first 6 months of 1949 GE made $46,000,000 in profits, after taxes. For the first 6 months of 1950 the General Electric Corp. has made $77,000,000 after taxes. This is an increase of 66 percent.

Another example, the Republic Steel Corp. earned a profit of $25,500,000 during the first 6 months of 1949. In the first 6 months of 1950 Republic Steel has upped its profits to $37,700,000, after taxes. This is an increase of 48 percent.

These examples show tremendous profits but they are pre-Korean figures.

They do not reflect yet the new defense program.

It is my belief, and these figures prove the point, that an excess-profits tax ought to be passed immediately, and it ought to become effective as of January 1, 1950, or at the very latest, July 1, 1950. We should strive to cut the aggregate corporate profits after taxes back to a maximum of around 50 to 75 percent above the peak of World War II. Surely, this would not be asking too much.

Such a tax program will take away the inducements for speculative buying and for profiteering. An excess-profits tax is much preferable to increasing the tax rate on all corporations. It is much more fair and will yield much more revenue than a boost in the corporate tax rate from 38 percent to 45 percent. Such an excess-profits tax if based on current earnings, could yield eight to ten billion dollars. Of course, there will be many problems to be solved in establishing the criteria for an excess-profits tax, but it was done before and it can be done again and without too long a period of debate and study.

Several billion dollars of added taxes should be derived from raising individual income tax rates. In 1948 the Republican Congress passed an ill-conceived and ill-timed tax cut aggregating about $4,000,000,000. I do not think that most Americans suffered from an undue tax burden in the immediate postwar years. In view of our present critical situation and the sacrifices of the boys in uniform, it is not asking too much of the American people to impose the same amount of taxes which were paid before the 1948 cut.

The President has already made proposals to the Congress that the total tax take for the present fiscal year be increased by approximately $5,000,000,000. He advised that heavier taxes would be requested later. In my judgment, his recommendations are sound but they do not go far enough now. We must not lag behind in our tax measures as compared with our preparedness and defense expenditures. Increases which have already been requested for defense purposes will necessitate a sizably enlarged tax take and there is no point in delaying because this will not only mean a growing deficit but will fail to stem the tides of inflation which are so serious already.

The President's interim tax measure was undoubtedly motivated in part by the fact that Congress normally requires many months to formulate a new tax bill. Well, these are not normal times. We cannot afford the luxury of either a halfway measure or of "legislation as usual."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at this amendment for what it is and what it does to this bill. It would eliminate all wage controls from the present bill. I assume if you will do it to the Spence bill you will do it to the Kunkel amendment. You will then get no controls of any kind.

Let us not fool ourselves about this. Anyone who sat in at the hearings before the Rules Committee or anyone who has listened to the debate in the last few days on the floor of this House, must know that the temper of the House is that if you do not have wage controls you are going to get no price controls. They will have to go hand in hand.

Of course, we want to curb profiteering and we want to curb excess profits. There is an amendment at the desk now which I understand will be offered by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER], to impose excess war profits taxes. Our committee is not the committee to consider it. Our committee cannot tell you when you will consider it. You should not ask us to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. They will consider it, and I am sure they will give it to us in ample time.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I am sure the gentleman did not think I made any suggestion that an excess-profits tax should come from the Committee on Banking and Currency. However, I think it is proper for the Members of this House to express themselves to other committees and make more than a suggestion, to lay down what they feel is a minimum of what we should do at this time. I think today is the time to talk about excess-profits taxes.

Mr. MULTER. I quite agree with the gentlewoman. I intended no criticism of anything she said. Neither am I criticizing the thought that prompted the gentleman from Pennsylvania in offering his amendment. I am talking against the amendment to the Spence bill which seeks to eliminate wage controls because this bill does not contain a profits tax provision. The amendment should not prevail. You cannot get any controls if you are going to take wage controls out of this bill. There is ample provision in this measure as offered in the Spence substitute to control profits to a reasonable extent. In section 401 we express the intent in so many words. That is title IV. Price and wage stabilization is intended to eliminate and prevent profiteering, manipulation, and speculation, and to protect the consumer, the wage earner, and the investor from undue impairment of their living conditions.

One of the major differences between the Kunkel amendment and the Spence substitute is that the Kunkel amendment seeks to control only wholesale prices while the Spence substitute seeks to control all prices up and down the line. I hardly need call to your attention the fact that during the OPA days business devised the scheme of vertical set-ups, so when you controlled the wholesale price or the manufacturer's price, he set up a retail outlet so as to evade the OPA provisions. Here in the Spence substitute you have an over-all control provision on prices, which will limit profits at least to some extent until we get the excess-profits tax to take away unconscionable profits.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLOOD. I am sure the distinguished gentleman from New York is not suggesting that the declaration of intention in the Spence substitute can in any way impose any control on profits.

Mr. MULTER. No, but the intent is followed up very clearly in section 402 with its implementation. It provides for the establishment of a ceiling or ceilings on the prices of every commodity and service, and then in the next section you get the control of wages.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman identify profits and prices in the same economic category?

Mr. MULTER. I do not know how you can eliminate profits from control when you control prices because you necessarily are controlling profits to a very great extent when you control the price at which an article may be sold.

Mr. FLOOD. May I submit that is not responsive to my question. I want to know if you consider profits and prices in the same category vis-à-vis wages.

Mr. MULTER. I certainly do. One need not be an economist to know that you control profits when you control prices. A primary result of price control is the limitation of profits.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, those who are familiar with the history of the Communist terror in France in 1793 and 1794 can find ample precedents for some of the control proposals now before the House.

The record of the Communist terror shows that on April 4, 1794, the convention proclaimed a general requisition of all who could serve the state, whether with hand or brain, and threatened to haul before the revolutionary tribunal those who should try to evade this duty.

What was the difficulty that arose? It was how to apply laws which were impossible to execute. The moment the decree was promulgated the shops were emptied, for everyone hurried to buy at an artificially low price what had cost two or three times as much the day before; and when the stocks were exhausted no one was willing to renew them.

In a single day there was no sugar, oil, or candles in Paris. In the provinces the country people rushed to the towns to exchange their notes for clothes, boots, pieces of stuff, or groceries, which the law forced the tradesmen to sell at a ruinous price, and then hurried back to hoard their corn in hiding places which none could discover.

In fact, everyone wanted the maximum prices fixed for his neighbor and liberty for himself.

The law was not only tyrannous but a measure of expropriation. Those who controvened it were threatened with the severest penalties: A year's rigorous imprisonment for bakers who ceased to work, 10 years in irons for millers who bargained over the sale of grain or flour, 10 years in irons for farmers who sent in false returns, and death for those who tried to obstruct the requisitioning.

Did labor escape the rigors of control under the Communist terror in France? A member of the convention addressed some workmen who had revolted against the maximum wage in these words:

Brothers and friends, I learn with sorrow that there are individuals among you who are obstinately bent on obtaining an increase of wages which would be a charge on the republic. What, citizens? Can it be that the detestable spirit of greed which the national justice has destroyed in the case of the forestallers has insinuated itself into the pure soil of the revolutionists? * * * You ask that the law shall be rigorously enforced in respect of what you buy, yet you refuse to obey it in respect of everything you sell to others.

What about the attitude of the farmers of France under the rigid controls imposed upon them? The farmers, whenever they were in a position to evade search they understated the yield of their crops and only sold them clandestinely, at the price that suited them. When they could not safely do this they let the crops rot on the ground on the pretext that they had not enough labor to gather them. In other places, since the maximum price for wheat had been imposed before that of oats, they consented to sell the oats, but fed their horses on the wheat. When the retail price of meat was fixed, they refused to supply the butchers. When the price of cattle on the hoof was fixed, they let their beasts perish.

The records show that the immediate effect of the promulgation of maximum prices was to aggravate the crisis in the supply of food. Under the price fixing of the Communist terror the farmers stopped threshing; the bakers ceased to bake; the innkeepers refused to undertake work in the country where it was needed.

A decree of the convention proclaimed as traitors to the country, subject to the death penalty, all those who should excite misgivings as to the food supplies, attempt to corrupt public opinion, or work for a change of government. Later, another decree banished all those living without working who should be convicted of complaining of the existing system of government.

Then there came a law of the suspects.

Under this law those were deemed enemies of the people and marked for the scaffold who should seek to defame or dissolve the revolutionary government—

That is to say, the royalists and moderates—

those who should seek to hamper the supply of provisions—

In other words, the farmers and tradesmen who were restive under the system of expropriation, and the workmen who were restive under that of the maximum wage—

those who should persecute or calumniate patriots—

That is to say all the past, present, and future enemies of the Jacobins and their creatures—

those who should disseminate false news—

That is, all the chattering women—

those who should spread false reports—

That is, all gossips—

those who should seek to mislead public opinion or inspire discouragement—

That is, everyone who was discontented—

Those accused of any of these crimes were haled before the Revolutionary Tribunal either by the convention, or one of the other committees of the government, or the representatives on mission, or public prosecutor.

The preliminary investigation was done away with. If the Tribunal considered itself to be in possession of sufficient moral proofs, witnesses were not to be called.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose that under the hysteria in this grave hour, a Representative in the United States Congress will be charged with disloyalty if he dares to question the wisdom of giving to President Truman all the powers that he demands over the property and liberty of our citizens.

A careful review of the promises of the President now in effect should be had before granting all of the drastic power now demanded in the bills and amendments now being considered.

I insert some of the powers now possessed relating to the economies of the United States.

Some of the specific powers conferred on the President to meet the "economic emergency" crisis of 1933 are as follows:

To decree a national banking holiday and to forbid the export of gold (Trading With the Enemy Act, 1917). Still in effect.

To validate the President's proclamation of a national banking holiday and reenact in amended form the 1917 Trading With the Enemy Act, on which the proclamation was based (Emergency Banking Act, March 9, 1933, amended December 18, 1941). Still in effect.

To permit Secretary of Agriculture to enter into agreements with producers providing for reduction in acreage or production of basic agricultural commodities and to make benefit cash payments. The President was authorized to terminate the "emergency" relating to it (Agricultural Adjustment Act, May 12, 1933; invalidated, 1936). Principles embodied in revised 1938 Agricultural Adjustment Act and in Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, 1936, both of which are in effect.

To regulate grazing on 142,000,000 acres of the public domain (Grazing Act of June 28, 1934, amended 1936). Still in effect.

To conclude trade agreements with other countries without reference to Congress. This authority includes the right to raise or lower existing duties by 50 percent. (Reciprocal Tariff Act, June 12, 1934, extended June 1945, 1949, 1950). In effect but authority expires June 12, 1951.

To pay farmers an annual limit of $500,000,000 for shifting land from intensive cultivation to forward soil-building and erosion control. Act reestablishes and maintains ratio between purchasing power of farm income and nonfarm income that prevailed in the 5-year period, August 1909–July 1914 (Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, March 1, 1936, extended January 1, 1949, substitute for invalidated 1933 AAA). Still in effect.

To set up a permanent REA to extend loans for the electrification of rural areas not now receiving central-station power and light service (Rural Electrification Act, May 20, 1936, amended 1939 and October 28, 1949). Still in effect.

To increase capital of Commodity Credit Corporation from $3,000,000 to $100,000,000 to buy, sell, hold, lend upon, and otherwise deal in agricultural commodities. Also, to fix limits of future trading, and to curb excessive speculation (Commodity Exchange Act of June 15, 1936). Still in effect.

To regulate commerce in basic agricultural commodities, to continue cash benefits for farmers who cooperate in soil-conservation practices, to set up a system of market controls for use in years of surplus production and enforce control features by penalty taxes for sales above quotas (Agricultural Adjustment Act, 1938, embodying principles of invalidated AAA of 1933 and Soil Conservation Act of 1936). Still in effect.

To increase wages to minimum of 75 cents an hour. Secretary of Labor is given unprecedented "rule making" authority in determining and in administering minimum wave levels (Fair Labor Standards Act, 1938, amended 1949). Still in effect.

To exercise flexible powers in dealing with problems that surround ownership or control of alien property (Trading With Enemy Act, 1917, amended July 3, 1948). Still in effect.

Among the "emergency" powers made available to the President for war preparation were the following:

The increased lending authority of the Export-Import Bank and the removal of the $20,000,000 limit restriction to any one country (act of March 1940). Export-Import Bank is now a permanent agency.

The regulation of investment trusts and advisers, requiring them to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Investment companies had to disclose their investment policies and submit other specified data (Investment Advisers Act of August 22, 1940). Still in effect.

The continuation of Maritime Commission's authority to sell, charter, and operate vessels (Public Law 12, 81st Cong., approved February 26, 1949). Still in effect.

The drafting of the National Guard and the calling up of Reserve components and retired personnel of the Army for periods of training (Selective Training and Service Act, 1940, extended 1950). Draft now extended to July 1, 1951 (Public Law 599, 81st Cong., approved June 30, 1950). Still in effect.

The following are some of the more important war powers made available to the President since 1940:

The power to increase and train the personnel of the Armed Forces (Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, amended 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1950). Still in effect.

The power to prohibit or curtail the exportation of any articles, technical data, materials, and supplies (Exportation Restrictions Act of July 2, 1940). Still in effect but terminates June 30, 1951.

The power to acquire and retain stocks of strategic and critical materials to supply the industrial, military, and naval needs of the country (Strategic War Materials Act of June 7, 1939, amended July 23, 1946.) Still in effect.

The power to purchase or requisition any foreign merchant vessel which is lying idle in waters within the jurisdiction of the United States (Ships Seizure Act of June 6, 1941; extended June 16, 1942). Still in effect.

The power to coordinate executive bureaus in the Government (First War Powers Act of Dec. 18, 1941). Still in effect.

The power to exempt war contracts from certain restrictions (First War Powers Act of Dec. 18, 1941). Still in effect.

The power to investigate, regulate, or prohibit transactions in foreign exchange and to regulate the import and export of gold and silver (Trading With Enemy Act of 1917; also, First War Powers Act, 1941). Still in effect.

The power to facilitate and regulate the orderly disposal of surplus property (Surplus Property Act of Oct. 3, 1944, amended 1949). Still in effect, but expires July 1, 1952.

The power to continue Federal rent control until December 31, 1950, with local option provision for communities to vote to continue controls for another 6 months (Public Law 574, 81st Cong., approved June 23, 1950). In effect until December 31, 1950.

The power to continue authority of Federal Reserve System to purchase up to $5,000,000,000 worth of obligations from United States Treasury under the so-called open-market program for 2 years dating from June 30, 1950 (Public Law 589, 81st Cong., approved June 30, 1950). In effect.

The power to spend additional $2,000,000,000 for Government support of farm prices (Public Law 579, 81st Cong., approved June 30, 1950). In effect.

The power to extend authority to control the importation of fats and oils and rice products to June 30, 1951 (Public Law 590, 81st Cong., approved June 30, 1950). In effect.

Power to establish priorities and allocations was conferred on the President by the act of June 28, 1940 (ch. 440, 54 Stat. 676), amended August 7, 1946. This statute is still in effect so that the President has some priority and allocation controls without the Defense Production Act.

(Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include at this point a statement of the controls which the President now has.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKINNON to the Spence substitute: On page 11, line 12, strike out the word "stand-by";

On page 12, after line 19, insert:

"SEC. 401. (a) Whenever the consumers, price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics increases by 5 percent or more over the index for June 15, 1950, the President shall establish ceilings under section 402 (a) (1) (relating to prices and other charges) and, at the same time, ceilings under section 402 (a) (2) (relating to wages and other compensation), with respect to all materials, services, and types of employment which he finds materially affect the cost of living."

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out several advantages in this amendment over what we have in the proposed legislation. This is pretty much in line with the suggestion that was made in the Senate, known as the Fulbright suggestion, yesterday, and was incorporated in newspaper stories today.

There are several advantages to this proposal over what we have now.

First, we have a definite and positive committment to do something, if prices get out of line, or, shall we say, further out of line.

Second, we have the psychological pressure to keep prices down, for no one wants controls if he can possibly avoid controls. This legislation lends that psychological advantage toward keeping price increases and the cost of living down below the 5 percent factor.

It also encourages business, industrial organizations and associations to get together and voluntarily work out a program for absorbing some of these price increases, or doing other things that will keep that cost-of-living factor down below the 5-percent mark, because business and industry do not want price controls either. This encourages their efforts toward keeping prices from rising.

The 5-percent figure is about all the increase that working groups and groups on a fixed income can afford to absorb without going to the Government and demanding some sort of positive price-and wage-control program.

Another factor is the fact that it saves further deflation of our dollar. Every time we have a 10-percent increase in the cost of living it makes our dollar at the present value worth about 6 cents less than it is at the present time.

This sort of proposition would have the effect of stabilizing and holding the value of the dollar at the present level. Further, it would save the painful and almost impossible adjustments that would have to come if we go into a roll-back at a later date. I think that is a very important factor in recognizing our problem at the present time. Now, it has been said that this was in conflict to a certain degree with the President's thought on the matter, but I do not think it is too great a degree at all. I think it is time that we in this House took it upon ourselves to say what should be done; I think it is our responsibility to take some action along that line rather than delegating our responsibility to anyone else. I think it is up to us to realize that now is the time to get in here and write some law that will keep these prices down, and that it is better for us to do it before they get out of hand rather than to do a little bit here and a little bit there and wind up finding that we have drifted into our old habit of being too late with too little. That is why I offer this amendment and recommend it to you.

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. FURCOLO. I am going to go along with the gentleman. Is it not true that Canada, which probably has had as much experience in this line as any country, perfected a system which worked about as well as any system tried in any country?

Mr. McKINNON. That is the fact.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. I was especially interested in the gentleman's statement that industry and business be given an opportunity to impose voluntary controls to keep prices from going above the 5-percent figure. The leaders of both business and industry must realize that unless prices are held within reasonable limits and stabilized that controls are inevitable; and perhaps by having the cooperation of the leaders of industry, manufacturing, and retailing, the united pressure of these business leaders might be brought to bear to prevent prices breaking the 5 percent base to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. McKINNON. I might add that I want to disturb business as little as possible, but we must do something effective to hold down the price level.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. LANHAM. I think the gentleman is entirely correct when he says that it is our obligation and not that of someone else. I believe the people are going to hold us Members of Congress responsible if we do not do something and do it now to roll prices back. I shall support the amendment.

Mr. McKINNON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I wish to ask the gentleman about the provision for compensating those who suffer hardships. Will he explain that? I am impressed with the merit of his amendment.

Mr. McKINNON. I may say to the gentleman from Arkansas that I intend to offer another amendment later which I think covers what the gentleman has in mind. I do not know whether it will meet the approval of the committee or not, but I shall explain it fully at a later time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word because I wish to finish my interrogation of the gentleman from California. If his pending amendment is related to the amendment for relief of hardship cases resulting from price freezing I would be interested in having a brief description of it.

Mr. McKINNON. I do not want to mix the two amendments because they do not go together as well as ham and eggs; it is another idea, and I propose to offer it at a later time after this amendment is acted upon.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Then it is the gentleman's purpose in his pending amendment for freezing prices and wages that it should be determined by a scientific formula, the BLS index. It is therefore mandatory?

Mr. McKINNON. Yes; and I have adopted June 15 as the closest time at which a BLS index was released prior to the Korean outbreak.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. June 15?

Mr. McKINNON. June 15. That is an approximation of this base period from May to June. The Department of Labor does not have the figures for the 30-day period from May 24 to June 24. It does have the figure as of June 15. To pin it down to a mathematical exactness, I have selected that date so that there can be no argument, no hypothesis, no matter of feeling but matter of fact.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. It follows pretty much the formula of the Fulbright amendment considered by the other body?

Mr. McKINNON. From my understanding, it does.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. The Bureau of Labor Statistics is regarded by statisticians and economists as the most reliable and scientific method we have for determining price relationships.

Mr. McKINNON. If the membership can suggest any better source or any more exact information, I am willing to have it amended in that regard, but I do not think there is anything so dependable as this yardstick, a yardstick, incidentally, which we have depended upon for many years.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I made some study of it in connection with the flexible minimum wage amendment and I was impressed by the fact that the Bureau of Labor Statistics is universally respected. It is entirely nonpolitical, nonpartisan, and scientific in its approach. I think the gentleman has offered a splendid solution to that particular problem and I intend to support his amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is this the same amendment that Governor Bowles offered in a letter to Senator MAYBANK?

Mr. McKINNON. I do not know. I have not seen Senator MAYBANK's mail and I do not know of Governor Bowles' suggestion.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I believe it is the amendment offered by him. I question whether or not it is administratively workable because of the fact that the Bureau of Labor Statistics considers various factors. The price of foodstuffs does fluctuate and those prices would have to go up considerably in order to increase the BLS 5 points because of the weight on the rent and utility side holding it down.

Mr. McKINNON. I may say to the gentleman that it may not be the perfect answer, but to me it is an awful lot better than that which we have in the bill, which does not provide for any controls; it merely talks about standby controls, which is not helpful to the man who buys the groceries and finds them going up. This is a move for stabilizing prices and giving the man with a fixed income some protection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. It is my understanding that, in this amendment if approved by the committee, we will be in effect making it mandatory that price controls be put on our economy at the point where the rise is equivalent to 5 percent of the cost of living, as indicated by the Bureau of Labor Statistics?

Mr. McKINNON. That is right. The Bureau of Labor Statistics puts out a monthly report on the 15th of each month.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Is it not true that the Congress is taking upon itself the responsibility of placing price controls on the American people, and not leaving it to the President's discretion?

Mr. McKINNON. That is what the amendment provides, and I think it is in due keeping with the responsibilities of the House and the Senate also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON], who has offered the amendment that is now under debate. May I ask the gentleman who offered the amendment, what effect would the amendment have on the language which is in some of these bills that gives the President authority to confer with the heads of great labor organizations, and then take action with respect to control on wages, salaries, professional fees, and so forth?

Mr. McKINNON. I do not understand exactly to what the gentleman from Michigan refers but I would say this to the gentleman, if we have a 5 percent maximum increase in the cost of living, and at that point controls go into effect, I think it would be a very great encouragement to maintain steady and continued wage contracts rather than increasing them and getting our economy out of balance in that direction.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, the gentleman feels that the prices at the manufacturing level, the wholesale level, and the retail level would tend to be damped down with each group knowing that if they did go above 5 percent, that these powers would be invoked.

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And that the same psychological influence would upset those who might have a tendency to demand higher wages and use collective-bargaining agreements to increase wages; is that the idea?

Mr. McKINNON. That is correct. I know quite a lot of laboring people on the local level, and they are not concerned, as far as I know, in getting the grab for themselves, but they do want to be sure that their pay check buys a living, and if we can stabilize prices so that living costs do not go up, they will be happy to maintain the status quo; at least the labor people I know feel that way very strongly, and that is to the Nation's interest as well as to the individual's interest.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Personally I do not believe that there is any legislative body on earth that can legislate price ceilings and price levels and wage levels that will be reasonably acceptable to a majority of the people. But, having in mind that a bill is going to be approved carrying such provisions—and I certainly have not made up my mind to support such provisions—I do not know why the whole situation should not be tied to a cost of living or price index. So, I think the gentleman can be congratulated for offering the amendment.

Mr. McKINNON. I would like to point out, if I may, one further fact, and I think this is very important. When we start putting in price levels and controls, they have to go hand in glove with wage controls, for two reasons: First of all, it follows naturally that they go together, because one influences the other. Second, because I do not think any of us want continued controls in a free economy if we can get rid of them by having business and labor tied together in the same basket we are going to have both of those great forces working to get rid of controls at the earliest possible moment, whereas if we have them separated we might find one group wanting controls continued and the other group wanting controls ended, and then we have a political situation. I think this is our maximum guaranty that we can get rid of controls at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from California, under his amendment, if by chance the cost of living index goes down below 105, of the June 15 level, do controls automatically go off?

Mr. McKINNON. Does the gentleman mean at a future time?

Mr. FORD. Yes; whenever that might be, and if it does, under the gentleman's amendment do controls go off immediately?

Mr. McKINNON. That would be my thinking, although it might be necessary for the time being to keep a standby organization in hand in case prices go up again.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the gentleman this question? In the light of section 2 of this bill, which is a very broad policy and ties our whole economy in the United Nations concept, on what basis could the President fail to issue a reduction if your price index declines? I am not referring to section 2, which lays down the broad policy and ties the economy of the country to the objectives of the United Nations charter.

Mr. McKINNON. I think the gentleman is far more qualified to answer that question himself than I. He has been here longer than I, and I think he reads the law much more clearly. I think the gentleman knows his own answer.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. I should like to ask a question of the gentleman or the gentleman from California. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], if prices go below 5 percent, there might be extenuating circumstances when they might not rise to 5 percent. What would be operative then?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I think they are wasting their time when they are thinking about 5 percent or any other percent. I think the people of this country are capable of running their own business. If butter gets up to $1.50 a pound, we do not eat butter.

I hope I have answered the question of the gentleman from Ohio, but I do not think it is a very satisfactory answer. The gentleman knows as much about it as I do.

I do know one thing, Mr. Chairman—that we are probably wasting our time here because the President now has all the authority we are giving him or forcing on him to take care of the situation as it is today, but we are still in a state of war. The Supreme Court has said we are. In a rent-control case within the last year they said that until the President declares this war emergency over these things are constitutional. So the last war emergency is not over. The President has the right to do whatever he pleases because this is a national emergency and the war is not over.

Yesterday the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts, said that no one was confused about this; that everybody on their side of the aisle knew what they were doing. Perhaps they do. I know for sure that I do not know what I am doing, and I have been trying to legislate up in my own State and here for the last 25 years.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. Simply as a matter of information, may I advise the gentleman that the President even under the war-powers legislation does not have the right to invoke price control or wage control.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Under the authority that was given the President in the last War Powers Act he has the right to do anything he pleases, and the gentleman ought to know it.

We were told here last Monday by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I have been a member for the last 3 years, that the President wanted what we brought in here in a bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency. There was one vote against it. I was against it because it took away a constitutional privilege that the people of this country are supposed to have. I have sworn to uphold the Constitution, and I am not going to vote for any bill that is unconstitutional or any part of a bill that I think is unconstitutional.

So we were told that that is what the President wanted. The next day the President wanted two or three more things. If we keep on with this we will have cotton acreages and peanut acreages and rent control and a hundred and one other things in this bill, and the longer we keep on with this here, the worse we will get.

Now then, there is only one thing that we are interested in here, in my opinion, and that is to see that the people who have to do the suffering, the families that are affected by the draft and whose boys are taken out of their homes and sent to the front, and the families where the poor old mother goes down to the grocery store and stands in line all day with a bunch of ration tickets—as I say, the thing we are interested in here, or at least should be interested in is to see that those people are taken care of. I wonder if you have forgotten what happened only 4 or 5 years ago. I wonder if you Members of Congress have forgotten what a sigh of relief everybody in this country gave out when we got rid of these ration tickets and everything else—in other words when we stopped, to that extent at least, the Government running your home. It is bad enough for the Government to step out of line and go beyond the Constitution without it coming in and telling you how to live and how to raise your family and everything else. There is no more sense in rationing today than there would be if there was not any cloud of war a hundred years away. We have plenty of productivity in this country, and everybody knows it.

There is no sense in it. What you are trying to do is to build up an hysteria in this country. The sooner we quit trying to do that and trying to fool the people back home, the better off we will be. Certainly prices have gone up, but they have gone up due to the avarice and greed of mankind, and prices always will go up and you cannot stop it. You can put in a black-market bill here if you want to, but you will have a black market and a gray market, and you will have people all over these United States lying and stealing and evading the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER to the Spence substitute: On page 46, after line 18, add a new subsection, subsection (d) as follows:

"The Attorney General is directed to make, or request the Federal Trade Commission to make for him, surveys for the purpose of determining any factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of this act. The Attorney General shall submit to the Congress and the President within 90 days after the approval of this act, and at such times thereafter as he deems desirable, reports setting forth the results of such surveys and including such recommendations as he may deem desirable."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MULTER. As I understand it, and I am advised to say this, the gentleman has discussed his proposed amendment with the members of our committee on this side of the aisle, and, I think, also has another one similar in effect; and that it is agreeable to us. I understand he has also discussed it with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], chairman of the Small Business Committee, who has also agreed to it. This is the same amendment that the gentleman discussed yesterday and told us the Department of Justice had approved of it, as well as the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct. This is an amendment which was submitted to the Attorney General and he has approved. It is in haec verba, with similar provisions contained in the War Mobilization Act of 1944. It simply provides that the Attorney General shall make a survey of general conditions with a view to considering factors which may tend to eliminate competition, create or strengthen monopolies, injure small business, or otherwise promote undue concentration of economic power in the course of the administration of the act.

I have spoken to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], the distinguished chairman of your committee, and were he here I am sure he would voice what you have just indicated, namely, approval of this amendment.

Mr. MULTER. He has authorized me to make the statement I have made on his behalf.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment of similar import.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER to the Spence substitute: On page 45, line 23, after the word "act", insert "pursuant to this act."

On page 46, line 6, after the word "General", insert the words "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

On page 46, line 13, after the word "General", insert the words "and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission."

On page 46, line 14, strike out the period, add a comma, and the following: "and that if any objection is made by the Attorney General or by the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission within that period, the President, or such person as he may designate, shall approve or disapprove the request."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MULTER. This amendment also was discussed by the gentleman yesterday and placed in the RECORD. I am authorized to make the same statement with reference to this amendment on behalf of the members of the committee on this side of the aisle that I made with reference to the other amendment, that it is acceptable to us.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, there is an error in the amendment. The words "pursuant to this act" should follow the words "omission to act."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the qualification of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I wish to state that we have no objection to this amendment, on this side. It follows the law that was on the books previously, and that is the policy that I have tried to follow in my own substitute, to make it conform to previous war legislation, which the gentleman's amendment does.

Mr. CELLER. Supplementing what I said yesterday about exemptions from operations of the antitrust laws granted during the last war it would appear from the Justice Department files that 175 to 200 exemptions were granted during the war period through to 1945.

Twenty-seven cases of an antitrust nature were postponed till the war was over. Of these two were actually on trial at the time of postponement. One affecting the General Electric Co., the other affecting the American Optical Co.

Generally the Justice Department adopted a policy of disapproving applications for exemptions and insisted upon going to trial where fraud was alleged.

I herewith append telegrams approving these amendments:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 3, 1950.
Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives:

The National Association of Retail Druggists representing 34,000 independent retail pharmacists practicing their profession in every State of the Union and the District of Columbia endorses your amendment to the Defense Act of 1950 as it relates to section 508 (a) and (b). It is imperative that small business must not be deprived of the protection of the antitrust laws.

JOHN W. DARGAVEL,
Executive Secretary,
National Association of Retail Druggists.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 3, 1950.
Representative EMANUEL CELLER,
House Office Building:

We strongly support your proposed amendment to section 508, defense production bill. Such amendment essential to preserve antitrust legislation and free economy.

COOPERATIVE LEAGUE,
WALLACE J. CAMPBELL.

SEATTLE, WASH., August 3, 1950.
Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee,
House of Representatives:

National Congress of Petroleum Retailers heartily endorses your amendment, section 508, Defense Act 1950.

RANKIN PECK,
President, National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 3, 1950.
Hon. EMANUEL CELLER,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee,
House Office Building:

I have reviewed the proposed amendment to section 508 (a) and (b) of the Defense Production Act and I wish to say that the National Federation of Independent Business consisting of a membership of over 100,000 independent business and professional men will vigorously support your proposed amendment to the bill for the purpose of protecting our antitrust laws.

Without this amendment it would leave the door wide open to possible nullification of the antitrust laws. In the time of national emergency it is more important than ever before that independent business receive protection under our antitrust laws.

We must not in fighting for freedom abroad take steps which would result in the loss of freedom at home.

GEORGE J. BURGER,
Vice President, National Federation of Independent Business, Inc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. ST. GEORGE to the amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 48, line 20, of the Spence admendment, add the following new section:

"SEC. —. (a) There is hereby established a Joint Economic Security Committee, to be composed of four Members of the Senate (two from each major political party) to be appointed by the President of the Senate and four Members of the House of Representatives (two from each major political party) to be appointed by the Speaker of the House.

"(b) The joint committee is authorized and directed to make a continuing study and investigation of, and advise and consult with the President with respect to, the administration of this act. The members of the joint committee who are Members of the Senate shall from time to time report to the Senate, and the members of the joint committee who are Members of the House of Representatives shall from time to time report to the House, with respect to the manner in which the President is using the powers and authority granted to him under this act. Such reports shall contain such recommendations as the joint committee deems advisable.

"(c) Vacancies in the membership of the joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the joint committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original selection. The joint committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

"(d) The joint committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such places and times, to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to procure such printing and binding, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with a subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this subsection.

"(e) The joint committee is empowered to appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, consultants, technicians, and clerical and stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation prescribed under the Compensation Act of 1949 for comparable duties. The committee is authorized to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and establishments of the Government."

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, but will reserve it to permit the gentlewoman from New York to make a statement if she so desires.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I thank the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I should like to know at what portion of the bill the amendment is to be inserted.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. It is to be added to the end of the bill as a new section.

Mr. KUNKEL. Does not the gentlewoman feel that it would be preferable to add it prior to the termination clause?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Yes; I agree with the gentleman. If the gentleman would prefer to see it inserted there I certainly would agree with the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. KUNKEL. At page 48, line 20.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be inserted at page 48, line 20, after the word "thereby."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not an original thought with me; it was inspired by the testimony of Albert S. Goss, the master of the National Grange. I think Mr. Goss brought out an extremely important thing; and even if this amendment does not carry, I want to speak to that specific point.

Mr. Goss in his testimony stated that the Congress of the United States were the representatives of the people and were closer to the people than anyone else. I think this is a fact that has been lost sight of; and we, the Members of Congress, are losing sight of that fact. For the last 20 years or more this Nation of ours has been engaged in wars or has been close to war. War and freedom cannot live together; they cannot mix, and as a result we Members of Congress have abdicated many of our powers. This amendment merely seeks to put the Congress back a little bit into the high councils of government.

This commission would meet with the President. They would not influence his final decision, because I realize that that would not be their province; but at least they would know what is happening, and I submit to the Members of this House that many of us have not known what was happening for a long time and that there have been a great many changes of opinion made very suddenly, such as the strategic value of Korea and Formosa. It seems to me, therefore, that we owe a responsibility to the people who sent us here, that we cannot in a moment of hysteria pass this legislation which gives all power to the executive branch of the Government and then perhaps turn around and blame the Executive for the mistakes that are made. We have a responsibility to our people; we must assume that responsibility. It has been well said today that this war is everybody's war; it is also the war of Members of Congress. Congress, however, must shoulder its responsibility; we must play our part; we must not abdicate. For that reason I have introduced this amendment, and I hope that it will carry. It is a mild amendment; it is perhaps far too mild, but I do believe that it will again establish the equality of the legislative branch of the Government that has been lost on every hand. It will not reestablish it entirely, but it will again put us on the way to reestablishing it, if such thing is possible.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I wish to say to the gentlewoman from New York that I expect to support her amendment. I feel as she does, that it has been altogether too much our tendency to delegate our authority to the executive branch. I also share with her the feeling that this amendment is mild. At least we should do what the gentlewoman has suggested. I have prepared an amendment along similar lines. I think it is the very minimum of what we should do. The people are looking to us to have some hand in the way this law, if passed, is administered.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I congratulate the gentlewoman from New York on an excellent and thoughtful statement. She has a very forward looking point of view.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. I have had an opportunity to read the testimony of Mr. Goss, master of the National Grange, and I though his idea was a good one. I have prepared such an amendment myself. I will be glad to support the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COLE of New York. I recall that in the early days of rationing and price control during the last war one of the major criticisms and complaints was that there was no forum where the people could register their complaints and point out the defects in the administration of that law, so much so that subsequently the House did create a special committee for that very purpose. It occurs to me that the proposal of the gentlewoman from New York would in advance of the criticism provide this necessary forum.

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order. This is an attempt to set up in this bill a joint committee. I do not believe the amendment is germane or that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman from New York desire to be heard?

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the gentleman's point may be well taken. Of course, it is more or less of a legal quibble. The amendment, in my opinion, has a very definite place in this bill. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] said brought that out abundantly, namely, that in the last war, when I was not a Member of Congress, it was found necessary to create this kind of a commission in order to take care of this very matter. For this reason it would seem to me wiser, in view of the fact that we know such an amendment or such a bill may be necessary, to incorporate it at this time in the present bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the gentlewoman from New York in her position and point out a previous time where the House did create such a joint committee. It was known as the "watchdog committee" on European aid funds. I was a member of that committee. It was not subject to a point of order in the European aid or Marshall funds bill.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the amendment is germane to this bill.

Second. We already have a joint committee, the Joint Committee on the Economic Report, charged with the duty of doing practically everything that this amendment would cause a joint committee to do.

Third. This same proposal came up in connection with the first OPA bill in 1941 and in 1942 and instead of adopting this proposal we finally agreed to have advisory committees. That was inserted in the bill. There was provision for advisory committees to take the place of this.

Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York undertakes to set up a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, which is a subject that is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The Chair holds that the amendment is not germane, and, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can agree on a time to close debate on the Spence substitute.

Mr. PATMAN. If this amendment is defeated, the Kunkel amendment will be subject to amendment? In other words, the gentleman is asking for a vote on the Spence amendment?

Mr. SPENCE. On the Spence substitute; yes.

Mr. BARDEN. Does the gentleman mean to cut off debate now and accept the Spence substitute?

Mr. SPENCE. No; I am asking for a time at which debate shall be cut off. I suggest that debate be cut off at 3 o'clock. I do not mean to cut off the amendment. If the Spence substitute should be defeated, the Kunkel amendment will then be subject to amendment.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman has more faith in his bill than many of us who do not think we can make a good bill out of it by 3 o'clock.

Mr. SPENCE. I have a great deal of faith in the House.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BARDEN: On page 30, line 3, of the Spence substitute, strike out all of title 5.

[Mr. BARDEN addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, when H. R. 9176 was presented to the House of Representatives for consideration, my mind was an open one. For 3 days I have listened to debate. During the entire time, there has been considerable confusion, disordered explanations, and a confused collection of ideas. No one has given the least reason why this drastic action is necessary. I am convinced that the entire proposition was ill-conceived, ill-planned and ill-timed.

Who wrote the original bill? Who is the master mind behind this scheme to regiment the American people—to saddle the American people with another OPA, snoopers, bureaucrats, and black markets? Surely not anyone who has given credence to the productive and the inventive capacities of Americans who have made this the greatest nation since the beginning of time—the greatest in terms of human comfort, human freedom, and liberty, human safety and the highest standard of living—who, next to the boys who fought, did more than anyone else to win World War II.

Should this Congress surrender every responsibility, and permit these do-gooders to regiment and control the daily lives of 150,000,000 of our people, while on the other hand young American men are scattered throughout the world to stop just that sort of thing? I say not.

I ask you why representatives of agriculture, of business, of labor were not brought before the Committee on Banking and Currency for their expressions? Because, of course, they would have made too good a case against this unwarranted action.

America has become great because of freedom of action and freedom of opportunity. The difference between America's productive greatness and other nations of the world is the degree of regimentation and interference.

The only reason that has been given why we need this stringent action, is because our defense department needs supplies and materials. Will anyone deny that when the defense department makes its requirements known, that our industrial plants will not go all out to meet those requirements? Will anyone deny that the best way and the surest way to meet those requirements is to let them alone—free from controls and interference? Performance in the past should answer that question. They have the capacity, the know-how, the experience, and the will to meet the requirements on schedule.

I believe controls unnecessary because I fervently believe that our mines, our mills, our farms, our factories can produce more efficiently if they are not hampered by boards, bureaus, and unnecessary regulations. I say this with the sincere belief that it is the best way to assist in getting us out of the present precarious position. If I thought otherwise, I would be for controls, regimentation, boards, and commissions.

I think passage of this bill would be a backward step. Its accomplishments would be exactly opposite to what we desire. A regimented United States plays into the hands of our enemies and accelerates the trend toward the system they advocate and which we are fighting.

If the Congress of the United States is not in agreement with this position and they do decide to risk the placing of controls upon our productive capacities, I urge that these controls be limited to priorities, allocations, requisitions, and plant construction—only for those specific things needed by the military, the Atomic Energy Commission, or arming our allies.

Concern over inflation is growing in some quarters. The only reason for this concern at the present time is due to a consumer hysteria. There is no shortage of supply—industry and distribution have met all demands up to this time. There is no reason why—left unhampered—industry and distribution should not meet any demands presently proposed by the Department of Defense, and take this domestic production and distribution in stride.

If the Congress of the United States believes that laws should be prepared for inflation control, I would recommend that the laws be written now for future enactment only when necessary, and that these laws establish at this time the base period for prices and wages, so that when it is found necessary to put the law into effect, both wages and prices will be rolled back to the preestablished date. I further recommend that the determination of the effective date be made only by Congress and that Congress jealously reserve that right.

During our period of rearmament for defense, I strongly urge—and reiterate this position—that Congress drastically cut and eliminate all unnecessary spending; and that city, State, and county, and other local government bodies, along with national bureaus and agencies, refrain from construction of public works, public meeting halls and buildings, and all of those things that will use materials, supplies, manpower, and contribute to an inflation—except those that are essential to the public health and safety.

Every Member of Congress is gravely concerned over present world conditions. Never in history have the people of the world been so confused. Never in the history of the Congress of the United States has it been so important that minds remain free from politics and hysteria as at the present time.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the previous speaker, the gentleman from Illinois in the beginning of his remarks said he did not know where the agitation for price control came from. He intimated that perhaps there were some secret pressure groups behind this legislation. The American people are neither without reflection, nor memories. They remember during the last conflict the immense fortunes that were made by black marketeers at the public's expense and to the public's detriment. They have observed that this same lack of patriotism exists at the present time. They have seen the prices of necessary commodities go sky high during the few days of this so-called Korean crisis.

If the gentleman from Illinois will but study his mail he will see that the demand for this legislation comes from the grass roots and from the city streets and he will see that the agitation is a spontaneous one. The American people are not content to wait any longer. They have had the opportunity to observe the selfishness of those who would take advantage of the country's plight. The American people are determined that there shall be legal restraints upon those who care not for the common good. They know that legislation must be enacted giving the President broad powers to control the situation. They know that the ordinary parliamentary procedure would be entirely too slow and would not be effective.

The gentleman constantly used the word regimentation. Let me remind him of this. For the last quarter of a century the words regimenting and regimentation of the American people have been thrown around in this Chamber quite casually, yet for 22 of the last 24 years the American people have placed their destiny in the hands of those whom you say are regimenting them. The people know that while the Democratic Party may have made mistakes it has constantly tried to do that which would be for the common good. The people have faith in us and they have faith in this legislation. They know that they asked for it and since they did we should not be politicians today. We should give to the President broad, sweeping powers with full penalties that will make it possible for him to protect our people from black marketing, hoarding, and price raising.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE] has expired.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN], chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, which would strike out title 5 of the new Spence bill.

OBJECTIONS TO TITLE V

There seems to be no need whatsoever for the inclusion in this bill of title V, entitled "Settlement of Labor Disputes." The main purpose of this bill is to halt inflation and hoarding and the misuse of scarce materials in the interest of national defense. There are provisions in the bill to provide for wage stabilization.

Once wage stabilization goes into effect the issues which might arise in labor disputes are so limited that it is not necessary to have a new Board created which would merely duplicate the work of the Mediation and Conciliation Service established by title II of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947.

Section 201 (a) of that act already states that the national policy is to promote industrial peace "by the settlement of issues between employers and employees through the processes of conference and collective bargaining between employers and the representatives of their employees."

Section 201 (c) of that act also provides that certain controversies can be minimized by making use of governmental facilities for mediation. In other words, the statement of policy embodied in section 501 of this bill and the first sentence of section 502 are already embodied in a permanent statute. The second sentence of section 502 which authorizes the President to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes, including the designation of boards and commissions, is dangerously broad. It would not only give the President authority to create unnecessary and duplicating agencies of mediation, but also seems to imply that if he saw fit he could create a system of compulsory arbitration and even resort to such sanctions as conscripting labor, as he once sought to do in the famous railway labor strike of 1946. Surely, if any such stringent measures need to be taken they should be carefully considered by the standing Committee on Education and Labor of this House and reported to it for consideration in a bill specifically defining the circumstances under which such authority may be used.

It cannot be said today that the President is powerless to prevent stoppages which endanger the national defense. Sections 206 to 210 of the Labor-Management Relations Act authorizes the President whenever the national safety is endangered to apply for injunctive relief in the courts.

The authority given to the President is so broad here in the new Spence bill that it is not even clear that he must exercise his authority within the framework of the Labor-Management Relations Act.

In my opinion, title V should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCONNELL. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. As the ranking Republican on the Committee on Education and Labor, I ask the gentleman, and also I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE], to tell us in their capacities what effect this title 5 has on the Taft-Hartley law? Does it reenact it, keep it entirely in effect, or does it repeal it and cut it out, or does it amend it?

Mr. McCONNELL. I think it decidedly casts a shadow of doubt as to the processes set forth in the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, known as the Taft-Hartley Act.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCONNELL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman read the last sentence of title 5?

Mr. McCONNELL. Yes; I have read the last sentence.

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot understand how the gentleman can make that statement in view of the language in that last sentence. That language states:

> Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions——

Mr. McCONNELL. What is meant by "being consistent"? Will the gentleman tell us? He offered the bill. I am not sure what it means.

Mr. PATMAN. It certainly is not to be inconsistent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield that I may finish my quotation?

Mr. McCONNELL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The language reads:

Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

Mr. McCONNELL. Why is title 5 put in this particular bill?

Mr. PATMAN. To make sure that laws like Taft-Hartley are not interfered with.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCONNELL. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Under the language quoted by the gentleman from Texas, the only person who would know whether or not the Taft-Hartley Act was going to be applicable would be the person administering it. There is no way that we would know.

Mr. PATMAN. The Constitution would take care of that.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. He could use it or not use it just as he wanted.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCONNELL. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. May I then ask the gentleman what is the necessity of the provision that states that the President is authorized after consultation with labor and management to establish: One, such principles; two, procedures, and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes?

Mr. PATMAN. It all ties into section 501. I hope the gentleman reads 501 carefully.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; but if he has not the right to change any existing law at all, why do you give him further powers on principles, procedure, and action?

Mr. PATMAN. Excepting the powers set out here, price and wage stabilization.

(Mr. McCONNELL was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, the situation has been created here in the committee whereby it would appear to me that the committee would be acting wisely were it to accept the counsel of the gentleman from New York, a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that the committee turn down the Spence substitute, that it likewise turn down the Kunkel substitute; that it return to the Spence amendment, strike out the exchange and real-estate provisions, pass the law, then let all other questions involved go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency for the quick treatment of that great committee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anything that is more provoking in wartime or during an emergency than strikes. The gentleman from Michigan yesterday explained how provoking it was to his outfit over in Europe when they read about strikes here in the United States, when they were fighting in World War II.

The object of title V is to prevent strikes in wartime and during an emergency. Why should we oppose that? Why should not we be in favor of stopping strikes? I am not in favor of strikes during wartime. I would like to have some fair, equitable way to stop them. That is the reason for title V in this bill.

Let us read it:

SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES

SEC. 501. It is the intent of Congress, in order to provide for effective price and wage stabilization pursuant to title IV of this act and to maintain uninterrupted production, that there be effective procedures for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense.

I am sure every Member of this House agrees with that. You do not want production interfered with. You want uninterrupted production.

Here is the rest of it:

SEC. 502. The national policy shall be to place primary reliance upon the parties to any labor dispute to make every effort through negotiation and collective bargaining and the full use of mediation and conciliation facilities to effect a settlement in the national interest. The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense, including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions as he may deem appropriate to carry out the provisions of this title.

In other words, they must affect national defense, they must affect production. The object of this is to have uninterrupted production and not have strikes during an emergency.

SEC. 503. In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this act.

I cannot understand why there should be any objection to this title. I know that the gentleman from North Carolina knows all about labor laws, and I say that because I really mean it. I know hardly anything about labor laws, but, reading this language as a layman, I cannot understand why anyone will oppose it. We do not want our production interrupted. We want uninterrupted production. We do not want strikes involving national defense. We want some way to iron out the difficulties. This is the way provided to stop strikes in an emergency in order to have uninterrupted production.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN. I appreciate the gentleman's generosity and his compliment, but right at this time I believe I would rather have his support. Referring to the first part of this section that the gentleman read, there is not a thing in the world new about that. That is the law of the land today.

Mr. PATMAN. It is new in this bill because we are setting up price and wage stabilization. We want to coordinate it. During the last war we did not have coordination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, during the last war, the War Labor Board did not coordinate their efforts with price and wage stabilization, consequently without reference to prices or wages they would be increased. This will require coordination.

Mr. BARDEN. Is that not why this Congress set up the Conciliation Service? Is that not why this Congress passed other legislation? The same regulations were in effect then.

But here is the part that the House will not like, and I cannot understand why the gentleman defends it:

The President is authorized, after consultation with labor and management, to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes.

Does that include compulsory arbitration?

Mr. PATMAN. No.

Mr. BARDEN. What does it include?

Mr. PATMAN. It is all tied in to production for national defense, every bit of it. I do not care what is done under it, but as long as we have uninterrupted production in time of war, I am in favor of it.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PATMAN. Sure.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman would not even attempt to defend this yesterday afternoon and did not know where it came from. Now, does he know where it came from?

Mr. PATMAN. I did not say I did not know where it came from.

Mr. BARDEN. Where did it come from?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not know, but it is a good provision, and I am for it; it is a fine thing. I am for all-out production.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman is for everything in it.

Mr. PATMAN. I am for uninterrupted production. I want to put something in this bill that will give us uninterrupted production for national defense, and I think this is one of the best provisions in the bill.

Mr. BARDEN. I understand the gentleman is against sin; but this is not the way to stop it.

Mr. PATMAN. And I hope it remains in the bill. If you have a separate agency, there is no coordination in trying to have price and wage stabilization. This is tying it in with these war boards.

Mr. BARDEN. Anything that is as important and as wide-reaching as the gentleman says this is, labor should have been given some consideration in it, and there has not been a single one of them approached.

Mr. PATMAN. I think it is a good provision according to its own language. I hope it stays in.

(Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas was quite correct in his presentation of the case against the Barden amendment. It is going to be necessary, if we get into a critical national defense situation, to have coordination of the various sections of this bill.

What this section does, in effect, is give the President authority to set up a body comparable to the War Labor Board of World War II. That board rendered yeoman service to the people of this country. It did keep strikes at an irreducible minimum, and that is exactly what we want to have accomplished, if it is necessary, by using this section. I do not understand on what basis the gentleman from North Carolina has suddenly become worried about the interests of the labor movement under this section. I have discussed this section with labor leaders during the last 24 hours and I have not found a single one who is opposed to this section. They spoke from their background of experience during the war. They know that it is necessary to have an agency other than the National Labor Relations Board or the Mediation Service to accomplish the settlement of disputes during wartime. The normal machinery does not work in war situations—that point we must understand. Neither the Taft-Hartley Act nor the Conciliation and Mediation Service make available the kind of facilities which get labor and management to sit down across the conference table and work out the problems which will have been created if we put price control and wage stabilization into effect.

That is the problem. You need a different kind of machinery than you have today. The National Labor Relations Board is concerned with dealing with grievances of unions against employers, or employers against unions. It is not concerned with trying to coordinate the settlement of labor disputes with wage stabilization or price-control policy. The Mediation Service can only use its functions in trying to get parties together who are apart. It has nothing to do with price control or wage stabilization. And it cannot enter any dispute unless it is invited in by one of the parties to the controversy.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McCONNELL. Then, as I understand it, the purpose of this title is to go beyond the Taft-Hartley Act and to not only provide for the appointment of extra boards but also to enable extreme actions to settle strikes never intended when the Taft-Hartley Act was set up; is that correct?

Mr. BIEMILLER. My understanding of the section is, I repeat, to create, if necessary, an agency comparable to the War Labor Board, on which, as you all will recall, there were direct representatives of labor, management, and the public.

Mr. McCONNELL. But this act goes beyond that, beyond the right to set up additional boards and commissions. It says "to take such action as he deems appropriate." What would the gentleman visualize under that phrase?

Mr. BIEMILLER. The creation of an agency comparable to the War Labor Board, on the basis of our previous practical experience, composed of representatives of labor and management and the public, to work out a policy similar to that utilized during World War II—a policy which was accepted by labor and management.

The National War Labor Board and regional boards that were created were able in many instances to settle disputes that the Taft-Hartley law could not settle and that the Conciliation and Mediation Service could not settle. They did get people together. The prestige of the labor and management representatives who sat on that War Labor Board was primarily responsible for settling dispute after dispute.

I am talking now about something with which I had first-hand experience. I was in the War Production Board Labor Division and worked closely with the War Labor Board all through the war. I saw that as a result of this voluntary bringing together of labor and management and getting them to sit down and work out their policies on a sound, patriotic basis we did keep strikes at the lowest possible level during the war.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that this amendment is necessary, because we discovered in World War II that there was no coordination between the War Labor Board and a stabilization agency such as OPA? We realize that was a mistake during World War II, and this is to correct that mistake.

Mr. BIEMILLER. That is substantially correct. There were grave difficulties that developed during World War II because of the lack of coordination. As the gentleman from Texas says, this bill is an attempt to put the whole problem together and bring price control, wage stabilization, and settlement of labor disputes into close coordination.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McCONNELL. Does it not seem only fair that if we are going to extremes beyond that provided under present statutes—extremes that we cannot even anticipate for certain at the moment that such a matter ought to be more thoroughly considered, and for that purpose should be referred to the proper standing committee of the House. That committee can speedily report a well-thought-out bill so that we can know definitely to what limits the President can go in extreme action against labor and management.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Far be it from me to pass upon the prerogatives of standing committees of this House, I am convinced, partly on the basis of my own experience as special assistant to labor Vice Chairman of the War Production Board that we must have coordination between these proposed groups, that the whole matter should be handled in one bill, setting up various kinds of control techniques. You cannot separate continuous production and the need to keep labor disputes at a minimum from a wage stabilization and a price-control policy. If you do not, for example, roll prices back, you are not going to get wage stabilization without terrific uproar. Labor is patriotic and will cooperate, but American workers expect fair treatment and a voice in handling this question. All these questions are interrelated. You cannot talk about wage control without talking about price controls, and a stiff excess-profits tax. If we are to put ceilings on our economy, the ceilings must be the same height for everybody. And the War Labor Board is a necessary agency in maintaining the ceilings.

Mr. McCONNELL. Why do we not just set up a board, then, if that is the purpose of this section, rather than going to the extreme we go to here?

Mr. BIEMILLER. Because in the first place we do not know whether a board is going to be needed. I pray, as you do, that it will not be. Second, if a board is going to be set up and you are going to get the proper response from both management and labor, it should be set up as the War Labor Board was and as this bill provides, after consultation with labor and management representatives. We do not want the Government simply imposing on labor and management a ready-made scheme of things. We want to get the enthusiastic cooperation of both sides of the bargaining table, as we did have during World War II in almost every instance. That is all this does, is set up that machinery. Americans are free people and will respond to any emergency much better if they are consulted and given responsibility.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BARDEN. I believe this bill provides for the cooperation and the use of the various agencies of the Government in carrying it out. Is that not true?

Mr. BIEMILLER. Correct.

Mr. BARDEN. You have title 4, which deals with price and wage stabilization.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Correct.

Mr. BARDEN. We have on the statute books our Mediation Service. The only excuse in the world for that Service is to do the very thing the gentleman is saying is necessary, to get labor and management together, to mediate and arbitrate.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I must differ with my esteemed friend from North Carolina. Having been organizer for the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor at one time. I know something about the activities of the Conciliation Service. The Conciliation and Mediation Service deals only with a given controversy. This would be a board to deal, if necessary, with general policy and to prevent strikes in the national defense industries only. The Conciliation and Mediation Service is concerned with restaurant disputes, laundry disputes, and every other kind of small, technical dispute you might get.

Mr. BARDEN. If it is not restricted to a given situation, it means it can arouse disturbance and turmoil everywhere.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Not at all. My second point is this, that in the Conciliation and Mediation Service you do not have representatives of labor and management. That is what I think you need during a national defense situation, which is not normal. It is a critical problem. You cannot afford to have the luxury of disputes leading to strikes. That is what the War Labor Board prevented during the war.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman knows the Conciliation Service could not operate without labor and management cooperating with it. They are bound to have that cooperation.

Mr. BIEMILLER. But I am talking about sitting down together on the board and having a chance to work out policy problems day by day together as we did during World War II. We should not scrap the valuable lesson we learned—that real cooperation can be obtained and strikes and lockouts kept at a minimum if we consult with labor and management and give them responsibility for helping to maintain industrial peace.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Barden amendment will be defeated.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. I think the amendment should be adopted for the obvious reason that we are here dealing with certain production price-control and wage-control legislation. I do not think this is the time, without careful consideration certainly, to be undertaking to write new legislation dealing with labor-management relations.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] disclaimed knowledge of the labor laws. He is, however, an able member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. But to my mind he kind of let the cat out of the bag in his explanation of what this section means. Of course, if he is correct in his explanation, then for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] to be arguing so vigorously against the amendment certainly strikes me as a little strange.

The gentleman from Texas contends that this section is designed to bring about what? Uninterrupted production. Let us not get into a philosophical argument here as to whether or not in times of crisis like these we want to have strikes. Of course we do not. We do hope to have uninterrupted production—but in a free economy. If you absolutely assure by law uninterrupted production you can do nothing other than outlaw strikes.

I have heard a lot of talk here in recent years about slave-labor legislation. Never at any time has the Congress of the United States in peace or war undertaken to outlaw all strikes.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. BIEMILLER. May I point out there is nothing that outlaws strikes. May I remind the gentleman that only 2 nights ago one of the outstanding labor leaders in America, George Meaney, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, said in the event of the continuance of the critical situation labor is quite ready to make a no-strike pledge. That, incidentally, was one of the principles set up by the War Labor Board.

Mr. HALLECK. But Mr. George Meaney will not say to you or to me, sir, that he is willing for the Congress of the United States to enact any legislation outlawing strikes. I do not know whether the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] knows what he is talking about when he undertakes to explain this section, but I have been listening to some of the debate here and I am frank to confess I have not found anyone, either on or off the committee, who seems to know very much about what some of this language means. Let me just say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have not had any labor leader suggesting to me what their appraisal of this is. The gentleman says that he has had. But I can read the English language, and it says here:

> The President is authorized after consultation with labor and management—

Yes—consultation—but that does not mean you have to follow anybody's dictates—> to establish such principles and procedures and to take such action * * * as he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes affecting the national defense.

Now then, national defense is as broad as the economy of the country when you are in war. No one can deny that. So the President is authorized under this language, if he saw fit, to invoke the power of injunction or take any action which he deems appropriate for the settlement of labor disputes. That means, in the words of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] to require uninterrupted production. Why, to my mind, that would permit compulsory arbitration, which is anathema to organized labor. It would provide for the unlimited use of the injunctive power to settle labor disputes, and that again is anathema to organized labor.

Yes. I think it would legalize, by congressional action, in this particular language herein contained, the very thing that President Truman sought to do when he asked the Congress to grant him authority to draft the striking railroad workers into the Army.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. How can the gentleman make that argument when the language is so very plain? The intent is to have uninterrupted production for national defense.

Mr. HALLECK. I am making my argument out of the words that came from the mouth of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Read the language.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes. I have been reading the language. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] said that the whole purpose is to set up a war labor board. If you read the language, that is a kind of incidental thing to the granting of the power to the President to take whatever action he wants, because it says, "including the designation of such persons, boards, or commissions."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not know how the President would use this authority. I know it is there. I know the power is there, and, as far as I am concerned, I do not believe this is the time to be writing this sort of legislation.

Prerogatives of committees? I recognize that many times we push that pretty far, and perhaps it is not so important; but, on the other hand, if you are dealing with a matter of such vital concern, not only to management and to men, but to the whole country and the national interest, at least there ought to be opportunity for testimony and evidence as to just what this section means. You did not have any explanation of that by the people who might be affected by it, in labor or industry, before the Committee on Banking and Currency, prior to bringing this proposal here. None at all. There is no emergency involved in this. So, certainly, this amendment should be supported and that title stricken out, and if something like this is required to be done we will get at it in due course and in the right way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

(Mr. HOLIFIELD asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day a great many of us went along with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] on an amendment which we thought was more than fair to the agricultural part of our Nation.

Now, here is an amendment striking out a title, to which I ask your indulgence in considering for just a few moments.

The following section has not been read; or at least, in the light of the argument just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], it has not been considered. I would like the House to consider the following language, in the same section, 503, at the bottom of page 30:

In any action which may be taken pursuant to authority provided for in this title, due regard shall be given to terms and conditions of employment established by prevailing collective-bargaining practice which will be fair to labor and management alike, and will be consistent with stabilization policies established under this act. Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws.

Now, I ask the membership to consider that. Any action taken by the President has to be consistent with laws now on the books. It has to be for the purpose of continuing uninterrupted defense production. It is in the field of defense production. It is specialized. Is there anything unreasonable in this?

I come from a laboring district. I do not know whether labor wants this or not, and I do not care, but I think if it is good to take the boys over there to fight and die in Korea, it is also good to use every means possible, consistent with law, to maintain uninterrupted production in our defense plants. In the agricultural section we gave the President authority to make adjustments of the incentive production of certain types of agricultural products, in fact, all agricultural products, because we struck out the words "fresh fruits" and put in the words "agricultural products." We have given him some arbitrary authority there. Is he going to abuse it? He is going to exercise it in terms consistent with increased production, to make such financial adjustment to the farmer as necessary.

All we are trying to do here is to prevent emergencies in war industries, any industry that affects the national defense. I can remember the President brought in a law here, the amended Railroad Act, and I can remember that most of the Members of this House voted for it. That bill drafted railroad labor. It was far more drastic than title V of this bill.

This title is to set up a War Labor Board. The War Labor Board did not have authority to draft labor, and there is no labor law in the books under which he could draft labor and force them to work involuntarily, and yet have it consistent with the Federal statutes on labor, the Taft-Hartley and other acts. But we know that the Taft-Hartley Act cannot stop a strike, that after the final 90 days of labor freeze or strike freeze they are right back where they started, and can go right ahead and strike if they want to.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I yield.

Mr. JACOBS. Again I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that in section 502 the President is authorized after a consultation with labor and management—after consultation—then he is authorized to establish such principles and procedures, and to take such action as he deems appropriate. If that does not mean that the President can institute compulsory arbitration then I just do not understand the English language at all.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I think if the gentleman will apply section 503 which states that his action shall be consistent with the principles of the Fair Labor Standards Act and other Federal labor standards statutes, he will realize that there is no law that provides for compulsory arbitration.

Mr. JACOBS. If the gentleman will permit, the difficulty that the House is in here today is that it shies away from facing the cold hard facts of the situation. The cold hard fact is that we are at war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may be allowed to proceed for one additional minute in order that I may finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBS. A time may come when we have to have compulsory arbitration, because when people cannot get along and cannot do business, and business is vital to production, then we may have to have compulsory arbitration.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I thank the gentleman. I hope he will just allow me to use the last 10 seconds of my minute. Those of us who are trying to deal with this problem of inflation must consider very seriously the provisions of this act and the limitations that are imposed therein.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLIFIELD. If I have any time remaining I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has referred to section 503. I find these words in the last sentence: "other Federal labor standards statutes." I do not recall seeing the word "standards" used before.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. I call the gentleman's attention to the Walsh-Healey Act, for instance, and the Bacon-Davis Act.

Mr. HALLECK. Would that phrase include the Labor-Managament Relations Act as "standards" legislation? I do not think so.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. WERDEL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about the words in the last sentence to the effect that any such action the President may take shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and other Federal labor standards statutes and with other applicable laws. If we are considering the expressed limitation on the President's powers that they be consistent with existing laws, including the Labor-Management Relations Act, I call to your attention that the congressional intent in that regard has been discussed for years. Existing law defines what the powers of Government are that are consistent with the Labor-Management Relations Act. Any other governmental interference of any kind in labor-management relations is inconsistent with existing law.

So, what we have here, Mr. Chairman, is an expression of the same power that was given to Schickelgruber, that was given to everyone else who rode into office on a propaganda campaign supported by labor leaders and fundamentally against the interests of the individual working man. That is what we have here. We are delegating the power here for the first time in the United States which can say to labor leaders, even through their controlled press if you please, that they are acting contrary to the interests of the working man and do with those leaders what he will. That is the power that this bill is giving and it is giving it in wartime. It says that working men are not fit to be free.

The expression has been made here that normal machinery will not work. That expression was made by a man who admitted that he has been a labor organizer. I point out to you that in the immediate past, during the last war, through machinery set up for action through the President, perhaps the greatest organization campaign in the labor field was put on that was ever put on in any nation in the world. That organizing is almost complete, so far as the heavy industry is concerned, Mr. Chairman.

Now, we see the political pay-off. In the immediate past this administration has aided political labor bosses in bargaining across the auto industry, the steel industry, the coal industry, the electrical industry, the clothing industry, bargaining, if you please, not against the employer but across the whole industry and against the consumers of the country, 90 percent of whom are workingmen, the retired, aged, and the farmers.

We have reached the point, if this is the President's proposal, when he says he created something he cannot handle without more power. That is what this language means. It means this Congress for years now has shirked its responsibility as the representatives of free people, that responsibility being now to define equitable and moral rights that exist in a changing economy. That is our problem or organized labor is through by the admission of the President speaking through this language in title V.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the American public has been much impressed by the remarks already made by distinguished gentlemen from both sides of the aisle on the general subject now before the House. For a while, I was fearful that jockeying for political position would cause our statesmen, who should state the truth in this hour, to delay their actions. I believe this attitude is the only possible explanation of the conflicting statements of our President made during the past few days when he presumably was fully advised of our current condition in defending individual freedom against Russian totalitarianism.

In the immediate future, the great free press of America will carry the story reminding the American people that practically every man in every seat in this great legislature believes the hour is near, and may be upon us, when we must make our greatest effort to continue our system of government. The American people must realize that we are a nation of 150,000,000, working 8 hours a day, 5 days per week. There are other free countries who will, to be sure, join us in our effort. However, we are separated by oceans, and they are weak. We are opposed by a nation of 190,000,000 people who are forced to work 12 hours a day, 7 days a week. Whereas we have been spending about one-seventh of the total production of our people on a budger for military defense, the total production of our opponent constitutes the budget of a totalitarian government directed to the destruction of our form of government and the Christian principles on which it is founded. Even before the last war, our opponent was a totalitarian government, using force and secret police and intrigue to bind together, through fear more than 175 distinct nationalities, speaking more than 119 different languages. There are least 70 languages used in the schools of Soviet Russia and throughout the country, and I am advised that they print their school books in at least five different alphabets.

During the past 10 years, our real opponent, through subversive activities, together with false and malicious materialistic propoganda, has infiltrated the governments of its small neighbors and through threat of military force from itself, has caused minorities to take over the governments of those neighbors. In keeping with the 100-year-old plan of attack against free christian countries, our opponent has at all times sought to force free governments, including ours, to make expenditures which would bankrupt free governments and provide the fertile soil for their philosophy. Our opponent uses these new satellites to create world disturbances in order to force our Government to make larger expenditures as a bulwark against its autocratic aggression and intrigue.

Under these circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I cannot help but wonder what action would be taken by our opponent if this Congress now extends our national deficit for this fiscal year to where it exceeds $15,000,000,000. My concern as to our opponent's future action is further aggravated by the fact that we are now considering the delegation of totalitarian powers upon our Executive. Should we commit our Government to additional war expenditures and assume that deficit and delegate totalitarian powers, who is to say that the most effective action of Russia against us would not be the immediate settlement of the Korean dispute and the aggravation of another such incident some place on the other side of the world?

Mr. Chairman, the remarks of Jacob A. Malik, as representative of Russia and Council President of the Security Council of the United Nations for the month of August, day before yesterday is only further evidence of our critical position. By fabricatoin, he wove from untruths and half truths, a deceptive pattern of demagogic propaganda against all free countries and in particular against the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we are presently fighting Russia. She has been fighting us since the day of birth of her present Government. It is incumbent upon our statesmen to tell the American people that. It will then be clear to the American people that the day-by-day expenditures of our Government for defense are for our defense against Russia and not against her satellites. Our people will then demand that our statesmen be forced to give them a statement of policy on far eastern and world affairs which will be definite and positive. A breach of such policy will cause the issues to be drawn between ourselves and our allies and our joint real opponent—materialistic, communistic Russia. Those issues must be drawn and settled at an early date, or our opponent's plan to have us destroy ourselves may be realized. Certainly, so long as the free nations of the world are forced to expend their effort and resources against satellites of our opponent, which satellites do not want to fight but are brought into war through bribery, falsehoods, and fear, can only weaken us. So long as we continue to take our opponent's bait on this subject, we are being foolish, and to me, such actions by our Government are good and convincing evidence that there are those in our State Department who have not thought these subjects through. They will lead us, 150,000,000 strong, working part time, against 190,000,000, working full time, plus 700,000,000 people in satellite countries, to be used as cannon fodder. They ask us to expend our efforts on the outside of the circle, transporting our men and materials to every point in the world, and fight a successful campaign. When our statesmen and Government do these things, they impliedly admit their own confusion and, of course, confuse the American people.

Within this session of Congress, our statemen have told the Congress that Korea was outside the perimeter of defense of this country. They have said that our troops should be withdrawn—they have said that Korea was not of strategic importance to this country in our effort ahead. Our top military men, including the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said last year that our position in Korea in the face of a Red China was untenable in an effort against communism. Our Chief of Staff, during the last war, Mr. Marshall, while Secretary of State 2 years ago, told a Senate committee that our military position in Korea was untenable.

Mr. Chairman, our opponent has been developing herself, planning her attack, producing and enmassing military material, training her armies ever since we disbanded our armies and put our materials in mothballs at the end of the last war. The hour is late. Regardless of what we decide in regard to the pending bill, we must have a policy expressed by our President and our State Department. It must be a definite policy for ourselves and other free countries. When that policy is in existence, the American people will accept the delegation of totalitarian powers to our Executive, with the firm belief that their freedom will be recovered when the crisis is over.

Mr. Chairman, Washington, with or without the delegation of the powers proposed in the pending legislation, cannot win the war even against Korea. If we are to win, we must have the confidence of the American people from the East, North, South, and West. There must be an end to special privilege logrolling as occurred on the cotton bill passed by this House last Monday. We are outnumbered in this fight and we cannot win the war by farming marginal land. There will never be a confidence in this administration so long as it caters to pressure groups for its political existence. The tolerance of this administration for lawlessness and uncontrolled violence by certain labor bosses will not give us the national confidence necessary to win in an all-out effort against our opponent. Industry-wide strikes and patterned bargaining across industry is no longer a strike against employers, but even the most poorly informed realizes that it is a strike against consumers, 90 percent of which are either workingmen, farmers, or retired aged.

It is firm conviction that if the American people are to make the effort that will be necessary, two things must be done at the earliest possible date: First, they must be frankly told that the effort must be made, that they must pull in their belts, work long hours and expect an end to the political bribery program that has been used to maintain politicians in power through pressure-group activities: Second, they must be told by some person whom they respect as a statesman that if men are to remain free, their rights as individual must be defined by laws enforcible in courts in their local communities, and that the continual growth of Government by Executive decrees will destroy their liberties and give them the totalitarian government which they are now asked to supply sons, husbands, and money to fight. They must be told that either the party in power or the opposition Republican Party will at the next election define the difference between coveting your neighbor's goods as an individual and doing it collectively in groups called unions or political parties; that a definition will be made on domestic issues which reasonably defines the difference between stealing your neighbor's goods and doing it with economic force through collective action. Our people must be told that freedom, as we know it, is a matter of Government by laws and not one of political bribery through Executive decrees. Yes, it must be admitted to them that the attitude of this Government toward a welfare state has placed it in such a position that neither domestically nor in foreign policy can it draw the issues with Russia for freemen because the policy that keeps this administration in power is on the same road as that of our opponents, Russia, which will at all times out-promise us both at home and abroad.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am well aware that there are many of our young men in serious condition in Korea and more on their way. I hope that the bill which has been brought out of committee without hearings is one that I will find myself able to support in the interest of those boys. However, the bill offered by the majority party, which will undoubtedly pass, must supply a method to regain to Congress and the people the powers delegated to the President if I am to support it. I would prefer that regular annual action by the Congress to reestablish the delegated powers were required by the bill instead of a delegation of powers for the duration of an emergency that a power-hungry Executive, whoever he might be, can continue and keep in existence.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Spence substitute and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. COOLEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Spence substitute and all amendments thereto close at 4:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Spence substitute and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 66, noes 126.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHELLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Barden amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion about the Barden amendment to H. R. 9314, the effect of which would be to strike out title 5 of the bill, now under consideration as a substitute for the Defense Production Act. I am certainly far from being an authority on labor legislation. I have had no part in the writing of any national labor legislation, but I have played a very small part in some labor relations. On hearing the question which was raised yesterday by the very able chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, I wondered, too, just where the section which is known as title 5 came from. There was also a question in my mind regarding the origin of some of the provisions of title 4, particularly in setting up the dates therein, because I recognized a difference in approach from that which was made in the Executive orders which set up the War Labor Board and established the freeze on wages and salaries, with provisions for adjustment of inequities, in early 1942.

With those questions in mind I made inquiry of President William F. Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and of Mr. Phil Murray, president of the CIO, as well as representatives of the railroad brotherhoods. While I could not reach Mr. Murray personally, I talked to his staff and those who were authorized to speak for him.

President Green made a statement to me, and authorized me to repeat it on the floor. I may say that the representatives of the CIO expressed practically the same thoughts. President Green's statement was that, while the American Federation of Labor basically and traditionally resents and has resisted legislation which would suspend collective bargaining, in World War II they agreed, in the interests of national defense and the national welfare, to the setting up of a War Labor Board. That in the light of what they consider today to be a world-wide situation which threatens to permanently destroy their very right to exist as labor movements—their very right to continue to bargain collectively—and which is certainly a very imminent and dire threat to that democracy in which we pride ourselves, they subscribe wholeheartedly to the enactment of provisions for wage stabilization, price controls, and excess-profits taxes. They had been consulted about the general principles included in this bill, and are in support of the Spence substitute.

I then inquired about some of the provisions of title 5. Labor's answer to the objection to the broad powers to negotiate settlement of labor disputes in national-defense industries, which this bill gives the President, is in somewhat startling contrast to the statements made on the floor of the House yesterday and today by some of the new found champions of labor and its rights. Labor, as President Green stated, is basically opposed to legislation curtailing the right to bargain collectively. But men who have spent their lives in the labor movement fighting to protect that right are willing to accept now, as apparently certain other groups in our economic society are not, the fact that we are now engaged in a fight to preserve the priceless democratic way of life. They are willing to place above group interests the paramount interest of the greater good. Labor's leaders recognize the fact that under these powers delegated to the President situations may develop which will not work to labor's benefit. But they are willing to take the gamble, with full recognition of what they may have to sacrifice, in view of the greater loss we will all sustain if our economy is not geared and prepared for any situation and any emergency which may arise.

So that the gentlemen and gentlewomen of the House may understand with what authority I make the statements I have made, and will make, during the course of these remarks, and because I have largely refrained from taking the floor since my advent here, I will give you just a little personal history, and I ask that you excuse my indulgence in it.

For some 14 years I was president of the San Francisco Labor Council. I served 8 years in the California State Senate, where I was the Democratic floor leader, and where I served with many other Members of this House from California. I think I acquired some small reputation as a reasonable person in adjusting labor disputes. At the present time I am still serving, or still nominally hold the office of president of the California State Federation of Labor, which I will continue to hold until the election in a month or two. I will not run for reelection to that office.

I have sat in any number of negotiations and have appeared before various boards, before the Conciliation Service, and before the National Labor Relations Board when it functioned under the provisions of the Wagner Act and since it has functioned under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. In the light of these experiences I want to point out to the Members the deficiencies of present legislation insofar as emergency settlements of labor-management disputes are concerned.

The statute setting up the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service not only does not permit, but specifically prohibits, that Service from injecting itself into any threatened or current labor dispute unless it is requested to come in by one of the parties to the dispute. I have personally seen many situations develop where both parties were reluctant to ask the Conciliation Service to come in, simply because they might lose face, lose their personal standing, or injure their bargaining position. Because of the fact that a Government agency which has done the very fine job the Conciliation Service has done through the years was prohibited from moving in, avertable strikes may have been encouraged and very serious results brought about thereby.

Under the Taft-Hartley law, as under the Wagner Act, there is no provision whereby the National Labor Relations Board, or its general counsel, can step in and mediate or conciliate a dispute. The Taft-Hartley law provides for the certification of unions for the purpose of collective bargaining. It sets up certain rules for negotiating of contracts and agreements. It authorizes the Board to make determinations that unfair labor practices exist and gives the Board the power to obtain injunctions against a strike on the basis of an unfair labor practice. It gives the Board the power to seek an injunction against a strike which seriously threatens or endangers the national welfare. But the Taft-Hartley law, in spite of the beliefs of some of those who voted for its enactment, is not all-embracing. It cannot force a negotiated settlement of a labor-management dispute. Many industries have been declared not to be subject to the provisions of the law and not under the jurisdiction of the Board. Many of these industries are of vital importance to the defense effort.

One of these industries is the hotel and restaurant industry. Let me cite a personal experience in that regard which had some bearing on the defense of the Nation in a previous period of national emergency. A widespread strike occurred in the San Francisco hotels in the late summer of 1941. At the time of the bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, the strike was still on. The parties to the dispute were not meeting to negotiate a settlement, and a meeting could not be arranged. In that emergency situation I flew back here to Washington. I had a meeting with the late President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. I had conferences with the people on the War Labor Board. As a result of those meetings and conferences the powers of the Board were broadened by executive action to give it jurisdiction over the dispute and strike in the hotels. To realize the necessity for such action you must recognize that San Francisco was the major port of embarkation and supply base for the entire Pacific area. Any strike which closed down all the major hotels and hotel dining rooms had, if not a direct, certainly an important indirect bearing on the national defense program in the Pacific theater. After the President's action the strikers returned to work and a settlement was arrived at through hearings before the War Labor Board.

But under then existing law, and under present law, there was, and is not today, any machinery for adjudication of such a situation. I say to those gentlemen who keep mentioning the Conciliation Service and the National Labor Relations Board that something further is needed. In 1940 and 1941 the Congress passed no specific legislation creating a War Labor Board. Broad Executive powers were granted to the President by virtue of which he subsequently issued an Executive order setting up the Board. The War Labor Board was not the subject of congressional action until the passage of the Smith-Connally Act of 1943 which broadened its powers. Such a Board will be needed again. We should provide the President with the power to create it when the emergency situation demands it.

Gentlemen and gentlewomen, labor relations at the collective-bargaining-table level are not cold and predictable things. They are highly charged emotionally on both sides of the table. Under those conditions actions may be taken which, if not controlled by less personally involved authority in time of emergency, might lead to disastrous consequences. The able gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] said earlier today that he did not like strikes in defense plants. With my background I do not like strikes at any time, and I think that the time to obviate and eliminate strikes in time of emergency, as well as at any time, is in discussion before the strike takes place. This bill will provide the machinery now lacking to insure that such discussion takes place. Labor may be gambling by accepting such a provision, but it is a gamble which we must take. The other side of the collective-bargaining table should realize that more is at stake than the immediate issues of a dispute and take the gamble too.

We have heard it stated during the course of debate both yesterday and today that it was suspected that title 5 was inserted in the Spence bill as a device designed to subvert the intent of the Taft-Hartley law and to take our labor relations out from under its jurisdiction. The language of title 5 is clear on this point. May I quote section 503 of the bill in referring to the President's action under the powers granted him? "Any such action shall be consistent with the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and other Federal labor-standards statutes and applicable laws." There is no question but that the Taft-Hartley law is one of these applicable laws. The point has been raised that the term "consistent with" is not explicit enough. Gentlemen and gentlewomen, in my book an action is either consistent with or it is inconsistent. The difference is as the difference between black and white. The terms are futually contradictory and mutually exclusive. Let us accept the fact that this bill was written only with the interests of the country in this emergency situation at heart, and with no nefarious intent to do through it things which perhaps should have been done long ago, but which Congress to date has not seen fit to do.

We are all familiar with the oft-quoted expression that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Let us not be deluded into thinking that it is the only price. We must pay also in terms of sacrifice. For some it is the personal sacrifice of life. To measure up to their sacrifice the least we, as individuals or groups, can do is give up, temporarily at least, some of our rights and privileges so that in the long run we may preserve those greater rights and privileges which go to make up the term "liberty."

(Mr. SHELLEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be great contrariety of opinion as to what is the purpose of this provision. I feel it is to establish boards and commissions to be set up by the President, which boards and commissions would consider the questions involved, and then the President, after they considered the questions and made their findings would take appropriate action. I think the appropriate action referred to is the action which would be recommended by the boards and commissions. It is in the nature of a War Labor Board.

The setting of prices is a simple matter. But there is a human equation in the settling of labor disputes. A man who works with his hands and has nothing to sell but his labor has certainly a deep interest in the proper settlement of labor disputes. The relationship of management and labor is important, because when labor is working together with management it means more production. There is a rolling-mill and a steel plant in my own district. Whenever that mill was about to close down because it could not get pig iron to make its steel, I never saw the managers of the mill but it was the men who came here and asked me to see the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and see if they could not get some pig iron because they wanted the mill to continue.

That is the spirit which is necessary if we are going to have the real American spirit in production. I do not think the President is going to outlaw strikes under this provision. I do not think that was intended at all. And if that should be, then it does not conform to the fundamental purposes for which this section has been placed in the bill. It is, under the circumstances, a reasonable section. We are not at war, or at least we are not in a world war at the present time. But we have plenty of trouble on our hands. I think labor must give, as all of us must give, to see success come to our arms.

We have heard things in the last few days that we have not heard in a century. We have heard that our Armed Forces are moving back before the enemy. I have heard it said that we are at the last ditch and that we must stand there. I am not in favor of standing there. If it is necessary to move out, then we had better move out, because we do not want to see our boys killed uselessly on that front.

Mr. Chairman, what we are doing now is trying to establish a relationship between capital and labor which means more production and better relationships and more patriotic spirit. I think this will subserve that purpose. I cannot see any objection to it. There has been a great deal of talk about the invasion of jurisdiction of committees. This is no time for jealousy. We did not want this jurisdiction. You know the Committee on Banking and Currency does not have to advertise for business. We have more than we need. We did not want this jurisdiction. We did not go after it, but under the parliamentary law the predominant subject is what determines jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction was given to us by the Speaker, advised by the wise parliamentarian who always has good reasons for his judgments.

So it came to us and we had to take it in its entirety. If you attempted to divide the thing and give fragmentary jurisdiction to the several committees, you would never have any bills properly considered or adequate for their purpose. So we had to take the bill. The paternity of the bill does not make any difference. It is the merit of the bill which we submit to you.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 150, noes 75.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. SPENCE and Mr. BARDEN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 166, noes 83.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, there are some perfecting and correcting committee amendments on the desk which I think might be taken up at this time. I am sure there is no objection to them.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I assume that during the afternoon there will be some limitation of debate upon the amendments which are not considered as perfecting amendments, and it would seem to me to be the best practice to reserve the perfecting amendments that apparently are going to be noncontroversial until we have exhausted debate on the controversial features of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of offering the committee amendments is within control of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I understand it will take only a minute or two to consider them, and I thought it might be pleasant to get into something that was not controversial for a little while.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It might not develop into a pleasant situation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendments be read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman offering them en bloc?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; I offer them en bloc. They are to correct language in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

Amendments offered by Mr. SPENCE of Kentucky. Page 15, line 21, strike "1942" and insert: "1947."

Page 28, strike the sentence beginning on line 17 and ending on line 2, page 29.

Page 29, line 4, strike out "and no such suspension shall confer" and insert in lieu thereof "regulation, order or requirement."

Page 31, line 22, insert at the beginning of such line the following: "hereto and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasion thereof. In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among factors."

Page 36, line 5, strike out "402" and insert: "602."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Illinois: On page 39, after line 14, insert the following new title:

"TITLE VII—RENT CONTROL

"SEC. 501. Section 4 (c) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1951' and inserting in lieu thereof, 'June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate'.

"SEC. 502. Section 202 (c) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately following the words 'except that it does not include' the words 'the following housing accommodations unless and until maximum rents are established or reestablished for such housing accommodations in accordance with section 204 (i) (3) of this title—'

"SEC. 503. Section 202 (d) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'The term "defense-rental area" means any part of an area designated under the provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended.'

"SEC. 504. Section 204 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out subsection (j) thereof.

"SEC. 505. Section 204 (a) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out 'June 30, 1951' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate.'

"SEC. 506. Section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'The provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect at the close of June 30, 1952, or upon the date of a proclamation by the President, or upon the date specified in a concurrent resolution by the two Houses of the Congress, declaring that the further continuance of the authority granted by this title is not necessary because of the existence of an emergency, whichever date is the earlier; except that as to rights or liabilities incurred prior to such termination date, the provisions of this title and regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper suit or action with respect to any such right or liability.'

"SEC. 507. Section 204 (h) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by inserting immediately preceding the first word thereof the following: 'Except as hereinafter provided in section 204 (i) of this title.'

"SEC. 508. Section 204 (i) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" '(1) Whenever a local advisory board in any defense-rental area in which maximum rents were never regulated under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, after having determined, with respect to the area over which it has jurisdiction or any portion thereof, either that (A) a scarcity of rental housing has developed as a result of national defense activity, or (B) employment or other conditions have changed to such an extent as to make the supply of rental housing inadequate to meet the demand, or (C) rents have increased or are about to increase unreasonably, recommends that such action is necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to promote national defense, the Housing Expediter, if such recommendation is appropriately substantiated, shall by regulation or order establish such maximum rent or maximum rents for any housing accommodations in such area or portion thereof as in his judgment will be fair and equitable.

" '(2) Whenever a local advisory board in any defense-rental area in which housing accommodations were or hereafter are decontrolled under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, or under this title, after having determined with respect to the area over which it has jurisdiction, or any portion thereof, either that (A) a scarcity of rental housing has developed as a result of national-defense activity, or (B) employment or other conditions have changed to such an extent as to make the supply of rental housing inadequate to meet the demand, or (C) rents have increased or are about to increase unreasonably, recommends that such action is necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to promote national defense, the Housing Expediter, if such recommendation is appropriately substantiated, shall by regulation or order reestablish maximum rents for any or all such housing accommodations in such area or portion thereof.

" '(3) The Housing Expediter, upon recommendation of a local advisory board, or upon his own initiative, whenever in his judgment such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title or to promote national defense, may by regulation or order establish or reestablish maximum rents for any or all housing accommodations in any defense-rental area.

" '(4) In the case of housing accommodations for which a maximum rent is reestablished pursuant to paragraph (2) or (3) of this subsection, the maximum rent shall be the maximum rent last in effect for such housing accommodations under Federal rent control, plus or minus applicable adjustments; or, if no maximum rent was ever in effect for such housing accommodations, the maximum rent shall be the rent generally prevailing for comparable controlled housing accommodations within such area, plus or minus applicable adjustments.

" '(5) In establishing any maximum rent for any housing accommodations pursuant to paragraph (1) or (3) of this subsection, in any defense-rental area or portion thereof in which maximum rents were never regulated under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, the Housing Expediter shall give due consideration to the rents prevailing in such housing accommodations or comparable housing accommodations on such date as he deems appropriate, not earlier than March 30, 1949, and he shall make adjustment for such relevant factors as he shall determine and deem to be of general applicability in respect of such accommodations, including increases or decreases in property taxes and other costs within such defense-rental area.'

"SEC. 509. Section 206 (c) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" 'Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, and any person who makes any statement or entry false in any material respect in any document or report required to be kept or filed under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or to both such fine and imprisonment. Whenever the Housing Expediter has reason to believe that any person is liable for punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought. The district courts shall have jurisdiction of criminal proceedings for violation of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, and concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all other proceedings under section 205 and subsection (b) of this section. Such criminal proceedings may be brought in any district in which any part of any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Such other proceedings may be brought in any district in which any part of any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred, or may be brought in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. Any such court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any criminal or other proceedings brought before it under this section. No costs shall be assessed against the Housing Expediter or the United States Government in any proceeding under this act.'

"SEC. 510. All amendments to the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as provided for in this title, shall become effective on July 1, 1951: Provided, That at any time prior to July 1, 1951, the President shall have the authority to make any or all of such amendments effective whenever he shall find it necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this act."

Renumber title V to read title VI and renumber sections 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, and 513 to read sections 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, and 613, respectively.

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, provide for price and wage stabilization, provide for the settlement of labor disputes, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, strengthen rent controls, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order until after discussion?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume the Chair will recognize the gentleman on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes a point of order or reserves a point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill of controls. Certainly nothing could be more germane to such a bill than control over the prices that people can charge for housing. I may say that the amendment I have offered strikes at the very heart and soul of control.

I respectfully suggest, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has considered the amendment rather briefly. It seems to relate to a subject that is nowhere touched on in this present bill now before the Committee.

The Chair is constrained to rule, however desirable the legislation might be, that the amendment is not germane to the pending substitute; therefore sustains the point of order.

(Mr. O'HARA of Illinois asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.)

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the rent control amendments I have offered as a new title VII are designed to provide stand-by authority to invoke full-scale rent control during the life of the Defense Production Act. The present rent-control law terminates on the last day of this year unless extended to June 30, 1951 by affirmative action of local governing bodies. The termination date of the controls established in the Spence amendment is June 30 of 1952. I think it must be perfectly plain to everyone that we must have stand-by authority to extend rent control over the gap between the two dates, provided there should prove to be the necessity for such extension. I emphasize that this is not in any sense an extension of rent control past the date set in existing law. It is merely a stand-by authority, a very necessary stand-by authority to be exercised only when the conditions of an emergency the depth and duration of which we do not know render the extension and the strengthening of rent control immediately demanded for national security.

I feel deeply and sincerely that to pass this measure without provision for continuing rent control, if necessary, would be to occasion all of us future embarrassment and regret. We are girding for a gigantic struggle. It may require our fullest strength and exact from all of us the utmost in sacrifice. Certainly I hope that it will not reach such proportions. But to rest the security of our country and the happiness of our people on a rose-bed of hope would be an avoidance of our responsibility as the law-makers of the Republic.

Let us be perfectly frank in admitting to ourselves that this bill as it now stands will affect the building of new homes. Its purpose is to channel material and men into production for defense. Until the emergency is over airships and the materials of war will have priority over homes. The people at home understand that perfectly well. You do not have to be a doctor of economics to know war and the conditions of girding for what might prove to be the most devastating war of all the centuries, must inevitably increase and not diminish the shortage in housing. It is reasonably to be expected that under the provisions of this bill and the demands of a fight for national survival—not that we wish it to be so, not that it will come to pass until the actual necessity is here—that material and labor now going into the construction of new homes will be diverted to the building of urgently necessary war material.

I submit, therefore, that to pass this bill without provision for stand-by authority in the matter of continuing rent control, to be exercised when and only when necessary, would be a crushing blow to millions of men and women in the family circles of America who are looking to us to protect them, as well as large business interests, and as best we can, from any suffering which foresight could prevent in the conditions of a great emergency certain at the best to demand from all of us a maximum of sacrifice.

Under the amendments offered by me the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, would be extended to June 30, 1952, or such earlier time as the President or the Congress might determine. The present rent legislation would be strengthened by the following amendments. These amendments would become effective on July 1, 1951, unless sooner invoked by the President.

First. The Housing Expediter is given authority to recontrol any areas, portions of areas or types of accommodations heretofore decontrolled where such recontrol is necessary in the interest of national defense. Where housing accommodations are recontrolled the maximum rents are the last rents under Federal rent control plus or minus applicable adjustments.

Second. The Housing Expediter is given authority in the interest of national defense to establish Federal rent control in any defense-rental area or portion thereof in which Federal rent control has never theretofore been established. Where such rents are established the Expediter is required to give due consideration to the rents for comparable accommodations on such date as he deems appropriate not earlier than March 30, 1949.

Third. Provisions of the present act providing for decontrol by local governing bodies or by States is eliminated.

Fourth. Provisions of the present act providing for the substitution of State controls for Federal controls is eliminated.

Fifth. Eliminates the necessity of municipalities to take affirmative action to continue Federal rent control after December 30, 1950.

Sixth. Provision is made for criminal penalties for any person who willfully violates the Federal law.

Seventh. Extends veterans' preference in sale and rental of new construction until June 30, 1952.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly urge upon the committee the adoption of the amendments I have presented. As a member of the committee, the only member representing the great metropolis of Chicago, I am sure I speak with especial accuracy the sentiment of the men and women of the urban centers.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COOLEY: Page 37 line 1, of the Spence substitute, strike out subtitle B, section 611, in its entirety.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the fact that the hour is late, and I am somewhat reluctant to ask for this additional time, but I do so because of the importance of the matter which you are now requested to consider.

This matter has been before my committee for more than a year. I introduced a bill on May 16, 1949, at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, one provision of which gave the Secretary of Agriculture the right to control margins on the commodity exchange. After this matter had been brought to my attention by the Secretary of Agriculture, and after this bill had been introduced by me on the 16th of May, 1949, I appointed a subcommittee and that subcommittee has conducted hearings in New York, Chicago, Kansas City, New Orleans, and other places. The matter is now currently being considered by our committee. Because of its highly controversial character no action has been taken by our committee, but the particular phase of the bill which I introduced, which is carried forward in the bill now under consideration, is not only controversial but it is objectionable.

At a meeting of our committee this morning in an effort to ascertain the views of the House Committee on Agriculture, I took an informal poll of that committee, and I know that a majority of the Members of that committee are unalterably opposed to the provision which I am seeking to strike out of this bill.

To give you an idea about the delicate operation with which we are attempting to deal, I think that I may frankly say that the members of our committee know more about this particular subject than other Members of Congress, because we have made an extensive study of it. Even in May 1949, when we were far removed from the Korean incident, the Secretary of Agriculture asked for this power over the commodity exchanges of this Nation. He did that, you will recall, after certain fluctuations and gyrations on the commodity exchanges caused chills to run up and down our spines, and we thought any day we were heading into trouble. But, actually, the situation straightened itself out and all our fears subsided. The market leveled off and continued to operate in a normal fashion. It was at that time that the Secretary issued a statement to the effect that he intended to investigate market fluctuations.

We have investigated this matter; we have made a study of it; and after having given it careful consideration I know that the House Committee on Agriculture would not look with favor upon this particular provision. They have brought this up under the pretext that it is justified by reason of an emergency which is existing. They are asking for it now as a temporary power for about 2 years. If in the name of this emergency this power is conferred on the Secretary of Agriculture, I venture the assertion that it will never be taken away from him. This is a power which the Secretary of Agriculture has never had. Not even in World War II did Congress ever consider for 1 minute conferring upon the Secretary the power here granted.

I am not complaining about jurisdiction. I am not saying that all of the friends of the producers of agricultural commodities are members of the House Committee on Agriculture. I know the distinguished and able chairman of this committee [Mr. SPENCE] is just as good a friend of the farmers of his district and State and of this Nation as I am. But I do say that neither the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] nor the members of his committee know what they are doing when they bring this bill before this House and ask us to confer upon the Secretary this unheard of power to regulate the commodity exchanges of this Nation.

The power here is unlimited and unrestricted to regulate as the Secretary deems proper the commodity exchanges of America, upon which businessmen operate, and of necessity operate, and on which the farmers of this Nation must trade. The power to regulate means the power to close up and to destroy a facility which we know is valuable in this economy of ours.

Certainly all of you will understand that it is not possible within the limited time of 10 minutes to discuss this subject thoroughly, which is jut a broad as the whole territory of this great Nation, but I want to call your attention to a few statements in the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture with reference to this matter.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am very much interested in what the gentleman is stating. I offered an amendment to the original bill which would make it not apply to bona fide hedging transactions. I thought that would cure the defect. But I did not know enough about it. I found out afterward that I should have offered an amendment to strike the whole section, because there you are going to tie up all commodities because you have to have some speculation in order to hedge. I found that out. I certainly hope the gentleman's amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COOLEY. I am delighted to have the gentleman support the amendment. I know the gentleman is interested in it.

To show you in what slipshod fashion this bill was put together, this provision put into the original bill which the Committee on Banking and Currency considered did not even attempt to protect bona fide hedging which, after all, is used as insurance by the processors of agricultural commodities to protect their own inventories, so that they may operate with some stability.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is language written into the committee bill as reported from the committee that protects the legitimate hedger.

Mr. COOLEY. I may be in error, but as the bill was introduced it was not in there. It was at our suggestion that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee accepted it, and now bona fide hedging is protected. But how can you have bona fide hedging unless you have accompanying it a certain amount of bona fide speculation?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. I wonder if the gentleman wants to mention the fact that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, after a full hearing on this section, knocked it out by a vote of 10 to 1.

Mr. COOLEY. I think it is generally known that the Senate committee did not look with favor upon this very important provision which the committee has placed in here.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. What are you going to do about this speculation, then? Prices have gone up tremendously in the last 30 days. What is the gentleman's committee going to do to meet this situation in the emergency?

Mr. COOLEY. If I had the time to discuss this situation, I could discuss it, I think, to the gentleman's complete satisfaction. I have the record here which absolutely proves beyond any shadow of doubt that this Korean situation has not been responsible for the fluctuations on the commodity exchanges.

I do not have time to read the records, but the fluctuation on the cotton market followed the cotton report which indicated a very short crop for 1950. Here is the record, and I am sure you appreciate the fact that I do not have the time to read it. But there was less volume in trading in the market after the Korean situation than before the Korean situation, and less speculation on the cotton exchange subsequent to the Korean affair than there was prior to it. The gentleman knows very well, representing, as I do, a farming section and being interested in the welfare of agriculture, that I do not want to see wild and reckless speculation on our commodity exchanges.

But this is a self-regulated institution. I am surprise to see that some Members of Congress do not even know what we are talking about when we talk about margins.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. On the New Orleans Cotton Exchange there is a reduction of 4.9 percent, but on the New York Cotton Exchange there was an increase of 9.3 percent. On wheat there is 78.6 percent increase. On soybean 28.4 percent. On corn 40.1 percent. On lard 98.2 percent. On eggs 128 percent.

Mr. COOLEY. The figures the gentleman is quoting are not prices but are the increase in trading which the Department of Agriculture reports has occurred on some of the commodity markets. I want to make it clear that they are not figures showing the increase in speculation. No one knows how much of this trading is speculation, but I am willing to admit that a considerable part of this trading does represent speculative transactions. Even so, if these figures prove anything at all, they prove the very opposite of the gentleman's contention—that there is a direct relationship between increased trading or speculation and an increase in prices. If the gentleman will examine the figures, put out by the Secretary of Agriculture in his report, he will notice that there is no relationship whatever between the increase in the volume of trading and the increase in price. The largest increase in volume of trading of the eight commodities listed by the Secretary is in eggs, an increase of 128 percent, but eggs increased in price only 5.4 percent, next to the smallest increase of any of the eight commodities listed by the Secretary. There was an increase of 78.6 percent in the volume of trading in wheat, but wheat increased only 6.6 percent in price. At the other end of the scale, there was an increase of only 9.3 percent in the volume of trading in cotton during this period, but the price of cotton increased 19.1 percent during this period.

At this point I will insert in the RECORD a table prepared from data submitted by the Commodity Exchange Authority of the Department of Agriculture, showing the increase in the volume of trading and the increase in price for eight commodities during the period prior to and immediately after the Korean incident. An examination of these figures indicates clearly that there is no relationship whatsoever between a high volume of trading and an increase in price. Where there has been a relatively small volume of trading the increase in price tends to be even larger than where there are many traders and much activity in the market.

	Volume of trade increase for June 26 to July 22 period over May 29 to June 24 period	Price increase as of July 28 compared to June 24 price
	Percent	Percent
Eggs	128.0	5.4
Lard	98.2	41.0
Wheat	78.6	6.6
Wool tops	44.1	15.8
Corn	40.1	5.0
Soybeans	28.4	25.7
Cottonseed oil	11.5	31.6
Cotton	9.3	19.1

There is only one commodity on which week to week figures of the amount of speculative trade as compared with the total volume of trade are available. That commodity is cotton, and I have here the complete record of trading on the New York Cotton Exchange for the past 2 years. It shows that in the week ending June 2, 1950, 3 weeks before Korea, the percentage of speculative trade on the New York Cotton Exchange was 20.2 percent. For the week ending June 23, 1950, 2 days before the Korean incident began, the volume of speculative trade on that exchange was 19.3 percent. In the week ending June 30, 1950, the week during which the Korean incident began, and in which its repercussions were felt in the United States, the volume of speculative trade on the New York Cotton Exchange dropped to 18.6 percent, and it has been in a steady decline since that time. In the most recent week for which figures are available, the week ending July 28, 1950, the volume of speculative trade on that exchange was down to 17.4 percent.

I think this indicates clearly that there is no relationship whatsoever between the volume of speculation, the increase in the price of cotton, and the emergency situation. This is further shown by looking at the data for the first month of 1949. For the first 4 weeks of 1949 the volume of speculative trading on the New York Cotton Exchange was 19.9 percent, 19.4 percent, 20.0 percent, and 19.5 percent. These figures demonstrate conclusively that there has been no excessive speculation in cotton. In fact they show that there has been less speculation than that which might be considered normal.

Reference has been made by a number of gentlemen to the price of various commodities. I have here data provided by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture, which indicate that there have been no alarming price increases whatsoever in two of our most basic commodities, wheat and cotton, and the price fluctuations which have taken place have occurred not as a result of this emergency situation or of speculation, but as the result of the natural play of the laws of supply and demand, as indicated by the Department of Agriculture Crop Reports.

I submit tables showing wheat and cotton prices for the past 2 months. Referring to the wheat table, it will be noted that the cash price today, August 3, 1950, is 222.8 and the records of the Department of Agriculture indicate that this is almost exactly the cash price of wheat in January of this year, at which time it averaged 222.3 for the month.

Prices No. 2 hard winter wheat, Kansas City, Mo.

Week ending—
June 3, 1950	225.1
June 10, 1950	219.9
June 17, 1950	215.2
June 24, 1950	213.1
July 1, 1950	216.6
July 8, 1950	219.5
July 15, 1950	219.0
July 22, 1950	226.5
Daily:
July 17	221.6
July 18	221.7
July 19	223.8
July 20	225.5
July 21	231.0
July 22	230.5
July 24	225.0
July 25	229.0
July 26	228.2
July 27	225.0
July 28	221.5
July 29	219.8
July 31	218.5
Aug. 1	219.8
Aug. 2	222.0
Aug. 3	222.8

Cotton prices: Average 10 spot markets for 1⅛ Middling

Week ending—	Cents
June 3, 1950	33.70
June 10, 1950	33.82
June 17, 1950	33.84
June 24, 1950	33.73
July 1, 1950	33.62
July 8, 1950	34.23
July 15, 1950	36.72
July 22, 1950	37.93
July 29, 1950	38.70
Daily prices:	Cents
July 17, 1950	37.73
July 18, 1950	37.38
July 19, 1950	37.70
July 20, 1950	38.02
July 21, 1950	37.83
July 22 (Saturday).
July 23 (Sunday).
July 24, 1950	38.11
July 25, 1950	38.34
July 26, 1950	38.96
July 27, 1950	39.02
July 28, 1950	39.05
July 29 (Saturday).
July 30 (Sunday).
July 31, 1950	38.64
Aug. 1, 1950	38.22
Aug. 2, 1950	37.72
Aug. 3, 1950	37.49

Further reference to the week by week and day by day price of wheat shows that there was an increase of only 3½ cents in the price of wheat in the week immediately following the Korean incident. However, in the week following the release of the July 1, 1950, crop report of the Department of Agriculture, the week ending July 22, 1950, there was an increase of 7½ cents in the cash price of wheat. On July 21, 1950, the cash price of wheat reached 231 cents a bushel, but since that time it has dropped a little more than 8 cents a bushel.

The table of cotton prices shows that the price of cotton was relatively stable, ranging from 33 to 34 cents per pound, until the Department of Agriculture issued its report on the 1950 cotton acreage. That report showed that there were approximately 2,000,000 acres less cotton planted than had been anticipated under the acreage allotment. The result of that report, as indicated by the foregoing table, was an immediate increase in the price of cotton of almost 3 cents per pound. The price of cotton continued upward to 39 cents per pound on July 28, the date used by the Secretary in making most of his price comparsons. Since that date, however, the price of cotton has declined to 37.49 cents per pound, or about the same price that cotton was following the release of the acreage report.

Even with all of that price, wheat went down instead of going up, which proves that speculation which the gentleman is talking about does not influence the price level.

When you reduce the volume of speculation by the lifting of margins, you drive out of the market the little operator and you play into the hands of the big operator. When you reduce the volume of the little traders on the commodity exchanges, one single transaction may be of such magnitude that it might cause gyrations which otherwise would not occur.

Mr. McCORMACK. I would like to ask my friend to look into that because my record shows that wheat on June 23 and 24 was $2.16¾ per bushel, and on July 28 it was $2.31⅛ per bushel. That certainly is not going down.

Mr. COOLEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts is smart enough to know that if I employed my time in discussing these figures I have here, I would not be able to get across my arguments in opposition to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, many of us have been on our feet all afternoon, and we would like to know if we are going to have a chance to offer our amendments which we think are just as important as those being presented now, and which also, I might add, are on the Clerk's desk. We did not just come into the Chamber, either.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. COOLEY. May I say to the gentleman that I did not just come in, either. I have been sitting here all day awaiting this opportunity.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit questioning by Members from the floor at least for 1 minute of his time?

Mr. COOLEY. I have permitted questions for more than 1 minute on my time.

I yield to the gentleman now if he has a question.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, if you start out to say that we want to do away with excessive speculation, the question then comes up, what is excessive speculation? Who can determine what is excessive speculation? There is not an expert in America who can say that this is or this is not excessive speculation. It is difficult enough to tell even what speculation is in the first place. There is just one other point that I want to make. The Secretary of Agriculture himself, who is asking for these great powers and authority, recognizes the fact that you must have speculation. I only need to refer to his letter in which he uses this expression:

> The volume of speculation is definitely far beyond that needed for the purpose of facilitating actual marketing.

There you have a clear inference that we do need speculation because he says so and anyone who is familiar with the operations of the markets knows that that is true.

Then the Secretary says this:

> The most directly effective means of curbing war scare speculation—

And we have none of that now—> short of closing the market is to increase the amount of margins which speculators must deposit.

There, Mr. Chairman, is a subtle threat in this communication that it might become necessary to close the commodity exchanges.

In the second paragraph of his letter he says:

> The purpose of this section 411 is to prevent excessive speculation in the commodity futures market during the current emergency.

Now I do not want to question his sincerity or the sincerity of his purpose and far be it from me to do that, but he requested this power long before we had an emergency. Why should he come and emphasize the emergency aspects now? But for the fact that he did ask for it in 1949, when we were at peace, or at least we thought we were at peace with the world—I would not even mention the fact that he is now putting such emphasis on the emergency.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. Is not this whole provision predicated on the fact that the President must first determine the nature and extent of speculative trading on boards of trade and that it causes or threatens to cause unwarranted changes or unreasonable fluctuations? It does not operate unless he determines that first.

Mr. COOLEY. He delegates that authority to Secretary Brannan, and then Mr. Brannan delegates that authority to Mr. Mell, and Mr. Mell puts in an order which may interfere with the business operations of the ordinary American citizen. If he wanted this as a peacetime power—and he wants it now as a wartime power, once you give it to him you might as well abandon the commodity exchanges, which I believe operate usually in the interests of all the people of this country.

I ask that the amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we cannot arrive at some arrangement to conclude debate on this amendment.

I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Cooley amendment, and all amendments thereto, close at 4 o'clock, the last 5 minutes to be reserved for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Cooley amendment, and all amendments thereto, conclude at 4 o'clock, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 117, noes 41.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven Members desire to be heard on this amendment in 24 minutes. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] for seven-eighths of 1 minute.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture has only seven-eighths of 1 minute, I yield my time to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. KEATING, Mr. BROWN of Ohio, Mr. MORTON, Mr. BOGGS of Delaware, Mr. COLE of Kansas, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. WOLCOTT yielded their time to Mr. HOPE.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized for 8 minutes.

[Mr. HOPE addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POLK].

(Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. HUBER asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted to them to Mr. POLK.)

Mr. POLK. Mr. Chairman, I arise in opposition to the amendment to strike the sections relating to commodity speculation from the bill. One of the purposes of H. R. 9314 is to control prices of commodities, and when this subject came up a few days ago, I asked Mr. J. M. Mehl, Administrator of the Commodity Exchange Authority, to supply me with information concerning the effect of commodity speculation on prices since the beginning of the Korean War.

Mr. Mehl's report states:

CURRENT SPECULATION IN COMMODITY FUTURES

INCREASE IN VOLUME

Since the outbreak of hostilities in Korea there have been substantial increases in speculation in most of the more important commodities in which there is futures trading. The volume of trading in a number of representative commodities increased during the 4 weeks after June 25 as compared with the 4 weeks prior to June 25 (table 1). The percentage change in trading on principal markets ranged from an increase of 128 percent in eggs to a decrease of 4.9 percent in cotton on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange. Cotton trading on the larger New York exchange showed an increase of 9.3 percent and a combination of the figures for the two exchanges gives an increase of 5.2 percent.

The figures relating to soybeans are particularly striking. Despite the fact that trading in this commodity had for some months been of an almost frenzied character, and at an extremely high level, it increased still further, to the extent of 28 percent, in the 4 weeks after the Reds attacked in Korea. It is significant to compare the 4-week volume of futures trading of 367,179,000 bushels with the total 1949 United States production of 222,000,000 bushels.

With increases in volume of 128 percent in eggs, 98.2 percent in lard, 78.6 percent in wheat and 44.1 percent in wool tops, the impact of war-scare speculation in commodities is apparent.

INCREASED VOLUME ACCOMPANIED BY PRICE ADVANCES

In the 5 weeks between June 25 and July 28 the commodity futures markets have not only shown general increases in speculation, but have also reflected substantial price advances. A comparison of the closing prices of the most active future of certain of the more important commodities as of the last trading day before June 25 with the prices of the same futures as of July 28 is set forth in table 2.

For the 8 commodities shown the price advances during the 5 weeks ranged from 5 percent on corn to 41 percent on lard.

The war-sensitive character of the fats and oils, and the products from which they are derived, is reflected in the price advances of 41 percent on lard, 31.6 percent on cottonseed oil, and 25.7 percent on soybeans. In the textile field there were price advances of 19.1 percent in cotton and 15.8 percent in wool tops.

LOW MARGIN DEPOSITS REQUIRED FOR SPECULATION IN COMMODITY FUTURES

Unlike the security markets, in which the amount of margin or down payment required of speculators is fixed by the Federal Reserve Board, such requirements for commodities are established by the various exchanges on which the trading is done. Currently, in the more important commodities, the amount of margin required by exchange rules runs from 8 to 16 percent of the value, as against 50 percent on stocks. The requirements in effect, as of July 28, 1950, on the principal commodities and the comparison of the percentage requirements of July 28 with those of July 21 are set out below:

Commodity	Market	Contract	Price per contract	Margin per contract	Margin as percent of price
					July 28	July 21
Wheat	Chicago	5,000 bushels	$11,356	$1,250	11.0	6.4
Corn	do	5,000 bushels	7,618	600	7.9	7.8
Soybeans	do	5,000 bushels	13,200	1,500	11.4	7.9
Cottonseed oil	New York	60,000 pounds	11,730	1,200	10.2	7.4
Lard	Chicago	40,000 pounds	6,220	800	12.9	7.1
Eggs	do	14,400 dozen	5,803	500	8.6	8.9
Wool tops	New York	5,000 pounds	11,525	1,000	8.7	8.9
Cotton	do	100 bales	19,415	3,000	15.5	10.7
Do	New Orleans	do	19,325	3,000	15.5	8.0
Cocoa [1]	New York	30,000 pounds	10,695	900	8.4	8.6
Coffee (S) [1]	do	32,500 pounds	17,290	2,000	11.6	12.1
Sugar (No. 6) [1]	do	112,000 pounds	6,339	400	6.3	7.1
Hides [1]	do	40,000 pounds	10,640	2,000	18.8	7.7
Rubber [1]	do	22,400 pounds	9,923	2,500	25.2	11.5
Onions [1]	Chicago	600 bags	1,038	300	28.9	29.2

[1] Commodities not included under the Commodity Exchange Act.

It will be noted that in the case of some of the commodities the percentage requirements on July 28 are higher than those shown for July 21. After the introduction on July 19 of the Defense Production Act of 1950, S. 3936 and H. R. 9176, a number of the commodity exchanges raised their margin rates. The changes and the effective dates thereof were as follows:

Commodity	Market	Margin requirement per contract		Date change became effective
		July 21, 1950	July 28, 1950
Wheat	Chicago Board of Trade	$750	$1,250	July 28
Soybeans	do	1,000	1,500	Do.
Cottonseed oil	New York Produce Exchange	800	1,200	July 26
Lard	Chicago Board of Trade	400	800	July 28
Cotton	New York Cotton Exchange	2,000	3,000	July 27
Do	New Orleans Cotton Exchange	1,500	3,000	Do.
Hides	Commodity Exchange, Inc.	800	2,000	July 28
Rubber	do	900	2,500	Do.

In general, speculative margins established by the exchanges are applied only to "outside" traders. For example, members of the Chicago Board of Trade who execute their own transactions on the trading floor are not required by the rules to deposit speculative margins. Similarly members who clear their own speculative transactions through the clearinghouse of the exchange need deposit only the much lower clearing-house margin. A large proportion of the total speculative trading is done by exchange members who only the much lower clearinghouse margin requirements.

A speculator who purchased just before the Korean episode and deposited the minimum margin could have "cashed in" 5 weeks later on July 28 with an approximate 450 percent profit on lard, 300 percent on cottonseed oil, 300 percent on soybeans, 150 percent on cotton or wool tops, and a comparatively modest 100 percent on the relatively sluggish wheat futures.

FUTURES TRADING PREDOMINANTLY SPECULATIVE

The Commodity Exchange Authority has from time to time examined representative samples of the trading in futures on various markets to determine the proportion of such trading which is speculative as compared to that which is hedging.

Speculative trades are those not directly related to the marketing or processing of the actual commodity. The persons making such trades buy or sell in the hope of profiting by a rise or fall in prices. Examination of the records of the brokerage firms shows that by far the larger number of speculators are persons having no connection with or apparent knowledge of the commodities in which they trade. Professional men, small-business men, clerks, teachers, nurses, retired persons, and the like, typify the average commodity speculator.

Hedging trades are those made by merchandisers and processors as a means of protecting themselves against losses in the handling of the actual commodities. For example, a cotton merchant with a large stock of cotton in his warehouse will sell cotton futures in an amount equal to his inventory. Such a merchant is then "long" in actual cotton and "shorts" in futures. If in such a situation the price of both actual cotton and cotton futures declines, the loss which the merchant suffers on his inventory will be partially or completely offset by a profit on his "short" futures position.

The most recent information obtained by the Commodity Exchange Authority shows that by far the greater part of the trading taking place in some of the important commodity futures is speculative. The results of an analysis of the trading on July 21, 1950, in December wheat and November soybeans on the Chicago Board of Trade are as follows:

Commodity	Volume traded	Percentage
		Speculative		Hedging
		Purchases	Sales	Purchases	Sales
	Bushels
Wheat	9,191,000	86.6	81.0	13.4	19.0
Soybeans	7,463,000	96.5	90.7	3.5	9.3

Earlier studies on this subject indicated that wheat futures trading on the Chicago Board of Trade on September 18, 19, and 20, 1947, was 80 percent to 90 percent speculative and that cotton futures trading on the New Orleans Cotton Exchange during the period of May 17–22, 1948, was approximately 95 percent speculative. Preliminary information from an analysis of the trading of July 26, 1950, in December cotton on the New York Cotton Exchange indicates that a larger proportion of this trading represents hedging than is the case in wheat and soybeans.

The proportion of speculation versus hedging discussed above is based primarily upon classification of the accounts by the brokerage firms through which the trading is done. More detailed investigation usually shows instances where accounts classified as those of hedgers contain speculative transactions. Thus it is likely that a greater proportion of the trading is actually speculative than is indicated by these figures.

TABLE 1.—Volume of futures trading in the principal agricultural commodities during the 4-week period May 29 to June 24, 1950, compared with that during the 4-week period June 26 to July 22, 1950

Commodity	Market	Volume		Percentage of increase (+) or decrease (−)
		May 29 to June 24	June 26 to July 22
Wheat	Chicago Board of Trade	200,047,000 bushels	357,290,000 bushels	+78.6
Soybeans	do	285,947,000 bushels	367,179,000 bushels	+28.4
Corn	do	118,088,000 bushels	165,430,000 bushels	+40.1
Lard	do	185,600,000 pounds	367,800,000 pounds	+98.2
Cotton	New York Cotton Exchange	4,000,200 bales	4,371,500 bales	+9.3
Do	New Orleans Cotton Exchange	1,626,200 bales	1,546,100 bales	−4.9
Eggs	Chicago Mercantile Exchange	3,697 carlots [1]	8,431 carlots [1]	+128.0
Cottonseed oil	New York Produce Exchange	517,680,000 pounds	577,080,000 pounds	+11.5
Wool tops	Wool Associates of the New York Cotton Exchange	4,230,000 pounds	6,095,000 pounds	+44.1

[1] 14,400 dozen per car.

TABLE 2.—Futures prices of principal agricultural commodities on last trading day before attack on Korea compared with prices on July 28, 1950

Commodity	Future	Market	Prices		Percentage of increase
			June 23 or June 24, 1950	July 28, 1950
Wheat	December	Chicago Board of Trade	$2.16¾ per bushel [2]	$2.31⅛ per bushel	6.6
Soybeans	November	do	$2.10 per bushel [2]	$2.64 per bushel	25.7
Corn	September	do	$1.45⅛ per bushel [2]	$1.52⅜ per bushel	5.0
Lard	September	do	$0.1105 per pound [1]	$0.15575 per pound	41.0
Cotton	December (1950)	New York Cotton Exchange	$0.3265 per pound [1]	$0.3888 per pound	19.1
Cottonseed oil	October	New York Produce Exchange	$0.1421 per pound [1]	$0.1870 per pound	31.6
Eggs	September	Chicago Mercantile Exchange	$0.3790 per dozen [1]	$0.3995 per dozen	5.4
Wool tops	October	Wool Associates of New York Cotton Exchange	$1.9900 per pound [1]	$2.305 per pound	15.8

[1] Closing price of June 23, 1950.
[2] Closing price of June 24, 1950.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

(Mr. POLK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

(Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted him to Mr. FULTON.)

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I am rising to speak for the consumers of the country. The average consumer wants every necessity controlled if one is controlled. I have not yet seen the reason why Congress, under present conditions, should not control speculation that is unwarranted or unreasonable upon the commodity exchanges when Congress is controlling all these other commodities, even to the value of services.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. We control speculation on the stock exchanges with reference to margins. Your commodity exchanges set their own margin rates.

Mr. FULTON. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman, that if these controls go into effect there should be no essential commodity, either labor or article, that is left out. It should be all-embracing, so that we get adequate controls.

It should be pointed out that section (5) (A) specifically states that—

Whenever the President determines that the nature or extent of speculative trading on board of trade causes or threatens to cause sudden or unreasonable fluctuations or unwarranted changes in the price of any commodity, he may prescribe rules and regulations.

Therefore, under this provision anyone who wants real control and wants to keep out unwarranted speculation should vote to defeat this amendment, because this bill states that the President acts and shall act only when there is unreasonable speculation.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. May I point out that this morning the very same group which is now fighting for this amendment, which should be defeated, was fighting to have the most favorable possible ceiling on their prices. I do not see how you can possibly square that with the American consumer.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is very clear from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency when we amended the bill in the committee to provide for legitimate hedging that the language of the proposed paragraph section (5) (A) which would be added by section 611 of the bill indicates that the intent is to authorize the regulation of margin requirements on speculative trading only.

Mr. FULTON. That is entirely correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

(By unanimous consent, Mr. DOLLINGER was given permission to yield to Mr. MULTER the time allotted to him.)

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, you do not have to be a farmer to try to understand this problem. Nor do you have to be an economist to understand it. It is a very simple one. All we are trying to do here is to control speculative operations on the commodity exchanges and that only by controlling margins. The stock exchanges did not go to pot and close up because the Federal Reserve Board has the right to limit margins. They have the right to say that there shall be no margin transactions on the stock exchange. For a long time during World War II we had no margin transactions. Then they allowed you to buy on 25-percent margin. Now they allow you to buy on 50-percent margin. They can go back to no margin and it will not affect the stock exchanges at all except to keep the gamblers out. That is what we are trying to do here, to keep the gamblers out of the commodity market.

There is no reason why I or anybody else in this country, who is not a legitimate trader, should be able to go to any exchange and buy futures in commodities, or to buy foodstuffs or staples, and for $500 buy $5,800 worth of eggs, or for $1,000 buy $11,000 worth of wool tops, or for $3,000 buy $20,000 worth of cotton, or for $400 buy $6,300 worth of sugar, or for $2,000 buy $18,000 worth of coffee. When the time for delivery arrives he completes his purchase if the price has gone up. If it has gone down, he runs out on his contract. It is that kind of gambling we seek to stop by title VI. That is the only thing we are trying to control by this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill gave many of us members of the Committee on Banking and Currency a great deal of concern. It was because of that and because of the fact that it appeared that this country wanted some kind of price and rationing control that I introduced a bill, 9280, to include all the features of the committee bill plus wage and price controls. However in my bill I struck from my bill this section involving the Commodity exchange. This provision involving the Commodity Exchange was stricken from the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

I am of the opinion that very few of us are in a position to understand the operations of the commodity exchanges. Likewise, in view of the fact that we are dealing with such a delicate subject, one in which very few minutes are involved in transactions, to control the commodity exchanges would bring disastrous results to the producers, the proper marketing facilities, as well as the manufacturing facilities of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

(By unanimous consent the time allotted to Mr. MCKINNON and Mr. O'HARA of Illinois was granted to Mr. BUCHANAN.)

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill originally reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency is an effort to place controls on credit, real estate, and commodity exchanges, upon the producer and distributor phase rather than upon the consumer phase. If you take off the controls which will stop the rise in prices of farm products to the unprecedented extent to which they have gone up in this period of 4 weeks prior to the outbreak of the Korean incident, and in the 6 weeks since the Korean incident, you will very easily show how these things get out of hand. Soybeans are a good illustration. Soybeans, represents the best example of the effect of undesirable speculation.

This speculation has resulted in such erratic price movements that actual soybeans have been selling recently in Chicago at 6 to 8 cents below the futures price. Nothing could more clearly demonstrate the artificial character of the futures quotations. Soybean processors have complained bitterly to the Department in recent weeks that the market was not only useless for hedging but that the character of the speculation taking place was causing such erratic price gyrations that legitimate merchandisers and processors were suffering heavy losses.

The most directly effective means of curbing war-scare speculation, short of closing the markets, is to increase the amount of margin which speculators must deposit. Present minimum margin requirements on commodities are wholly in the hands of the exchanges and the rates are uniformly low. It is possible to speculate in all of the more important commodities with down payments averaging from 6 to 13 percent. It is obvious that such rates attract speculators away from the securities markets where 50 percent margin is required.

The stabilizing effect of adequate margin deposits has been tested for more than 15 years in the security markets and this beneficial effect would undoubtedly apply equally to commodity speculation. There need be no fear that some reduction in commodity speculation would handicap merchandisers and processors in their use of the market for price-protection purposes. The volume of speculation is definitely far beyond that needed for the purpose of facilitating actual marketing. Detailed analyses of trading on the more important futures markets have shown that approximately 95 percent of the trading on one of the cotton markets was speculative and that 80 to 90 percent of the trading in wheat, corn, and soybeans was speculative.

Therefore, your whole analysis here so far as trading in the more important commodities is concerned, shows that about 90 percent of the trading was speculative. The whole history here of what happened in the 6 weeks' period since, and the 4 weeks' period prior to the Korean incident has been one in which the speculator has been stepping into the commodity exchanges of this Nation and if you permit this to continue it will only mean higher prices to the consumer and higher prices to the housewife.

Legitimate hedging is provided for in the committee amendment—but speculative sales and speculative purchases are and should be controlled. To permit this condition to continue will mean nothing but the wildest kind of speculation.

(Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

[Mr. HAYS of Ohio addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

[Mr. WHITE of California addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE].

(By unanimous consent, the time granted to Mr. POAGE was granted to Mr. PACE.)

(By unanimous consent, the time allotted to Mr. HARVEY was granted to Mr. PACE.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, and I want to make my position crystal clear. I am not interested in the gamblers on the stock exchanges. I am only interested in every possible way which is honorable in seeing that the producers of agricultural commodities receive a fair price. The House Committee on Banking and Currency did not have an opportunity to have hearings on this provision in the bill. The Senate committee had hearings and voted 10 to 1 to send it to the Senate Committee on Agriculture for consideration. Our chairman has promised that the House committee would do that.

Now, this is intended to be a war measure. It is supposed to be a measure which will increase production to an extent necessary to win the war. That includes textiles; it includes soybeans; it includes wheat and other agricultural commodities and the products thereof.

I do not believe, speaking for the thing that I know most about, that the textile mills can buy cotton in quantities from the producers and process it, unless they have the opportunity of the insurance of hedging. I do not believe that the language in the House bill, which simply says it shall not interfere with legitimate hedging, is possible of administration, if, on the other hand, you destroy all speculative buying. I am not interested in the speculator. I am interested in the man who grows the commodity. But I know if you destroy the processor or make it impossible for him to operate, the farmer will soon lose his market, and I know that a mill cannot buy large quantities of farm commodities unless he can hedge against fluctuations in the market while he is processing and selling the products. They cannot hedge unless there is someone in the market ready and able to buy or sell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] to close debate.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was only drafted to control speculative operations in the market. Legitimate hedging was expressly excluded. We do know there are two characters of investors on the Commodity Exchange. One of them is the legitimate manufacturere or processor, the miller who wants to obtain commodities necessary in his business. There is another class of men who gamble just as much as if they put their money on the roulette wheel or on one of the fast horses that my State produces. It is those people that we want to curb. I admit I am no great authority on it, but the speculation feature dislocates and disorganizes the legitimate operations of the market. Those are the people we intend to curb.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

(Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD at this point.)

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the idea that by controlling margins on commodity exchanges price advances can be controlled has no foundation in fact. I, of course, support the Cooley amendment and hope that it will be adopted. The matter has been fully debated and I will not burden the Committee further.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 132, noes 85.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. COOLEY and Mr. BUCHANAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 146, noes 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS of Florida to the Spence substitute: On page 3, after line 21, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 103. It is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully to hoard any necessaries. The term 'necessaries' as used in this section means foods; feeds; wearing apparel; automobile tires; containers primarily designed or intended for containing foods, feeds, or fertilizers; fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas; fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of the above-named articles and materials; and any other articles and materials the equitable distribution of which the President shall find, and shall by proclamation declare, to be essential to carry out the purposes of this act. Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this section when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonably throughout the period of scant or no production, or (c) withheld whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price: Provided, That this section shall not apply to futures trading transactions on any commodity exchange or board of trade or to any person with respect to farm products produced or raised upon land owned, leased, or cultivated by him."

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the verbiage of my amendment was taken from the Lever Act that was passed on August 10, 1917, to take care of the situation in the First World War. The language contained in this amendment has been passed upon by the United States District Court of Colorado and the United States District Court of California, and it was held to be valid and enforceable.

Mr. Chairman, the question of hoarding is the most important element in controlling prices. The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Brannan, has made the public statement that we have plenty of food. We have plenty of eggs, we have plenty of butter, we have plenty of everything to feed the American people. The reason these commodities have risen so in price is because of the fact we have hoarders. Hoarding is the forerunner to a rise in prices. With our over-all food supply, there will be no shortage with hoarding checked or outlawed.

I want to say to the Members here, I think that if there is any solution to the control problem and preventing the President from going further and putting on us an OPA, this amendment right here is it. The definition is fully complete. Under the verbiage as given here a man was convicted in California and, as I said in the beginning, the same thing was determined and tested from a legal and constitutional standpoint in Colorado.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has referred to legislation of this character accompanying World War I. Was there similar legislation at the time of World War II?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I do not recall about World War II, I will say to the gentleman from New York, but this was included in the Lever Act of 1917, and it worked. Now, this cannot hurt the bill. Nobody can justify hoarding. I think we are all against hoarding like all of us are against controls, and I cannot see that there could be any objection to this amendment. I hope that the membership of this House will adopt it, and if you do, you will not see the President invoking further controls on prices and on wages and rationing.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. There is no penalty clause under the gentleman's amendment. They come under the penalty clause in the general bill.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. That is right, of not more than $10,000 and not more than 1 year, if they violate these provisions. This is so definite that it can be enforced.

I might say further that yesterday afternoon the Senate committee went along the same line. They put in verbiage not identical with mine, but somewhat similar. The courts have already interpreted this; they held it constitutional and legal, and I am following the verbiage in the Lever Act.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. NICHOLSON. What is the definition of "hoarding?"

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. The definition of "hoarding", which they held to be constitutional is:

Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this act when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time, or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonally throughout the period of scant or no production; or (c) withheld, whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement, from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price.

Now, that is the definition of hoarding, and all hoarding can come within that definition.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, in my district we have a lot of wild fruit and it takes considerable sugar to put up these preserves to feed your neighbors in the winter.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Well, I think that this amendment will not interfere with your situation.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the House will adopt this amendment and make "hoarding" a criminal offense. Let us provide a law where Uncle Sam can punish the hoarders; while the boys take care of Uncle Sam on the battlefront in Korea.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the committee has not had an opportunity to go over the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida. I believe the effect of the amendment would be so significant and extensive that any explanation that could be made in the time permitted us here would not allow time to pass proper judgment on it. For that reason, I ask that the amendment be rejected. While everybody is opposed to hoarding, there may be some catch-alls in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida that would cripple the operation of other provisions in this measure.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. As I understand it, the amendment now offered contains an exception, so that the hoarding of foodstuffs or farm products is all right. If we are going to prevent hoarding that is one of the things we should stop, but that is expressly excepted by this amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If we are going to prevent hoarding it has to be across the board.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I think this amendment helps the bill. It helps to get control. Unless we have control over hoarding all the prices will go to pieces. This does not interfere with the bill at all.

Mr. MULTER. Why should the gentleman except farm products?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. That is farm products grown on the individual farm. This is the identical verbiage that was in the Lever Act that this Congress passed in 1917.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. We have just had the spectacle of the provisions of the substitute aimed at controlling unreasonable speculation on commodity markets—not reasonable, but unreasonable—being stricken out, and now they want this in the bill. Of course, the farmer is excluded. I think it is very patent to the American people what is happening.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The proposal is utterly fantastic. Suppose manufacturer A has 3,000 units on his floor that cost him $4 per unit to manufacture and the ceiling price is $3. He refuses to sell because his selling price is lower than his cost price. Are you going to charge him with hoarding because he has the 3,000 units on hand and will not sell below cost of production?

I went all through that under the Lever Act and beat the case in the court. They were trying to force me to sell units that cost me $18 a hundred at $14 a hundred. Of course, you cannot do it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that the amendment should be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD to the Spence substitute: On page 48, line 21, insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 713. All corporations engaged in the manufacture of war materials or any other service connected with the war effort and/or the Defense Production Act of 1950 shall be taxed at the rate of 100 percent of all profits above normal peacetime profits."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it is a revenue-raising provision, and therefore is not within the purview, or within the limitation of the bill, and is not germane to the subject matter thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder how legislation of this kind can ever be brought to the attention of the Membership of the House for consideration and debate. When a tax bill is brought to the floor of the House it comes in under a closed rule, so that amendments such as this one on excess wartime profits cannot be offered. I offered this identical amendment to the Selective Service Act of 1948 and it was ruled out of order as not being germane. I felt perhaps the same thing would happen today, but I wanted to make the effort because I think we have to tax ourselves as we go along to pay the cost of what we are undertaking in this time of crisis. We are going to have to spend $30,000,000,000 at least in this fiscal year of 1951. We will have an income of perhaps $45,000,000,000, and like my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] I want to ask you, "Where are you going to get the money?"—if not through taxes on us as individuals and if not through excess profits taxes on corporations which can well afford to pay because this amendment would apply only to excess profits which are above normal peacetime profits.

Mr. Chairman, high prices, hoarding, and inflation must be stopped. These are dangerous to our security and the results are felt hardest by the people least able to pay.

We should act with courage on the measure before us. As I have indicated in previous talks on the present emergency, this is no time for either business or politics as usual.

Let us at least try to match the sacrifices being made by our men in Korea. Let us recognize that, even though we cannot consider an excess profits tax today, due to the ruling of the Chairman, we must face up to it soon because we must pay as we go.

I am indeed sorry that my amendment has been ruled out of order and, therefore, cannot be considered at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD] is very clearly a revenue-raising provision and clearly outside the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Currency and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

[Mr. MANSFIELD addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT to the Spence substitute: On page 32, line 3, strike out all of subsection (b) on page 32, and all of (3) on page 35, and all of (2) on page 34, and substitute for the latter the following:

"(2) Real-estate credit means credit secured either wholly or partly by real property, the improvement of which, either by the construction of a dwelling unit or units or the substantial improvement or repair of such unit or units, is started after the effective date of this act."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOLCOTT addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this bill previously, I had commented on title 5, which has since been stricken by amendment. I had an amendment to place in title 5, which would have limited the President's powers under title 5 to facilitating voluntary agreement by collective bargaining. That amendment would have been put in at page 30, line 16, and is specifically as follows: Insert on line 16, after the word "appropriate", the following:

To facilitate voluntary agreement by collective bargaining.

The trouble with title 5 as it stood originally was that the President and whoever succeeded the present President, could put in restrictive injunctions, could induct people into the Army and could move much beyond just collective bargaining. Unrestrained power in any person's hands in the name of emergency, is not consistent with our democratic system of controls and balances.

In addition to that I have an amendment which reads as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULTON: At the end of section 301 (a) of title III, add two new paragraphs:

"To encourage enterprise capital investment in our free-enterprise system for productive facilities essential for both peace and war and alleviate any need for Government construction of plants by permitting more liberal amortization of cost, productive facilities in any basic industry essential to national security which the President of the United States of America henceforth officially declares to have capacity less than needed for security reasons shall be allowed a special amortization allowance of 5 years in lieu of allowance for depreciation, exhaustion, wear, tear, and obsolescence.

"This provision shall be applicable only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1950, and shall apply only to those facilities begun subsequent to a Presidential declaration that a specific shortage exists, regardless of completion date of construction or possible subsequent revocation of such Presidential declaration."

This is a provision for accelerating amortization of depreciation of new defense establishments. Because of the ruling on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana I believe that this amendment at this point might be subject to a point of order, because it refers to the Internal Revenue Code. I am speaking on the amendment as the issue should be brought up. You have two ways of expanding defense plants: Either through the Government by subsidy or guaranty, or through this amendment by private enterprise without Government subsidy or guaranty. This amendment revives the procedure used in World War II, by allowing people who build new defense plants to take depreciation by a special amortization allowance of 5 years instead of the regular allowance. This method accelerates the amortization time and permits these people who are operating plants to expand and see that they will be able to depreciate these plants during the time of this defense program.

Admiral Ben Moreell of the Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. has written me upon this subject of accelerated depreciation allowance saying:

This is an extremely important matter which merits careful attention. I am convinced that we can finance most of the facilities needed for war production in this manner. There are some highly specialized facilities that would be of little use in peacetime, or whose use would be deferred for a long time, and in those cases it may be necessary for the Government to put up the money.

Another advantage of privately financed facilities is that you can get them built quicker and cheaper than if we have to go through a lot of Government red tape.

Admiral Moreell said further:

It is essential that producers formulate at once definite plans for new equipment and plant facilities. This can be done very effectively and expeditiously if producers are assured that provision for accelerated amortization for new defense facilities, similar to provision made during the recent war—

Which I might say parenthetically was section 124 of the Internal Revenue Code—is included in the proposed defense production act now under consideration. I strongly recommend this action as an essential for maximum production in minimum time. Such equipment and facilities would be privately financed.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to permit me to read a paragraph?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. HERTER. In connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, the Members of the House ought to be interested in this statement of financial policy which has just been issued by the Federal Reserve Board to the committee of which both the gentleman and I are members, the Committee on the Economic Report. After discussing various types of credit, consumer credit, credit on real estate, and the stock market, the Federal Reserve Board says this:

Selective controls are not suitable to most other types of credit, such as loans to business and farmers to provide working capital or carry inventories because specific rules as to repayment are not generally applicable. Expansion of these credits, as well as of those subject to selective regulation, can be restrained to an important degree through the voluntary cooperation of banks and other lenders, through bank supervisory policy applied cooperatively by the State and Federal authorities, and through the use of general credit instruments which limit the supply of reserves available to banks.

In other words, legislation to try to take care of general credit as provided for in this bill should be eliminated since it does not serve any useful purpose.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the 5 minutes to which the committee is entitled may be used by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

(Mr. MONRONEY asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

[Mr. MONRONEY addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 96, noes 101.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 121, noes 123.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. DOUGLAS to the substitute amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 13, line 2, after "service", insert "or for the use of any housing accommodations", and on page 13, line 3, strike out "not."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced this amendment so that the President would have the power to reinstate rent controls where they have been discontinued, and where as a consequence rents have risen very drastically and where this rise in rents affected the war production effort surely such power is a legitimate part of the Defense Production Act.

For example in Los Angeles, where there will be much aircraft production, the city council the other day voted to remove rent controls. They will not be removed for some weeks because that council action has to come back to Washington and the Office of the Housing Expeditor to see that the city council followed the requirements of the Rent Control Act. This is a case where rent controls may have to be reimposed.

If the President should find that rents had risen in Los Angeles, as there is every indication they will, and that this in turn jeopardized the production of planes in that area and placed a very heavy handicap not only on production but also upon wage earners then the President ought to have the power to act.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I need to discuss the amendment further. The need for it is so obvious.

Mr. Chairman, this is not business as usual. It is not a business as usual, when young men who have been separated from their wives and children for the last 2 or 3 years, on the night they were supposed to be discharged from the Army and go back to their families, were told that their discharges were canceled and that their enlistments were continued for another 2 years. And what about their familes and the rents they may have to pay?

Mr. Chairman, as I said, this is not business as usual. Of course it is not agreeable to have rent controls or price controls or any of these other controls. But it is a lot less agreeable to be sent overseas. It is a lot less agreeable to be pulled away from your family.

Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment is an absolutely necessary part of this bill.

Mr. SPENCE. There is nothing mandatory in the amendment?

Mrs. DOUGLAS. No. It is merely permissive—as the other controls in the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. It is merely permissive?

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Yes; it is not mandatory. If the President finds that rents do not increase, he will not exercise this power. It simply gives him the power to control this vital part of the economy if it adversely affects our capacity to carry out the job ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. DOUGLAS), there were—ayes 58, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLE of New York to the substitute amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 16, line 16, strike out the word "above" and insert in lieu thereof the words "in this subsection."

On page 17, line 6, add the following additional sentence: "Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher;

Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized in support of his amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. Let me proceed for just a moment, until the purpose of the amendment is explained.

I shall try to explain the amendment as quickly and as simply as possible. It is designed to maintain the balance between milk producers operating in areas where marketing agreements exist and those in areas where marketing agreements do not exist. Of the 500,000 fluid-milk producers in this country only a very small fraction are covered by marketing agreements. You will notice that the pending bill exempts completely from the provisions of price control farm producers who are covered by marketing agreements. It so happens that substantially all of the farm products covered by marketing agreements is fluid milk. That means that essentially those farmers who happen to be located in areas covered by marketing agreements are exempt completely, whereas the fluid milk producers in other areas are covered under price control.

Although the amendment is rather technical in its expressions, in substance it simply does this, it maintains the ratio which existed between the milk producers in nonmarketing areas with the average price for production throughout the country during the base period of May to June of this year. If it is adopted, the producer in nonmarketing areas will have the same ratio with respect to the average price throughout the country as existed between the nonmarketing area and the average throughout the country in May to June of 1950. The purpose of the amendment, as I say, is to maintain the established balance between the nonmarketing milk-producing areas and the marketing producing areas.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I believe this amendment the gentleman has offered will take care of situations that exist, for instance, in Milwaukee, Wis., where there is pending a petition for a milk order, but there is none there at present.

Mr. COLE of New York. I think it would take care of those areas.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. And would alleviate that condition such as has existed because of the rather sharp drop in prices in those areas which have not had Federal milk orders in effect.

Mr. COLE of New York. The situation generally that existed during this base period with respect to the average price throughout the country, and the price in that particular area, that ratio will be maintained during the life of the act.

Mr. DAVIS of Wisconsin. I believe the gentleman's amendment is completely proper; I shall support it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Would this have any effect on the milk price in the State of Massachusetts where we have our own milk control board? In other words, would the Federal Government step in and supersede our board and their requirements?

Mr. COLE of New York. No; in no sense would this supersede the State milk control authority in respect to marketing.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Is it fair to say there is a great price differential between the milk producers the gentleman is talking about and the general marketing price covered by agreement? I understand there is.

Mr. COLE of New York. I do not know that there is. But whatever was the situation during the base period, the ratio is used as the standard for determining the selling price during the life of the bill.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. PACE. As I understand, under the gentleman's amendment you would still have the protection of the parity price and it would be the higher of the two.

Mr. COLE of New York. It would be the highest of three: The base, the parity price, or the price as of the base period adjusted for season and location, and so forth circumstances, and this other ceiling which is the established ratio that existed during the base period.

Mr. PACE. Among the areas.

Mr. COLE of New York. Among the areas during this base period; and it is designed to preserve the equality that existed during the base period between nonmarketing-agreement areas and the average throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLE of New York. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I just wondered at what point of the bill the gentleman's amendment is offered.

Mr. COLE of New York. It follows immediately after section 402 on page 17 of the bill.

Mr. COOLEY. Why is not milk as a commodity taken care of under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE], which struck out the words "fresh fruits and vegetables" and inserted in lieu thereof "any agricultural commodity"?

Mr. COLE of New York. The last sentence of section 402 exempts marketing agreements. The principal commodity affected by marketing agreements, and, therefore exempt, is fluid milk. It is to protect the fluid-milk producer who is not exempt because of not being in a marketing agreement that this amendment is offered in order to preserve the established ratio between the two types of producer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Spence amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 5:30.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire how many amendments are at the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 15.

Messrs. BYRNES of Wisconsin and AUGUST H. ANDRESEN objected.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Spence amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 5:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided, and there were—ayes 158, noes 28.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'TOOLE to the Spence substitute: On page 12, line 23, after the word "price", insert "profit."

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have offered is a simple one. The measure before the House provides for the placing of ceilings on prices, rents, and so forth at the discretion of the President in this time of crisis. My amendment adds the simple word "profit" to the terms already enumerated in the bill.

There may be some argument that the word "profit" is not germane and that it belongs in a tax bill, but I will take issue with any such expressed thought. Profit and loss are a natural consequence of business, and if there are to be ceilings or limitations placed upon business the profit factor must be recognized. Unless ceilings are placed upon profits at this time you will soon place exorbitant sums of money in the hands of a limited number of people who in turn because of their wealth will be able to purchase at extremely high prices limited goods. This will naturally bring about an inflationary situation.

It has been argued earlier today that such a situation could be cured by an excess-profits tax bill. In fact, some of the Members said that the Ways and Means Committee would soon consider such legislation. However, I would not care to wait for such action as I do not know when it will take place. I might borrow the words from the old Irish song, Kathleen Mavourneen, "it may be for years and it may be forever." If the Ways and Means Committee does not act immediately it would mean that the accrued exorbitant profits would soon be in the pockets of these racketeers and would speedily bring about a great shortage of necessary goods. I understand that this legislation is stand-by legislation. Why not adopt my amendment so that some check would be in existence on those who might endeavor to operate illegally?

If we are to have domestic tranquillity. If we are to keep the men in the armed forces assured that everything is being done at home to retain the status quo, it is highly essential that profits be limited by a legal ceiling.

Gentlemen, I urge the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'TOOLE].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Ohio to the Spence substitute: On page 48, line 23, after the word "of", strike out "June 30, 1952" and insert in lieu thereof "March 31, 1951."

(Mr. GAMBLE and Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted them to Mr. BROWN of Ohio.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is very simple. It would limit the life of this bill, if enacted into law, to March 31, 1951, so that we may determine in the months ahead as to just how grave the emergency is. This will give to the Congress an opportunity to review the entire situation on the economic home front and on the international fronts of the world determine our future needs, and correct any errors or mistakes which we may have made in enacting this legislation. Therefore I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

This is the same proviso as to time limitation as is contained in the Kunkel amendment. If this amendment is adopted we will have about 7 months in which to determine how this legislation works, if it is enacted, and to correct the errors which undoubtedly have been made as a result of the haste with which this legislation is being considered.

Mr. KUNKEL. Also to see what develops in the international picture in the meantime.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BROWN of Ohio) there were—ayes 129, noes 107.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. BROWN of Ohio and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 142, noes 118.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN.. All time for debate has expired.

There are several amendments on the Clerk's desk. The amendments may be offered but cannot be debated.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the author of each amendment may have 1 minute in which to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many amendments there are on the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. There are 13 amendments remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How about the committee's opportunity to reply?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request to make it one-half minute on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE to the Spence substitute: On page 16, line 17, after the word "any", strike out the words "fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable,".

Line 24, after the word "such", strike out in lines 24 and 25 the words "fresh fruit or fresh vegetables", and insert in each instance the words "agricultural commodities."

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I explained this amendment yesterday. The bill now provides that in case of unusual hazards, short crops, or unusual increases in the cost of production the President can adjust the ceiling price temporarily to take care of that situation to protect the producers against loss. I simply strike out "fresh fruit and vegetables" and insert in lieu thereof "agricultural commodities." I am sure the House will want to extend this authority to other commodities as well as to fresh fruits and vegetables. I do not anticipate any objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REES to the Spence substitute: on page 47, line 5, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That not more than 10 positions shall be placed in grade 18, 25 positions placed in grade 17, and 100 positions placed in grade 16."

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered puts a limit on the number of employees that may be hired at the higher salaries ranging from $11,200 up to $14,000 per year. The bill as presently written authorizes the President to employ as many persons as he deems advisable at the higher salaries. Those who get the new jobs created under this bill may be paid as much as $14,000 without limitation as to the number of such jobs.

Now, I want to call your attention to the unfairness of this section of the bill. Only a year ago, at the request of the President, Congress enacted legislation providing for a limited number of positions at the higher salaries. In grade 16 there are 300 positions that pay as high as $11,200; then grade 17 there are 75 jobs from $12,000 to $13,000; and 25 positions at $14,000. They are in addition to a number of Presidential appointments. The Bureau of the Budget and others in administration said these ceilings were satisfactory. They apply to all departments in Government.

My amendment would limit the number for the new agencies created under this bill. My amendment provides for not more than 100 additional jobs at $11,200; and not more than 25 new jobs at $12,000 to $13,000; and not more than 10 new jobs at $14,000. Of course they can hire any number they choose for salaries as high as $10,300. If you do not approve my amendment, you will have a situation where there is no limit as to the number that may be employed in the agencies created under this legislation. The thing is unfair. It is inequitable. It is extravagant and not in the interest of good government. If you do not adopt my amendment, there will be plenty of applicants for these newly created jobs by people who are not as well qualified as experienced people already employed in Government. Too many of these new jobs will be filled by political pressure. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, let it not be said that it is necessary to pay so many people higher salaries in order to secure their services in time of emergency. There are plenty of people in industry, and in labor, and in business who will be glad to serve in places of responsibility, and who will place salary secondary to service when our country is in trouble.

It is regrettable that the committee in charge of this bill has been fit to limit the consideration of this amendment, and other important amendments, to only a few minutes time. Why not work a little later, or further consider the bill tomorrow, so all proposed amendments may be fairly considered.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered affects only a segment of this proposed legislation. The bill before us today is described as the Defense Production Act of 1950. The situation with respect to our country at this hour is most critical. This, and other emergency legislation, that we will be called upon to consider must be considered in the light of what can be done, or what action may be taken to save our country and bring this war, and it is war, to a successful conclusion. Let this be an all-out effort on the part of everyone. Let no one group take advantage of this perilous situation, but all work together and sacrifice if need be, in support of those boys who are called upon to pay the supreme sacrifice, if required to do so, to save America.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be defeated. We are delegating powers to the President of the United States, the most important powers that could be delegated to him, to fight a condition in which we are all interested, and yet we tell him he cannot have sufficient personnel to carry out the purposes of the act.

I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEATING and Mr. REES) there were—ayes 103, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KEATING to the substitute amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: On page 48, lines 21 to 24, strike out all of section 713 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 713. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate at the close of March 31, 1951, and all or any authority conferred hereunder shall terminate at such earlier time as Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, the necessity for this amendment is lessened by the adoption of the Brown amendment.

The sole purpose of the amendment is to provide that any of the titles hereunder, not simply all of the act, may be terminated at an earlier date either by concurrent resolution of the Congress or by action of the President. The way it is worded now action must be taken at one time on the entire measure. Under this amendment either the Congress or the President could terminate the operations of the provisions of any part of the bill before the expiration date, if either the legislative or executive arm considered such action desirable.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, if we are limiting the operation of this act to March 31, 1951, it will not be sufficient time for the President to set up proper organization to administer the act; and now this amendment provides that it may be terminated at an earlier date. I certainly think no provision of that kind should be in this act, because of the earlier date which has heretofore by amendment been provided, and I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DURHAM to the Spence substitute: On page 8, line 14, strike out subsection (b).

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I explained what this language did, in my opinion. Since 1932 this Congress and former Congresses have carried forward into each piece of legislation the so-called buy-American provision.

In my opinion, this nullifies the so-called buy-American provision. I direct attention of you people especially from the mining States who should bear in mind what this means to you, because if we take out that provision and do away with the buy-American provision, you are going to suffer more than your mines are suffering at the present time. As a matter of fact, many of your mines are closed. This amendment does not take away one iota of authority, nor does it restrict the executive branch of the Government in any way of the purchase of any material desired, domestic or foreign, at any time. There exists presently full authority and we have been consistently advised there is.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, this is a far-reaching amendment. We have never had a chance to consider it. There has been insufficient informative discussion and I ask that it be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DURHAM) there were—ayes 138, noes 90.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORTON to the Spence substitute: Page 12, line 20, after the word "President", insert: "or the Congress by concurrent resolution shall determine."

Page 12, line 22, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, the section would read as follows, if my amendment were adopted:

Whenever the President or the Congress by concurrent resolution shall determine it necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this title he shall issue regulations and orders.

And activate section 402.

If the President finds it necessary he shall do it or the Congress by concurrent resolution, if we determine it by concurrent resolution, can require it.

I feel that in this way we hold our responsibility, our constitutional responsibility, and that we do not completely pass the buck to the President. If he does not take action we can.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is an effort to execute the law that we pass. Unquestionably it is not in accordance with the Constitution of the United States which says that we shall have three branches of Government. We legislate. The Executive executes.

I think the amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORTON) there were—ayes 99, noes 146.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER].

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUBER to the Spence substitute——

Mr. HUBER (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple decision for the Congress to make.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, what does the amendment refer to?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asked to dispense with the further reading.

Mr. HUBER. That interruption has taken more time than the 30 seconds allotted to me to discuss my amendment.

Here we have, Mr. Chairman, the spectacle of the Congress of the United States allowing 15 minutes for 15 amendments and allotting each Member of Congress 30 seconds to discuss the amendment which they have introduced. Yes, Mr. Chairman, we are in a great hurry. Some of the Members have other engagements, and after all, the Korean war will still be on after this Chamber has been darkened and we have adjourned for the day. Is it not possible to bring the Members of this House to a realization that it is later than we think? The world is on fire—touched off by the Korean situation. Yet, may I bring to your attention the fact that even though we were not engaged in this decisive struggle, prices have been soaring monthly and it would have been necessary to take definite action to recapture, by taxation, a part of the huge profits now being earned by American corporations regardless of the present emergency.

Mr. Chairman, it appears as though this Congress is bent on regulating everybody and everything excepting the sacred cows of special privilege who have their pleaders in our midst. What courage we have when we declare piously that the President must have the power to limit the incomes of those who work for a living, yet, one by one, this afternoon we have been exempting other groups and in effect saying those who work in stores, factories, or other lines of endeavor must have their incomes frozen to prevent inflation, yet, every attempt to bring about an equality of sacrifice has been voted down by this House. My amendment only seeks to reimpose the excess profits legislation that was in effect during World War II and, incidentally, which should never have been repealed.

There are some who will say that action should not be taken on this matter until the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives has had an opportunity to hold hearings and present legislation for this purpose. While I agree that whenever possible appropriate committees of the Congress should hold hearings on pending legislation, I call to your attention that the decision to send American boys into Korea was made despite the fact that hearings were not held by the Armed Services Committee of the House of Representatives. On yesterday we learned through the public press that those in charge of the armed services had seen fit to land additional Marine reinforcements in Korea. My question to you Members of the Congress is, "Are dollars or men more sacred?" Shall we continue to do business as usual, or shall we immediately conscript dollars as we are conscripting men? In due time the great Committee on Ways and Means will eventually get around to considering legislation dealing with excess profits. Possibly next month or next year. Why wait? Why not in one fell swoop adopt my amendment which would reimpose the excess profits tax existing during World War II? This can be done in 5 seconds and I am confident will be done unless parliamentary shenanigans are engaged in by those who would say, "Let's carry on as usual and let the devil take the hindermost."

(Mr. HUBER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUBER) there were—ayes 107, noes 104.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported before we have the vote by tellers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Are we going to vote on an amendment that was never reported in the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. That is what it looks like.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUBER to the Spence substitute: Page 39, after line 14, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 612. Reapplication of excess-profits tax: (a) Section 122 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1945 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(a) In general: The provisions of subchapter E of chapter 2 shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1945, and ending prior to January 1, 1951. The provisions of part III of such subchapter shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1945.'

"(b) The following sections of the Internal Revenue Code are restored to read as such sections read immediately prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1945, to be effective as so restored, with respect to taxable years ending after December 31, 1950, as if section 122 (g) of the Revenue Act of 1945 had not been enacted:

"(1) Section 26 (e) (relating to the credit for income subject to the excess-profits tax);

"(2) Section 13 (a) (2) (defining 'normal tax net income');

"(3) Section 15 (a) (defining 'corporation surtax net income');

"(4) Section 26 (b) (relating to the credit for dividends received);

"(5) Section 102 (d) (1) (defining terms for the purpose of the tax imposed by section 102);

"(6) Section 131 (b) (prescribing certain limitations on the foreign tax credit);

"(7) Section 204 (a) (2) (relating to foreign mutual insurance companies other than life or marine).

"(c) (1) Section 710 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(9) Taxable years beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951: In the case of a taxable year beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951, the tax shall be an amount equal to that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1951, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1950, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.'

"(2) Section 108 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(f) Taxable years of corporations beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951: In the case of a corporation required to file a return under section 729 (b) (2), relating to the excess-profits tax, for a taxable year beginning in 1950 and ending in 1951, the tax imposed by sections 13, 14, and 15 shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"'(1) that portion of a tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1950, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1951, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year, plus

"'(2) that portion of a tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1951, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1950, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year.'

"(d) Effecive date: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years ending after December 31, 1950."

Mr. WOLCOTT (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, the reading of the amendment has gone far enough, I think, so that I would like to make a point of order against it. I make a point of order against the consideration of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, because under the rules of the House as they apply to the Committee of the Whole, the amendment was not reported and unanimous consent was not given to dispense with the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] was recognized to offer an amendment. He rose and asked unanimous consent that the further reading of his amendment be dispensed with, after the Clerk had read the first portion of it. There was no objection, and the Chair so announced. The point of order, though good, comes too late.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. NICHOLSON (interrupting the reading of the amendment)——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask what this last provision which the Clerk has read means.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot answer that question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I believe the reading of the amendment has gone far enough so that we may determine it is an amendment which raises revenue and therefore is not germane to the bill.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under the rules a point of order may be made at any time before a final vote is taken on the adoption of such an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled on the point of order and adheres to the former ruling.

The Clerk will continue to read the amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WERDEL. Mr. Chairman, in order that the Members of the House may know the effective date of this act and whether or not it is retroactive, I ask unanimous consent that an additional 10 minutes be allowed for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WERDEL. I would like to ask the author of the bill if he does not believe the Members of the House ought to know what they are voting on.

The regular order was demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. HUBER and Mr. WOLCOTT.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 102, noes 153.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD to the Spence substitute: On page 2, strike out lines 2 to 21, inclusive, and down to the period in line 22; in line 25, strike out the words "and other;".

On page 3, line 1, strike out the words "and foreign policy."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, all of the debate on this bill shows that the bills are geared to the national economy. The declaration of policy in this Spence amendment ties our economy solidly to the Charter of the United Nations, giving that organization the power to say what our economy shall be. This amendment is for the purpose of striking that part from the bill. Without this amendment I will never vote for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an inopportune time to amend an amendment such as this, which strikes out the statement that it is the policy of the United States to support collective action within the United Nations to secure the peace of the world. Whether you like it or not, we are in a war; we are pledged to support the United Nations, and I do not think this is the proper time to change our policy in this bill as is proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I rise to ask about this last matter that was brought up. I understand that due to the confusion and everything the presiding officer could not hear me. Now I should like to know what this amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been rejected.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ENGLE of California to the Spence substitute: Page 8, line 4, after the word "materials", add the following: "including the exploration, development and mining of critical and strategic minerals and metals."

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to clarify the language of the bill and make it plain that the loan provisions of this bill permit loans to mining enterprises producing critical and strategic minerals and metals. A discussion with the committee members indicated that is their intention and I hope, therefore, they will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLE of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from California strengthens the provisions of this particular part of the substitute and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I am advised by Mr. Symington's office that there is no objection to this amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, it would be very unfortunate if our vote on the Huber amendment a few moments ago were construed as disapproval of an excess profits tax. We were not voting on that. We were voting in the interest of orderly procedure. In due course I hope to see an excess profits tax provision adopted and I am confident that many others voting against the Huber amendment share this view.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENSEN to the Spence substitute: At the end of the bill, on page 48, add a new section as follows: "Provided, That no person may be employed under this act who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided, That for the purposes hereof an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit has not contrary to the provisions of this section engaged in a strike against the Government of the United States, is not a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States or that such person does not advocate, and is not a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence: Provided further, That any person who engages in a strike against the Government of the United States or who is a member of an organization of Government employees that asserts the right to strike against the Government of the United States, or who advocates, or who is a member of an organization that advocates, the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence and accepts employment the salary or wages for which are paid from any appropriation or fund contained in this act shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both: Provided further, That the above penalty clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment speaks for itself. A like amendment was adopted by this House which I offered in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress to the housing bill and it was adopted by an overwhelming majority.

It was also adopted by the Senate after being amended to a slight degree, and it is now the law of the land in the housing bill. This provision certainly should be made a part of this bill, especially under the present conditions in which we find ourselves involved today, both here and abroad, in order to keep the Communists out of Government employ to the greatest degree possible, and to guard against Government employees participating in strikes. I would have little respect for any Member of Congress, who would oppose this very necessary and proper safeguard of our liberties while our boys are fighting and dying on foreign battlefields this very minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JENSEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. All amendments have been considered and all time has expired. The question is on the Spence substitute for the Kunkel amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PATMAN) there were—ayes 139, nays 127.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 159, nays 128.

So the substitute to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], as amended.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. GARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct roll call No. 220, which shows me as being absent. I was present and answered to my name.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the RECORD and Journal will be corrected accordingly.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF RECORD

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my remarks in the RECORD of July 24 at page A5608 may be corrected, as follows: In the second paragraph, after the figure "150,000,000", strike out the period and the capital "T" in the word "this" and change the last word "action", to "nation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD on page A5103, where the name "Howard A. Zink" appears, to read "Howard E. Zink."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] is recognized for 30 minutes.

WE NEED PERMANENT DISABILITY INSURANCE—WE DO NOT NEED THE KNOWLAND AMENDMENT

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, this Congress now has a double responsibility.

It must move with dispatch to meet the enormous demands of our role of leadership in the free world. It must furnish the men, arms, and money for our defense and that of free peoples everywhere.

The second congressional responsibility is to the citizens of this country—to maintain the standards of justice—legal and social—which have helped to bring graduates, the following-named distinguished military students of the senior division, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, for appointment in the United States Air Force in the grade of second lieutenant, with dates of rank to be determined by the Secretary of the Air Force, under the provisions of section 506, Public Law 381, Eightieth Congress (Officer Personnel Act of 1947):

To be second lieutenants

Francis J. Cunnion — Joseph H. Piper, Jr.
Charles A. James — Raymond Smith

UNITED STATES AIR FORCE RESERVE

The following-named officers for appointment in the United States Air Force Reserve under the provisions of section 37, the National Defense Act, as amended. These officers are subject to physical examination as required by law:

To be brigadier generals

Col. Walter Gelvin Bain, AO290604.
Col. Merian Coldwell Cooper, AO163054.
Col. Bruce Johnson, AO504391.
Col. Douglas Keeney, AO114138.
Col. Charles Maylon, AO109296.
Col. Charles Freemen Nielsen, AO924980.
Col. Howard Archibald Rusk, AO166916.
Col. Peter Constant Sandretto, AO908471.
Col. Albert McIver Woody, AO178850.

AIR NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE AIR FORCE OF THE UNITED STATES

APPOINTMENTS IN THE AIR NATIONAL GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES OF THE AIR FORCE OF THE UNITED STATES UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 38 OF THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT AS AMENDED

To be brigadier generals

Brig. Gen. Frederick Read Anderson, AO235349.
Brig. Gen. George Robert Dodson, AO369264.
Brig. Gen. John Munnerlyn Donalson, AO176345.
Brig. Gen. Stanford Willis Gregory, AO331838.
Brig. Gen. Lyle Emerson Halstead, AO276747.
Brig. Gen. Ray Simeon Miller, AO163634.
Brig. Gen. Joe Clair Moffitt, AO419945.
Brig. Gen. Earl Thornton Ricks, AO395254.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The following-named midshipmen (Naval Reserve Officers' Training Corps) for permanent appointment to the grade of second lieutenant in the Marine Corps:

To be second lieutenants

David I. Carter — George T. Sargent, Jr.
Leo J. Fitzpatrick, Jr. — Cornelius F. Savage, Jr.
Heman J. Redfield III — Bruce L. Rehn

The following-named civilian college graduates for permanent appointment to the grade of second lieutenant in the Marine Corps:

To be second lieutenants

Frank F. Alagia — Don L. Keller
Alvin R. Bourgeois — Norman B. McCrary
George E. Bowker, Jr. — Anthony G. Morrison, Jr.
Clement C. Buckley, Jr. — Anthony C. Naeger
John R. Cowan — Claude L. Reynolds
John K. Davis — William R. Riddell, Jr.
Rex D. Ellison — Bryan M. Rust
Eugene D. Foxworth, Jr. — James T. Shafter
William J. Galyon — Warren A. Stark
Lawrence A. Hall — Holcombe H. Thomas
Winans D. Holliday — William V. H. White
Elmer Jenner — Allan Wilson
Ralph C. Joynes — Henry E. Wold
James W. Wood

House of Representatives

FRIDAY, AUGUST 4, 1950

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. We will have the prayer first, because that is not considered business.

Prayer will be offered by the Chaplain.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Supreme Ruler of the Universe and its guiding intelligence, we are again entering the sacred retreat of prayer, beseeching Thee to make our minds and hearts the shrines of Thy grace and the sanctuaries of Thy presence.

Grant that during these days, with their many difficult problems and heavy responsibilities, we may discern Thy will more clearly and be sensitive and responsive to the God-inspired impulses and follow earnestly the leading of Thy spirit which transcends the wisdom of all our own feeble plans and desires.

We pray that we may declare with undaunted faith and courage that the great moral and spiritual principles of righteousness and justice for which we are contending in the council of nations and on the fields of battle are not mere dreams and delusions but that they are written in the very constitution of that life which Thou hast ordained for all mankind.

May special revelations of insight and vision be given to our President, our Speaker, and all who share in the responsibilities of government as they seek to translate the lofty ideals of democracy into practical economic, political, and social realities and strive to make them regnant in the life of our Republic and the whole world. Hear us in Christ's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 3, 1950, was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN and Mr. MANSFIELD made the point of order that a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 222]

Abbitt	Burke	Cotton
Allen, La.	Carnahan	Davies, N. Y.
Anderson, Calif.	Chatham	Davis, Tenn.
Bonner	Christopher	Dawson
Bulwinkle	Cooper	Dingell
Dolliver	Larcade	Priest
Eaton	McMillen, Ill.	Quinn
Evins	Magee	Rivers
Frazier	Miller, Nebr.	Sabath
Gillette	Mitchell	Sadowski
Gore	Morrison	Sanborn
Gregory	Moulder	Sasscer
Gwinn	Murray, Tenn.	Smith, Kans.
Hare	Murray, Wis.	Smith, Ohio
Hébert	Norrell	Stigler
Heller	Norton	Sutton
Hinshaw	O'Brien, Mich.	Velde
Irving	O'Konski	Wheeler
Jennings	Perkins	White, Idaho
Johnson	Phillips, Tenn.	Willis
Keefe	Poulson	Wilson, Tex.
Kelley, Pa.	Powell	Winstead

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 355 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 99. Concurrent resolution relative to the reenrollment of the bill (S. 1654) for the relief of Kyra Kite Riddle.

The message also announced that the Vice President has appointed Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina and Mr. LANGER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers referred to in the report of the Archivist of the United States numbered 51–3.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9176) with Mr. SMITH of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. Do I understand correctly that if this amendment which shall be presented to the Committee of the Whole for action as indicated by the Chair is defeated, that the original bill as reported by the committee is then open for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee substitute as reported, which is being treated as an original bill under the rule.

Mr. HALLECK. If the amendment is adopted, do I properly understand that then the only motion to recommit would be a straight motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole does not pass on a motion to recommit. The Speaker will pass on that when the occasion arises.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, might I address this further inquiry: If this pending amendment is defeated and no substitute as such in the nature of an amendment being a complete substitute is adopted, then the motion to recommit might be the so-called Kunkel substitute offered as such a motion?

The CHAIRMAN. If all substitutes to the original bill are voted down.

Mr. HALLECK. Then that motion to recommit would be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair so understands, but that is a matter that the Speaker will have to determine when the occasion arises.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Further following the inquiry of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, if the Kunkel substitute, as amended by the Spence substitute, is adopted, then the Kunkel substitute, and the committee substitute as amended by the Kunkel substitute, as amended by the Spence substitute, is adopted, we go back into the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the Kunkel substitute, as amended by the Spence substitute, is defeated, then we will have a direct vote on the committee bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not want to become involved in what may happen after the Committee rises.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Massachusetts recognizes that fact, but the Chair had already become involved as a result of the inquiry made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

HALLECK], so the gentleman from Massachusetts thought a little further involvement of an enlightened nature would not too unnecessarily involve the Chair, or involve him too extensively. Would the Chair care to answer my parliamentary inquiry in view of the fact that there is a partial involvement already?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the function of the present occupant of the chair, as the gentleman from Massachusetts knows. There can be a separate vote on any or all amendments that may be adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the committee substitute amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall refrain from any further inquiry. I think the Chair has given a sufficient answer.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. The distinguished majority leader has completely clarified the situation and there is no confusion at all now. Everybody understands exactly what we have been doing for the last 3 days and what some people hope we may do now.

May I ask the Chair if this is not the boiled-down situation: The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] introduced the bill reported by the committee. The committee bill came to the House for consideration. When the reading of the first section had been completed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute. Shortly thereafter the gentleman from Kentucky, who already had one bill pending, offered another bill as a substitute for what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] had offered. The House in Committee of the Whole, spend some time in perfecting, or perhaps I should say in completing the Spence substitute.

Now, if the Spence substitute prevails on a vote, we will really have the Spence substitute under the Kunkel name; that is, it will be the Spence substitute and not the substitute introduced by Mr. KUNKEL.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. Is that a parliamentary inquiry or a speech? If the gentleman wants to tell the Republicans not to vote for it, all right.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not know what the Republicans are going to do.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, if the Chair may state, seems somewhat involved; almost as much involved as the previous parliamentary inquiries. If the gentleman will make it brief, the Chair will do his best to answer the inquiry.

Mr. MICHENER. This involved situation is what is disturbing all of us. Actually there is nothing before the House at the moment except the Kunkel amendment as amended by the Spence substitute; a yes vote kills the Kunkel substitute; a no vote is for the Kunkel substitute as against the Spence substitute.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FULTON. If the Spence substitute for the Kunkel amendment is voted down, will the bill then still be open for further amendment? Most of us are not satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Kunkel amendment as amended by the Spence substitute is voted down, the committee bill would then be subject to amendment.

The question is on the Kunkel amendment as amended by the Spence substitute.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. PATMAN and Mr. WOLCOTT.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 161, noes 172.

So the Kunkel amendment, as amended, was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the original committee amendment, which the Clerk will continue to read.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary inquiry is whether under the rule adopted by the House the amendment to the original bill reported by the Committee on Rules from the Committee on Banking and Currency is to be considered as an original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to be considered as an original bill, in accordance with the provisions of the rule.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with, and that the amendment be considered as read, and be open for amendment at any point.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read section by section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] objects. The Clerk will continue to read.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, what part of the bill has been read?

The CHAIRMAN. Only the first section has been read.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that amendments will have to be offered to each section as it is read?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the present situation it is to be read section by section.

Mr. COOLEY. And amendments are to be offered in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments may be offered to any section as the original committee amendment is being read under the general rules of the House.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is it not true that any further substitutes that are to be offered to the bill would have to be offered at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that the bill be read section by section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may prooced at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the membership of the House should have certain information which comes from an outstanding and very distinguished expert on agriculture. What is more, he has had experience with roll-backs and controls during World War II. Instead of commenting in detail on the problem which presents itself relating to the affect of regimenting our people across the board with roll-backs to the outbreak of the Korean affair, I shall insert at this point what this distinguished gentleman sets forth with great clarity:

It seems to me that this country's great strength in war or peace is the productive capacity and enterprise of its people. This capacity in peacetime is based on free action of the people and free markets.

There is no question, however, but what a total war economy will be a regimented economy. I think all of us recognize this. The job in regimenting, however, is to permit as much free action, in both markets and people, as possible. Thus is preserved the very strength which has made this country great. We certainly don't want to deliberately adopt the weaknesses of the dictators in wartime.

I was very disturbed by Baruch's recommendation to Congress that this country be regimented right across the board, with roll-backs to the outbreak of the Korean affair. Having gone through the experiences of World War II, I recollect that the agricultural industry's greatest difficulty was the freezing into the economy of unbalances.

To give an illustration, soybean meal is the most important protein supply for the livestock industry. When the war broke out, it was in good supply and the price was low, about $29 per ton, Decatur. Actually, the low price then in effect had more than discounted the oversupply. This was lower in price than corn. Such a distressed price would have lasted only a few weeks in any case. It couldn't possibly be produced at that level. What happened? Shortly the country was short of protein. Black markets developed. It was used, and used wastefully, in the areas of production. It was a bone of contention and trouble through the entire war, and wound up, as I recollect, with a price ceiling of somewhere around $75 or $80—still too low. It was one of the chief headaches of the administration and the agricultural industry.

Corn was frozen as I recollect, at about 81 cents per bushel. Soon the same thing happened to this as happened to soybean meal. Eventually corn would not move out of the area of production at prices set by the administration. This finally resulted in so serious an emergency that top-level administrators were fired.

Many other feed materials were caught in the same squeeze.

Why, with all of this recent experience to guide us, should we make the same mistakes again? It is true now that some agricultural products, such as corn and wheat, are at much more realistic levels to go into a war than they were before, but not all of them.

Another example to look at. At the time that war broke out in Korea, which is the date that Baruch mentioned as determining the roll-back, eggs were 35 to 38 cents on the farm in this area. These were top-grade eggs. Some of the poorer grades were as low as 15 cents per dozen. What do you think would happen under Mr. Baruch's formula to the poultrymen, and to the production of eggs in this country, if prices were rolled back to that point? We both know that the poultry industry would either go out of business or a gigantic free market, called the black market, would develop.

If we are going to have ceilings on commodities, it seems to me that there must be some formula which could be used to determine ceilings so that commodities would be somewhere near in balance with each other, as time goes on. I should think parity on agricultural commodities, modified to meet war conditions, would be the most sensible approach, as against taking a date sometime back and assuming that everything was in proper relation, when only a casual examination will disclose glaring exceptions in major commodities and items.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, the situation in China and Korea today is the direct result of the actions of Secretary Acheson and his State Department advisers. It is the natural consequence of stubbornly following a mistaken policy in the Far East. Our present debacle in Asia could and should have been anticipated. It was not anticipated because our State Department experts—Acheson, Lattimore, Jessup—deliberately closed their eyes to facts presented to them more than 2 years ago. They refused to listen to the advice given them by such outstanding authorities on Asia as Generals MacArthur, Chennault, and Wedemeyer, men who had long first-hand experience in connection with the Asiatic situation; Dr. Wellington Koo, Chinese Ambassador to the United States, an outstanding Chinese statesman; William C. Bullit, a former American Ambassador to Russia, and Governor Thomas Dewey, two American statesmen; and Constantine Brown, an international news commentator of outstanding ability. These men, and many more that might be named, all with first-hand knowledge of the situation developing in Asia, issued warnings that, if heeded, would have prevented the mess we have in Asia today.

Mr. Chairman, the foregoing serious indictment is substantiated by evidence secured through careful painstaking research work done for me by a member of my office staff during the summer of 1948. Truly "coming events cast their shadows before them." But when our leaders refuse to take heed of those shadows, the people must suffer the consequences.

Mr. Chairman, the following quotations taken from the previously mentioned piece of research, entitled "China—An International Problem," prove in my opinion that our State Department was either asleep at the switch or stone blind insofar as the present debacle in Asia is concerned:

In an editorial entitled "China: Blunder and Bluster" which appeared in the April 5, 1948 issue of Life magazine, we find these words:

America's policy in China was, in effect, pro-Communist. Last year Dewey and TAFT and other Republican leaders demanded a fundamental revision of this absurdity. As a sop to them the Truman-Marshall State Department went to work halfheartedly on a China program. But at the same time that it put forward the policy, it seemed eager to sabotage—and Chiang Kai-Shek along with it. When he presented the program to Congress, Secretary Marshall drew the usual hopeless picture of conditions in China (corruption, etc.) and concluded that it is impossible to develop a practical, effective long-term, over-all program for economic recovery. The $570 million he asked for was merely to help retard the present rapid rate of economic deterioration and thus provide a breathing space. Call it conscience money, a holding attack, Operation Rathole: it is not a bet on the Chiang government nor a commitment to support it. . . . But the presentation of the China aid bill to Congress served one useful purpose. It brought to the fore a few expert witnesses on China who had, for one reason or another, kept silent or been kept under wraps.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following statements from outstanding authorities on the Far East as evidence that our State Department officials have for years been asleep at the switch.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, in a written statement presented to a congressional committee considering legislation in March 1948 to give aid to China, said:

The Chinese problem is part of a global situation which should be considered in its entirety in the orientation of American policy. * * * The international aspect of of Chinese problem, unfortunately, has become somewhat beclouded by demands for internal reform. Desirable as such reform may be, its importance is but secondary to the issue of civil strife now engulfing the land. * * * Underlying all issues in China is now the military problem. Until it is resolved little progress can be expected toward internal rehabilitation, regardless of the extent of outside aid.

Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, in testifying before the same congressional committee March 1948, said:

If we fail to give Chiang military support, it will be the greatest failure of American foreign policy in all our history. * * * In my opinion, China is the key to world peace—or to victory of a third world war is precipitated.

In an article by General Chennault entitled "We Must Help China Now," which appeared in the April 1948 issue of Reader's Digest, we find this advice offered:

The time fuze of world war III is burning now in Manchuria. * * * Our obligation to help China now is clear. Morally, it is something which we, in realistic appreciation of the danger to our world, must do. Time is short and the need is great.

General Wedemeyer, testifying before the same congressional committee, said:

Two years ago I would have accepted this economic aid to China. Today it is too late. * * * We should give military aid. * * * The Chinese leaders are, I believe, honestly trying to achieve what we have in mind.

The December 1947 issue of Reader's Digest carried the article, China—a Report to the American People, by William C. Bullitt, and I quote from that article:

If President Truman were to ask General MacArthur to add to his present duties and powers the title of personal representative of the President with the rank of ambassador, and to organize with the Generalissimo a joint plan to prevent subjugation of China by the Soviet Union, the whole far eastern horizon would brighten with hope. * * * If China falls into the hands of Stalin, all Asia, including Japan, sooner or later, will fall into his hands. The manpower and resources of Asia will be mobilized against us. The independence of the United States will not live a generation longer than the independence of China.

Gov. Thomas Dewey, a close friend and associate of John Foster Dulles, in a speech on November 24, 1947, to the Columbia University Law School, New York, said:

The program of Communist world conquest of the remaining free nations is furthest advanced in China, the largest nation of all. The cold war which has become a warm war in Europe, is a very hot and successful war in China. The inescapable fact is that unless we change our national policy immediately, there is good reason to believe that the 450,000,000 people of China will fall wholly into Communist hands * * * as we take action to save the 275,000,000 people of Europe. If China falls, we may reasonably assume that all Asia is gone, and western Europe and the Americas will stand alone—very much alone in a hostile world.

Constantine Brown, one of America's best known columnists and an authority in the field of international affairs, said in an article in the July 11, 1948, issue of the Washington Evening Star:

There has never been in our history a more glaring example of short-sightedness than that which our Government has displayed in regard to China since 1946. * * * While the Russians pour war materials and technical staff advisers to the Chinese Communists, our Government spokesmen say we should not waste money and substance on China because her government is corrupt. * * * We are unwittingly helping Mr. Stalin's ambition to create world domination by a powerful Russian-led Asiatic bloc by the persistence of our wartime policy that we must avoid offending our Russian ally.

Dr. V. K. Wellington Koo, the Chinese Ambassador to the United States, in an address delivered on June 7, 1948, at Oxford, Ohio, stated:

The attention of the democratic forces is now centered in Europe, paying little heed to the serious situation in the Far East. The recent developments in the conflict between communism and democracy in China and Korea are full of omnious consequences. Important elements from both the countries of northern Korea and Outer Mongolia have clandestinely joined the Chinese Communist army and been participating in its fight against non-Communist China. It is evident that the leaders of world communism have, in fact, placed their most important stakes in this Asiatic struggle, although outwardly they give every appearance of concentrating their attention on Europe.

Mr. Chairman, these statements made more than 2 years ago by outstanding authorities on Asia and its problems, and many other statements that might be cited, are evidence of the fact that for several years past it has been a clear case of "the blind leading the blind" in our State Department. And who is responsible for the situation in the State Department? Why, the man who appoints the State Department heads; the man who has the final say-so in all foreign policy matters; the man who has full and complete responsibility for any and all mistakes because he has full and complete authority. One cannot have full responsibility without full authority, and by the same token one cannot have full authority and shirk full responsibility.

In the final analysis, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the President, Harry Truman, is responsible for the present debacle in Asia; he is the one who has been making the final decisions to write off Manchuria, China, Korea, Formosa, as not vital or necessary to our defense line in Asia; and then overnight, without a moment's notice, he ordered General MacArthur to send troops to defend South Korea.

This sudden reversal on the part of the President, to my mind is a confession that he has been wrong in his attitude toward Asia; that he has been following bad advisers on matters concerning Asia; that he now sees his mistakes and recognizes the fact that they were serious, costly mistakes; and that now he has decided to rectify those mistakes no matter what the cost.

As a logical result of this sudden conversion, of his right-about-face in Asia, he should now cut loose from the men who have led him astray, and select new advisers on Asiatic problems, men who have had long first-hand experience with the problems of the Far East.

Mr. Chairman, the American people expect the President to make a change in the State Department very soon, and they hope and pray that change, when made, will be a wise one.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make which have no direct relationship to this bill, but do have relationship to one of the distinguished Members of this House, and I am confident all the Members of the House will join with me in what I say without regard to how individual Members may feel on this particular bill or any part thereof. I believe I express the sentiment of the membership of the House individually and collectively when I state that we have a profound feeling of respect and admiration for our distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE]. He is truly one of the noblest men you and I ever could meet, a great legislator and public official, a man honorable and trustworthy in every way. I refer to him today because with his primary coming up tomorrow in Kentucky he is staying here performing his duties to the people not only of his district and State but of the entire country. I believe that the people of his district should know the high regard that we have for him and that they are justified in feeling proud of this distinguished gentleman who has so ably represented them for so many years, and that we in the House appreciate the sacrifices he is willing to make for his country.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad to yield to the Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN. I wish to join in and echo everything said by our distinguished majority leader and to express our deep appreciation to the gentleman from Kentucky that although on tomorrow his primary is coming up he stays here to attend to his duties as a Member of the House and as a representative of his people. I have served with many men and women in the House of Representatives, more than 2,500, in my career. I have never served with a nobler, a better, or a more patriotic Representative than the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

(Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, controls again. Congress is being stampeded into controls, which if enacted into law will place us in the position whereby it will give the President such great power I am fearful you will never get the power away from him.

If we are to freeze prices of merchandise, manufacturers' profits, farmers' income, wages, and freeze everything as of July 1 for the duration of the Truman-Korean war, possibly I would be in favor of it in order to keep this country from going wild on making it a land of scarcity for those who have not the wherewithal or finances to take care of themselves but make our economy a haven for black markets, and people who want to profiteer at the expense of the general public.

Today our country faces its greatest danger in its history, from abroad and at home. The extent to which this Truman war in Korea has taken and might take us nobody knows. We in this country today, and especially we in Congress, do not know what the policy of this administration is, and we cannot find out. The power was given to the President and he has not surrendered any of it, and this New Deal Congress is not taking any of it away from him. Was it not the responsibility of the Congress to determine whether we should send troops into Korea, or any other country? That is a function of Congress, and that power should always remain in the Congress. It was so intended by the framers of our Constitution. But from day to day the administration asks the Congress for more and more power, and the majority of the Congress, composed of the Democrats within the administration, grants that power to the President. I say you are in a mess today, and in a terrible mess. I am an American, and I want to support the American Government and the American people in the American way, but I do not believe in making a dictator of the President of the United States, and I believe the President we now have would love that power.

This legislation today calls for granting the President the power to do all this regulating. He can put the screws on anywhere he sees fit, and allow those to go unregulated whom he thinks it would be to his advantage not to be covered. It does not pay to underestimate the tenacity or the cleverness of the collectivists. Whether they are Communists or Socialists, they all alike seize upon every opening to accelerate the drift toward statism, and I think this bill is just such a piece of cleverness. I think the Members of Congress are being taken for a joy ride by those departments of Government now influenced to such a great extent by the socialists, and the entrance of our President with our military forces into the Korean war gives them a golden opportunity to advance their program. I for one do not want to be led by their cleverness any longer, nor do I want the people I represent to be drawn into such a position that later on they might say, "Well, BOB RICH, you are easy. You are just gullible. You voted for the things this administration requested under the guise that it is good for the country." I cannot see it that way. I think it is bad for the country to pass legislation telling Mr. President we give you the power and you can put the screws on the people anywhere you want to, at any time you command. That does not sound good to me: the fact of the matter is it sounds terrible to think that this Congress, men who are supposed to be intelligent, men who are supposed to have the degree of business acumen to do the things that make our country a better place in which to live, things that would take care of all the people during such an emergency as now confronts us, should now pass legislation such as this. God give us men, great men, men who will try to do the thing that is best for the people of the United States in order that we might assist to the extent of our ability other nations to carry out the golden rule as directed by divine law, "Do unto others as ye would that men should do unto you."

This business of building up a great military machine in all the nations of the world is as wrong as anything can possibly be. It only leads into war and more war, and every Member of Congress should know that. Have you forgotten that we gave Russia $12,500,000,000; China $2,500,000,000. Are you satisfied that Russia and the Communists of China now have all this war equipment? We are only building up war machines in other nations, to be used, and when they are used will they be used for good or will they follow the example set in those countries where we have already helped build up a war machine and will the moneys be used as that given to aid Russia and China? It helps the other fellow, not America.

If that is not lesson enough for us, God give you strength and help. I think you need it. I do not propose to vote for $1 to arm these European countries. I believe it is wrong. Nor do I propose to vote to regulate everything in this country when and if the President of the United States sees fit to place those regulations on our people. He has proven to me beyond all doubt he is too much of a politician. That seems to come first with him, before he is interested in doing the thing that is best for the country. I dislike to make that statement, but I have every reason to make it because I think I am speaking the truth.

Freeze economy by direct act of Congress only for the duration of the Korean war. But for goodness sake do not give the power to the President to freeze when he wants, as he wants, so long as he wants. It is un-American, and for that reason I cannot support this legislation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 28, strike out section 2 and insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSES OF ACT

"SEC. 2. It is hereby declared that it is in the interest of the national defense and security and the purposes of title II are (a) to preserve the value of the national currency against the consequences of price and credit inflation; (b) to stabilize prices, wages, and salaries and to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases therein; (c) to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, burdens upon interstate and foreign commerce, interference with the effective use of the Nation's resources for defense, and impairment of national unity and morale, which would result from unwarranted increases in prices, wages, salaries, and the cost of living; (d) to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities caused by or contributing to the national emergency; (e) to prevent prospects of increases in prices, wages, and salaries from encouraging the accumulation and hoarding of materials needed for national defense, and from impending long-term commitments for production; (f) to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive prices, wages, and salaries; (g) to obtain the maximum necessary production without undue profits to low-cost producers; (h) to protect persons with relatively fixed incomes, investors, and persons dependent on life insurance, annuities, and pensions, from undue impairment of their standard of living; (i) to prevent a post-emergency collapse of values, and the reappearance of price and cost disparities for farmers and other primary producers; and (j) to provide procedures for administration and review which will fairly protect the interests of those subject to this act, without endangering the dominant public interest in the accomplishment of the foregoing purposes.

"It is further declared that it is necessary for the national defense and security, and to accomplish the objectives of this act that if the price and supply controls are invoked by the President, the wage controls authorized hereunder shall simultaneously be put into effect. It is further declared to be the policy of this act that all of the controls provide hereunder for the control of costs, including prices, wages, rationing, allocations, and limitations, shall, insofar as practicable, be put into effect at the same time so that, for a period at least, there will be a general ceiling over the economy and a period of general stabilization during which it will be possible to determine with reasonable accuracy in what areas the continuation of controls is necessary and in what areas controls may safely be released.

"To enable the Government to provide for the national defense and to carry out our foreign commitments made in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations and other foreign commitments, certain materials and facilities must be diverted from civilian use to military purposes and productive facilities must be expanded beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demand. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production and purchases must be curtailed and redirected. It is the objective of titles III, IV, and V to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by such titles in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, section 2, Declaration of Policy, which appears in H. R. 9176, reaches out and picks up the United Nations Organization and the Charter of that organization and places it in a bill here which has to do with our internal economy strictly, and lays that down as a declaration of policy. In my opinion, section 2 which I propose to strike out, is in effect a reenactment by this House of the Charter of the United Nations. I do not believe it has any place in this bill whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, we are dealing here strictly with the internal economy of the United States with respect to production, sales, wages, prices, and so on down the line, as has been covered in the discussion here in the last few days. As I stated on the floor yesterday, I have not yet been able to comprehend why this distinguished committee would place such a section in a bill of this nature.

Now, going to the declaration of policy which appears in H. R. 9308, the so-called Kunkel bill, there is a declaration of policy which is clear-cut and deals specifically with the subject matter of the bill, in other words, our internal economy. I believe every Member of this House knows exactly what I mean. I do not care to take any additional time discussing the proposition.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, this identical amendment was not agreed to by the committee when proposed to the substitute yesterday. It would mean a repudiation of the President's message, it would mean a repudiation of the United Nations, it would mean that we oppose collective action in order to suppress a world war.

It seems to me it is unfortunate to introduce this character of amendment at the present time when we are fighting to preserve the liberties that we have enjoyed and when our soldiers have their backs to the wall.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that the declaration of policy in the committee bill is for the purpose of outlining the objects and purposes of that particular bill, and in the Kunkel amendment it is proposed to have a much broader bill and includes a lot of sections that are not in the committee bill at all?

Mr. SPENCE. That is true.

Mr. PATMAN. Therefore it does not apply to many sections of the committee bill.

Mr. SPENCE. If it does apply, it would be a dangerous thing to adopt at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The declaration of policy in the original committee bill has a dual purpose. It ties in the strengthening of our domestic economy with the role we are to play here in the international crisis as the result of the Korean incident. I believe that the whole purport of this emergency legislation, to protect the domestic economy, now would be lost in its entirety if the declaration of policy is stricken from the committee bill, and I ask that it be rejected as it was yesterday.

Mr. SPENCE. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAWFORD) there were—ayes 91, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 11:

"TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

"SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or order by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense: Provided, That this authority shall not be used to ration at the retail level consumer goods for household or personal use.

"SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both."

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan: On page 30, line 5, add a new title, "To stabilize prices, prevent inflation, and control production," and add the following:

"SEC. 1. (a) Experience has shown that inequality in the distribution of the burden of preparing for national defense creates discord and lessens the effectiveness of the Army and the Navy and the industrial structure upon which both depend for effective operation.

"(b) Experience has demonstrated that in time of war there is opportunity for unjust enrichment of a few at the expense of many and that by taking advantage of that situation the few enrich themselves creating disunity which tends to minimize defense efforts.

"SEC. 2. Within 10 days after this act becomes law it shall be the duty of the Secretaries of National Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury, Commerce, and Labor, or of the persons duly designated by each, to meet and, based upon the last 6 months of 1944 and the 6 months beginning with January 1, 1950, or upon any two similar periods in any other 2 years as such persons select, determine and publish within 30 days of such meeting a schedule of prices which shall represent the fair average prices of all materials and services which may be determined to be basic commonly used materials and services and which shall include materials and products raised upon the farms and services rendered upon farms and in industries and elsewhere.

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person (and the term 'person' shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, associations, and organizations) knowingly, more than 70 days after the publication of such fair basic prices, to ask or receive a greater sum for materials or services or a combination of the two than the price fixed in such schedule.

"SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of law-enforcing and prosecuting officers of the Federal, State, county, and municipal government of the respective States to act as enforcement agents of the provisions of the act and to apprehend and prosecute willful violations thereof, and they are hereby charged with that duty.

"Such enforcement shall be instituted and carried on by such officers upon their own initiative and for failure to enforce provisions of this act such officer shall be liable to any and all penalties imposed by Federal State, or municipal law for neglect of like duty under Federal, State, or municipal law.

"Any individual shall have the right to make complaint under oath to any enforcement officer above designated whenever he believes a violation of this act has occurred. It shall be the duty of such enforcement officer above designated to investigate and if there be, in his judgment, just cause, to prosecute the person so charged with a violation of the act.

"SEC. 5. Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be subject for each offense to a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 6. In addition to the penalty herein provided, every person violating this act and who has knowingly received a greater sum for services or materials, or a combination of the two, than that fixed in the manner hereinbefore provided, shall forfeit a like sum to the United States to be recovered for the Government by action instituted by any of the officers hereinbefore designated."

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

AMENDMENT TO STABILIZE PRICES AND WAGES, PREVENT INFLATION

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in the amendment which I have offered, there are two errors. On page 2, in line 8, the figure "1944", should have been "1949", and, in lines 9 and 10, the words "or upon any two similar periods in any other 2 years as such persons select", are surplusage and should be stricken.

Wednesday, August 2, our colleague from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] of whom the Michigan delegation is all so proud and who, during his time here, has rendered distinguished service to his district, called for all-out mobilization.

Our colleague, from personal experience, knows about war, what it means and what it calls for in the way of personal sacrifice, for he left both of his legs on a battlefield in France in World War II.

He told us a little—just a very little—about the feelings of those who in that war were giving so much, while here at home, men living with their families, with all the comforts of home, receiving many times the enlisted man's pay, refused to work unless their wage demands were met.

That some labor organizations, a few led by known Communists, sabotaged production which was necessary if our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER], and those serving with him in that war were to be equipped is a matter of record. In spite of the solemn pledges of some labor leaders, there were, during the war, many strikes which slowed down the war effort, which may in some places have caused loss of life.

When our colleague called for complete mobilization, he was speaking from the mind, as well as from the heart. The ovation he received at the close of his remarks, well deserved as it was, indicated that the House was in accord with his thinking.

Stabilization of prices and of wages is an essential part of any worth-while mobilization effort.

Price-fixing, rationing, the power of allocation of materials granted to the administration during the last war, did not solve the problems then confronting us. They did result in the creation of several new boards and agencies, two of which, the War Labor Board and the War Manpower Commission, usurped the powers of Congress, gave out rules and regulations which to all intents and purposes had the force of regulation.

Under the powers then granted the executive department, a horde of snoopers, investigators, and enforcement officers was appointed.

The result was confusion, dissatisfaction, the unnecessary expenditure of millions of dollars.

The remedy which we need and which would be effective is a simple one. It calls for the services of but one board, the members of which are already in office, already under pay by the Federal Government.

The bill can be enforced without the employment of a single additional Federal employee other than the employees of the one board which will establish fair prices, fair compensation for services rendered.

This bill calls upon the Secretaries of National Defense, Army, Navy, Air Force, Treasury, Commerce, and Labor, or persons designated by them—and it well might be amended to limit the members of the board to the Secretaries of Commerce and Labor or the individuals designated by them—to meet and, based upon the last 6 months of 1949 and the first 6 months of 1950, establish a schedule of fair average prices for all things, materials, and services determined to be basic commonly used things, materials, or services, including those things produced upon the farms, in industry or elsewhere.

That schedule would give to every individual the price which he should pay, which he should charge, for anything he purchased or sold, for any service he rendered or bought. The prices so fixed would be a matter of public record. They would be carried in the press.

Do I hear you ask, if there are to be no additional Federal employees, who is to enforce the law?

Section 5 provides that it shall be the duty of the law-enforcing and prosecuting officials of the Federal, State, county, and municipal governments of the States, to act as enforcement agencies—just as those officials now act for the enforcement of Federal and State laws, municipal ordinances.

The section also provides that any individual who has been gypped by a profiteer can make complaint and obtain a warrant from any Federal, State, or local officer.

The individual charged with the offense would be tried either in a Federal or in a local court before a jury of his neighbors. Practically all complaints would be made, all cases prosecuted and tried in the local courts.

There can be no argument about the effectiveness of such a measure. Any housewife, any individual, would not hesitate for one moment to aid in the prosecution of a black-market operator, a profiteer.

Individuals found guilty, and all charged would have the privilege of a jury trial, would be subject to fine and imprisonment, or both.

There is no question but that such a measure would end profiteering, black-markets; that it would be effective.

Unlike practically all emergency legislation, the amendment does not call for several thousand or several hundred thousand additional Federal employees. It guarantees a fair and an impartial trial to everyone. It would prevent the imposition, at the whim of some bureaucrat, of penalties which were unjust.

If the Congress wants legislation which will stabilize prices and wages, prevent runaway inflation, exorbitant profits; give an equal distribution of services and things which are for sale, this amendment, if adopted, will do the job.

Perhaps it is too simple, too economical, for the administration to accept.

It is offered in good faith as a common-sense solution of a problem which to date has had no solution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I did not know the plans of the Republican leadership. I introduced a similar bill a long time ago on another occasion, on November 14, 1940, but it got nowhere. When I was about to offer it just now as an amendment, I was told by our ranking minority member on the Committee on Banking and Currency, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], my esteemed colleague, that I was just gumming up the works. Well, maybe I am; I did not so intend. The amendment is simple; it would be effective. It could be enforced without any large number of additional Federal employees.

But I am never consulted by the political leadership on strategy. I am not asked for my opinion on anything. Representing the Fourth Congressional District of the State of Michigan, all I can do is to come here and try in my feeble way and try to do something about things that need fixing. If I do not succeed, I hope the folks back home will say, "Well, you made a try, old man—we will send you back for two more years and maybe the other fellows will get tired of following an administration which so far has failed to give us anything other than debt, higher taxes, and war.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment—or bill—which has been offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is very indefinite and vague, except in one particular. It demands that the Secretary of National Defense, the Secretary of the Army and the Navy and the Air Force quit everything that they are doing in Korea and elsewhere and come right back here and within 30 days do something which is impossible for anybody on earth to do within 30 days' time.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. For a correction.

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. It does say the Secretary or any person designated by them. It does not mean that those Secretaries quit their jobs, any more than that the President quit his job.

Mr. PATMAN. That is not nearly as vague and indefinite as some of the other things in the bill. It provides that they shall meet, and, based upon the last 6 months of 1944 and the 6 months beginning January 1, 1950, or upon any two similar periods in any other 2 years. The bill is not definite as to the time. Take 6 months of 1944 and 6 months of 1950, and if they do not like that they can take any other time in any other 2 years. I do not see how you can write language any more indefinite or confusing than that. It does not define what the offense must be in the criminal code in order to convict a person. You must set out in an indictment what the person is charged with or what he is supposed to be guilty of. This bill does not set out any offense at all. No prosecuting attorney could possibly write a complaint or an indictment charging any individual with violating this Act except the Secretary of National Defense, the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force. It is very plain that they must quit fighting this war and come back here——

Mr. SUTTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. SUTTON. You could take the years 1901 and 1902, could you not?

Mr. PATMAN. Certainly. It says "upon any other two similar periods in any other 2 years." You could go back to 1876, if you wanted to, or any 2 years that they wanted to select. Of course, that is loose enough to where you could take any period within the century. It does not make any difference at all. But the point is, this requires a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment of not more than 1 year. Would it not be ridiculous for the Congress to pass a law saying to the people who are fighting this war, the generals and the Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force, and the War Department: "If you do not come back here and stop everything else for 30 days and take over our entire economy and fix the prices of everything, we are going to put you in jail for a year."

That is exactly what it says. I ask any Member of this House who has been a prosecuting attorney to look at this bill and see if it would be possible to draw an indictment or a complaint against any person that would stand up in any court in the land. Certainly, the House would make itself very ridiculous to pass such a loosely drawn and confusing bill, and one which would immediately demand that the war be stopped for the people who are running the war to come back here and take over our economy.

The amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS of Florida: Page 30, after line 5, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 103. It is hereby made unlawful for any person willfully to hoard any necessaries. The term 'necessaries' as used in this section means foods; feeds; wearing apparel; automobile tires; containers primarily designed or intended for containing foods, feeds, or fertilizers; fuel, including fuel oil and natural gas; fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients; tools, utensils, implements, machinery, and equipment required for the actual production of the above-named articles and materials; and any other articles and materials the equitable distribution of which the President shall find, and shall by proclamation declare, to be essential to carry out the purposes of this act. Necessaries shall be deemed to be hoarded within the meaning of this section when either (a) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time; (b) held, contracted for, or arranged for by any manufacturer, wholesaler, retailer, or other dealer in a quantity in excess of the reasonable requirements of his business for use or sale by him for a reasonable time or reasonably required to furnish necessaries produced in surplus quantities seasonably throughout the period of scant or no production, or (c) withheld whether by possession or under any contract or arrangement from the market by any person for the purpose of unreasonably increasing or diminishing the price: Provided, That this section shall not apply to futures trading transactions on any commodity exchange or board of trade or to any person with respect to farm products produced or raised upon land owned, leased, or cultivated by him."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to title I of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the broad scope of this bill, it is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment is properly in order at this place.

The point of order is overruled.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I am serious in proposing this amendment. I do not see why a person who has the welfare of the country at heart should be against the principle it contains. There is just one thing contained in this amendment, and that is that it makes it unlawful to hoard necessaries. There is no law against hoarding now. Is there a true American who believes in trying to hold down prices who would hoard necessaries? "Necessaries" is defined in the amendment that I am proposing.

The cause of increase in prices today is hoarding. If you control hoarding you control prices. Why have we had such a rise in commodity prices at the present time in spite of the fact that we have an ample supply everywhere? The answer is hoarding. When a man goes out, accumulates and hoards property and necessaries they are taken away from those who ought to have them; it makes it possible for prices to continue to rise. If you will give me a law—and that it what we are asking for here, for there is no law against hoarding at the present time—if you will give me a law to control hoarding then we will not have to call on the President to give us another OPA.

In 1917, to be exact, on August 10, 1917, just previous to World War I, the Congress passed the Lever Act. This amendment that I am offering was included in the Lever Act at that time. The Supreme Court of the United States held the Lever Act to be valid. In the case of U. S. v. Swedlow (264 F. Rep. 1016), the district court of Colorado held section 6 of said Lever Act valid and constitutional. Also in the case of Merritt v. U. S. (Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, reported in 264 F. Rep., p. 870), upheld a definition of hoarding of necessaries and held the conviction of Merritt justified by lower court.

My amendment is designed to protect the ordinary common man to assure that he shall find the necessaries of life when he needs them, as well as to prevent a continual spiral rise in the price of necessaries.

Let me say to the membership of the House that the identical principle I am discussing here is included in the Senate bill. There is a little difference in wording, but the principle is in the Senate bill as it has been reported out. I can see no objection to the amendment. We in the House are trying to do something constructive for the Nation in time of peril and emergency. I do not see how any patriotic man can say we should not have a law against hoarding the necessaries of life in times of emergency.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield.

Mr. CROOK. I am diametrically opposed to the principle of hoarding, but I want to ask the gentleman if he can define "hoarding" and who is going to pass upon the question of hoarding?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Yes; it has been defined. That is what I have been trying to explain here. My amendment follows the language used in defining "hoarding."

Mr. CROOK. What is hoarding?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. If the gentleman will read my amendment he will see that hoarding is well defined.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. I will ask the gentleman if his amendment does not define hoarding?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. It absolutely defines hoarding.

Mr. COOLEY. And the definition contained in the gentleman's amendment has been approved by the court?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. This has been approved by the court and a man was convicted for hoarding 500 pounds of sugar.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Let me first answer the question of Mr. Crook about the definition of "hoarding." Hoarding was defined by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit in the case of Merritt v. United States (264 F. Rep. 871):

> Prohibiting the hoarding of necessaries and providing that necessaries shall be deemed hoarded when held, contracted for, or arranged for by any person in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time, is not void for indefiniteness and uncertainty as to the meaning of the word "hoarded."

Also, hoarding is defined in the case of United States v. Swedlow (264 F. Rep. 1018):

> To hoard means "to collect and lay up; to amass and deposit in secret; to store secretly; as, to hoard grain or provisions; to hoard silver and gold." (Webster's Unabriged Dictionary.)

Hoarding as used in this amendment amounts to secret storing away, accumulating and collecting and laying up of necessaries not then needed and taking them out of the channels of trade and commerce; or, contracted for, or arranged for by any persons in a quantity in excess of his reasonable requirements for use or consumption by himself and dependents for a reasonable time.

Mr. COX. The courts have defined it?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Yes, the courts have defined it.

Mr. COX. I agree with the gentleman, there ought to be a law against hoarding, but does not the gentleman think it would be well to withold consideration of that matter and give the committee time to study and to report a comprehensive bill, that for the moment we adhere to the provisions of the pending bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I agree that there ought to be a law to prevent hoarding, but in view of all the circumstances that have developed here in the consideration of this matter during the past several days, does not the gentleman think it would be well to give that subject further consideration by the committee when it comes to a reexamination of the whole question with a view to reporting a comprehensive bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I will answer the gentleman by saying that now is the time for action. We are in an emergency. People are hoarding. They are even putting out signs saying "We do not hoard."

Mr. COX. In view of the fact there has been no committee examination of the question——

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. We do not need any examination. Any man with common sense knows what hoarding is. We have no law against it. Why should we neglect putting it in here when the Senate has put it in their reported bill?

Mr. COX. May I complete my statement? That for the time being it would be well to adhere to the Spence amendment, striking possibly the exchange commodity provision and the provision dealing with real estate?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. This does not interfere at all with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. COX. We are dealing with very, very important questions that ought to have committee consideration.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. The gentleman will realize that this entire bill, or some of it, has not had any consideration. It does not take any long-involved consideration to define "hoarding." Here is what the Senate has in its bill. Let me read it. It is practically what I have in my amendment. Here is what the Senate reports:

> SEC. 102. No person shall accumulate (1) materials in excess of the reasonable and normal demands of business or home consumption, or (2) materials in short supply for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices which have been designated by the President as scarce materials or materials the supply of which would be threatened by such accumulation. The President shall order published in the Federal Register, and in such other manner as he may deem appropriate, every designation of materials the accumulation of which is unlawful and any withdrawal of such designation.
>
> SEC. 103. Any person who wilfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

The same penalty applies in my amendment, a fine of $10,000 or 1 year or both. There is no difference. The identical principle is involved here.

My main objective by this amendment is to outlaw hoarding which is a basic cause of increase in prices. The quickest way we can act is too slow. We need this law and I hope no patriotic American will try to raise technical objections but will vote for something that will protect the American people at this time when prices are going sky high. Hoarding is being indulged in. You can get at it by this amendment and it will work. It will possibly prevent the President putting in another OPA. None of us favors an OPA if we can get around it but unless we have an antihoarding law certainly we may expect an OPA.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman should be commended for offering this amendment. The standards indicated in the amendment are sufficient, perhaps, but should it not come back of wage and price stabilization rather than in back of priorities and allocations where the gentleman has offered his amendment?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I will say to the gentleman it will do the job, and you can put it any place in the bill. This is to have something done, and it can be done right here, as well as in any other section of the bill.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. DOUGLAS. I rise to commend the gentleman for his amendment, and I think it ought to be adopted by the committee. It will permit immediate measures to be taken against unnecessary accumulation of inventories and individual hoarding. If there are technicalities in the amendment that have to be worked out, they can be worked out in conference.

Now is the time to pass anti-hoarding and antiinventory accumulation legislation. The gentleman is quite right in saying that hoarding and inventory buying beyond what is reasonably needed is forcing up prices at this time. It is not scarcity that is forcing up prices, but hoarding, and I think this amendment ought to be passed. I do not care whether the amendment belongs in this section or any other section; that is quite beside the point. It is so completely contrary to the interest and the well-being of the country for individuals or business enterprises to hoard supplies as to make such practices practically a crime against the community.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I thank the gentlewoman from California. This is one time we agree.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will accept this amendment. It will strengthen the present bill and will in no way detract from any other provisions of the bill. A law against hoarding will have a salutary effect psychologically and will prove invaluable in the prevention in the rise in price of necessities.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. TACKETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes, with the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEATING. The reservation of time by the committee is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, with one exception, is the same amendment that was offered yesterday and defeated. While all good intentions and purposes are met here by an amendment to prevent hoarding, nevertheless we are not in a period of scarcity as far as foodstuffs are concerned; we are in a period of surpluses. This would be an open invitation to start hoarding. I wonder what would happen here under section (a) to a housewife who goes out and starts to hoard sugar or shortening or any other commodity, and just where would we get this large army of snoopers to go about the country pouring into people's cellars and into their back yards and into their barns and everywhere else? I believe the Committee ought to have ample time to fairly consider an amendment with this broad, sweeping connotation. The intent and purpose is good and it sounds fine, but there are a lot of things involved. If I correctly heard the amendment proposed, the gentleman strikes out in the proviso that part which states that it shall not apply to future trading transactions. It applies only to personal hoarding, but still permits as far as commodity exchanges are concerned, to continue to do the very thing that is a major factor in speculation.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. In other words, the exception in the amendment is that a gambler on the exchanges is exempted from any prosecution. He can do as he pleases.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Exactly, and the housewife is the victim.

Let us give this due consideration. You are getting into something now that just cannot be settled in a few minutes on the floor. I think our actions here in the last 3 days indicate that. I ask that this amendment be rejected on that basis.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday when this amendment was offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS] the committee objected to it because it had not had an opportunity to consider the amendment. The amendment was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and now the committee has had an opportunity to consider it.

Further objection was made to it for the reason that in the last proviso it exempted farmers. Now the gentleman from Florida has modified the amendment so as to leave out that objectionable feature, but still it does not meet with the approval of the members of the committee. Actually, if you are in good faith doing what you say you are trying to do, you are trying to prevent the very thing that the gentleman from Florida is trying to outlaw.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The proviso is still there, while the term "farm products" is stricken.

Mr. COOLEY. "Farm products" is stricken out.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the proviso is still there.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes, and the gentleman knows that there is no hoarding on the commodity exchanges. It is only future trading. There is no hoarding there.

I think this amendment is not only germane but important. You are going to have a chance in a few minutes to say whether or not you are willing to outlaw hoarding. You cannot be technical about it because the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS] has done some research on it. In the House yesterday he gave opinions of district courts and I think one of the Supreme Court sustaining convictions under a statute of similar character.

As to the question of defining hoarding, hoarding is defined in this amendment. "Necessaries" is also defined in the amendment. The purpose of it and the intent of it is perfectly clear.

I agree with the gentlewoman from California that this amendment probably should be written into the preamble. It should be the very first thing Congress should outlaw. Now you have a precedent for outlawing it. If you vote against this amendment, it is tantamount to saying that you are unwilling to do in truth the thing which you profess to do, and that is to prevent hoarding, which might result in inflation and in hardships to many poor people who are unable financially to go out and acquire these things.

Another thing, a gentleman on the committee said we should not do this now because we have ample supplies. Is the gentleman in effect saying to the House that we are not now faced with hoarding, hoarding on every hand? Are you going to wait until the house is on fire, until we are facing a desperate situation, before you are willing to outlaw this great offense against the people of this country?

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. STEED. Is it not true that if it were not for hoarding and profiteering most of the need for this legislation would disappear?

Mr. COOLEY. I agree. If you can stop hoarding you do not need this legislation, because then we can have an even and reasonable distribution of the things we have in this country.

Hoarding brings about the necessity for control programs. If you are going to put on price ceilings and you are going to prosecute people for violating those price ceilings, why not prosecute the man who fills his basement with automobile tires and tubes and fills his pantry with all of the things he needs—all of the necessaries of life.

This amendment not only defines what constitutes necessaries, but gives the President the right to add to the list of necessaries as time goes on and as things become in short supply. The President can say such-and-such a thing is a necessity and add it to the list. When he does, if a man hoards it he is in violation of the law and can be prosecuted.

Just think of the psychological effect of this amendment. I do not think you will have any prosecutions because I think by and large the American people want to be law-abiding. If the housewife or the head of the household knows that they are violating the sanctity of Federal law which carries with it imprisonment or punishment by fine, they are going to hesitate before they violate that law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that this is an open invitation to hoarding?

Mr. COOLEY. No, no—people do not need any invitation to hoard. Korea was an invitation to hoard. The gentleman knows that since the Korean affair that hoarding has been on the upgrade.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have a situation today where there are surpluses and this is an open invitation to hoard those surpluses and reduce the surpluses to a scarcity.

Mr. COOLEY. No; people are not hoarding surpluses; they are hoarding things that are scarce.

I just cannot see any logical or reasonable objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman Florida [Mr. ROGERS]. I think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the gentleman address himself to the question whether this is not a prohibition amendment in view of the definition which says, and I quote, "in excess of his reasonable requirements"? Is not that a separate law case in the matter of every housewife and every family? I ask that very sincerely. I am very worried about the prohibition aspect of it.

Mr. COOLEY. Sure; the prohibition is against the accumulation of an excessive supply.

Mr. JAVITS. I mean that it is tantamount to the liquor law prohibition in the way of the indefiniteness of the prohibition and the number of prosecutions which may be involved.

Mr. COOLEY. No; there is nothing here that prohibits the acquisition of necessaries. The prohibition is against the accumulation of excessive supplies. The amendment defines hoarding and defines necessaries and lays down in the law a formula. When a prima facie case is made out then the person accused may come forward with an explanation of how he came by such supplies.

When I first discussed this amendment with my colleague the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS], I was frankly somewhat apprehensive about the uncertainties of the terms "hoarding," "necessaries," "excessive supplies," and so forth, but when he cited the law from which the language of his amendment was taken, and when he cited decisions of courts in which convictions had been sustained, then I was convinced that the amendment was in all respects proper. "Hoarding" is defined, the word "necessaries" is defined, and the crime is properly described. Pertinent questions of fact—issues of fact—must, of course, be decided by juries under proper instructions by judges. If the people of America know that hoarding is criminal, that very knowledge will be a deterrent, and I submit that this is a good and proper amendment and should be adopted and accepted without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 112, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL: On page 30, line 5, insert a new title designated as title II:

"TITLE II—PRICE AND WAGE CEILINGS

"PROHIBITED ACTS

"SEC. 201. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy or accept delivery of, any article at a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such sale.

"(b) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to receive or pay, or to enter into any contract, agreement, or other obligation under which he is entitled or required, or under which he purports to be entitled or required, to receive or pay, for the performance of any services a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such services.

"(c) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

"(d) It is the purpose of this act to provide for ceilings on articles sold, services performed, and wages paid, and no ceiling shall be imposed on any one of these that does not at the same time impose ceilings on both the other two.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SALES OF ARTICLES

"SEC. 202. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable to the sale of an article by any person shall be—

"(1) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which it was so sold by such person during the base period;

"(2) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, but is similar to an article so sold by such person during the base period, the highest price at which such similar article was so sold by such person during the base period;

"(3) in case the sale is at wholesale and the article is not the same article as, nor an article similar to, an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which the same article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, or if the same article was not regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, the highest price at which a similar article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period;

"(4) in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable under such paragraph; and

"(5) in the case of a new article, and in the case of any article to the sale of which paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

"(b) The ceiling applicable to the sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity shall in no case be less than the parity price therefor, as determined and published by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with other provisions of law.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SERVICES

"SEC. 203. Except as provided in section 205, the ceiling applicable to services performed by any person shall be—

"(1) in case such services are the same services as services performed by such person during the base period, the highest price for which such services were so performed by such person during the base period;

"(2) in case such services are not the same services as services performed by such person during the base period (or in case such person did not perform any services during the base period), the highest price for which the same services were regularly performed by any other person within the same county or parish, or within the same State if there be no such other person within the same county or parish, during the base period;

"(3) in the case of any services to which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. The ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable to such services under such paragraph; and

"(4) in the case of new services and in the case of services to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO WAGES AND SALARIES

"SEC. 204. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) and section 205, the ceiling applicable in respect of labor performed by an individual shall be—

"(1) in case such labor is the same labor as labor performed, whether or not by him, for his employer during the base period, the highest wage paid by his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, for the same labor to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

"(2) in case the same labor was not performed either by him or any other employee, for his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, the highest wage paid for the same labor by any other employer within the same county or parish, or within the same State, if there be no such other employer within the same county or parish, during the base period to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

"(3) in the case of any labor in respect of which paragraph (1) or (2) is applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206. Any such ceiling so prescribed shall be in lieu of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor under such paragraph; and

"(4) in case such labor is new labor, and in the case of labor to which paragraph (1), (2), or (3) is not applicable, such ceiling as the Administrator may prescribe pursuant to section 206.

"(b) The ceiling applicable in respect of any labor shall in no case be less than the minimum compensation prescribed therefor in or pursuant to any law of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or of any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

"EXEMPTIONS

"SEC. 205. The Administrator may by regulation or order exempt from the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 204 articles, services, and labor, with respect to which he makes a finding of fact that—

"(1) such exemption is necessary in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended; or

"(2) it is unnecessary that ceilings be applicable to such articles, services, or labor in order to preserve the Nation's price structure and to prevent a rise in the cost of living.

"POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO CEILINGS

"SEC. 206. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he shall by regulation or order establish such ceiling or ceilings as in his judgment will be generally fair and equitable to buyers and sellers of the article or articles in question, or to the person or persons performing the services in question and the person or persons for whom they are performed, or to the employees and employer or employers in question, as the case may be, and will effectuate the purposes of this title. So far as practicable, in establishing a ceiling for any specified articles, services, or labor the Administrator shall ascertain and give due consideration to the prices prevailing for such article or services, or the wages prevailing for such labor, as the case may be, during the base period, and shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine to be of general applicability in respect of such article, services, or wages, including the following: Speculative fluctuations, general increases or decreases in costs of transportation, general increase or decrease in cost of maintenance and operation, general increases or decreases in costs of living, and general increases or decreases in profits earned by sellers of the article, persons performing such services, and employers for whom such labor is performed, during and subsequent to the year ending June 25, 1950. Every regulation or order establishing any ceiling under this subsection shall be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation or order.

"(b) Any ceiling or ceilings may be established under this section in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for the continuation of models, the standardization of the production of essential items and such other provisions and adjustments, as in the judgment of the Administrator are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title. Any such ceiling may be established in terms of price, wages, margins, commissions, fees, charges, allowances, or other terms. Except as provided in section 202 (b) (relating to agricultural commodities) the Administrator may establish a ceiling or ceilings under this section with respect to articles and services below the general market price for the article or articles or services in effect at the time of establishment of such ceiling or ceilings.

"(c) The Administrator shall exercise his powers under subsections (a) and (b) with respect to agricultural commodities ,and with respect to articles derived in whole or in substantial part from agricultural commodities, in such manner as to support prices to farmers for such agricultural commodities at such levels as may be necessary to enable farmers to receive therefor the highest price received in the base period or the parity price for such commodities, whichever is higher. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural products, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural product. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act. Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreemetn, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher; Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

"POWERS OF ADMINISTRATOR WITH RESPECT TO MARKET PRACTICES

"SEC. 207. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation, or order, regulate or prohibit, with respect to any article, speculative or manipulative practices, selling, marketing, or inventory practices (including practices relating to changes in form or quality, hoarding, or other practices), which in his judgment, are equivalent to or are likely to result in price increases inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

"PROCEDURE

"SEC. 208. (a) Regulations or orders establishing any ceiling or ceilings may be issued after such inquiry as the Administrator deems necessary or proper. Within a period of 60 days after the issuance of any such regulation or order any person subject to the provisions thereof may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Administrator, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to such regulation or order and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. At any time after the expiration of such 60 days any person subject to the provisions of such regulation or order may file such a protest based solely on grounds arising after the expiration of such 60 days. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this subsection, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing or 90 days after the issuance of the regulation or order in respect of which the protest is filed, whichever occurs later, the Administrator shall either grant or deny such protest in whole, or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith.

"(b) In any proceedings under this title, the Administrator may take official notice of economic and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under section 210, and may limit such proceedings to the filing of affidavits or other written evidence, or the filing of briefs.

"REVIEW

"SEC. 209. (a) Any protestant who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest, may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, praying that the regulation or order protested be set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the Administrator who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of the proceedings in connection with the protest which shall include a statement of the materials of which the Administrator has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such transcript the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm or set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, or to remand the proceeding, except that the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the Administrator at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to any regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the Administrator and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the Administrator, and the court determines that such evidence is material, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the Administrator. The Administrator shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof, and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof, except that on request by the Administrator, any such additional evidence may be presented directly to the court.

"(b) No such regulation or order shall be set aside in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court setting aside in whole or in part any such regulation or order shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (c) within such 30 days, the effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(c) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code. The Supreme Court shall expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any ceiling under this title, and the provisions of this title authorizing any regulation or order establishing any ceiling. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have power to consider such validity, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any such provision of this title, or any provision of this title, or any provision of any such regulation or order.

"OBTAINING INFORMATION

"SEC. 210. (a) The Administrator may make such studies and investigations, and obtain or require the furnishing of such information under oath or affirmation or otherwise, as he deems necessary or proper to assist him in prescribing any regulation or order under this title, and in the administration and enforcement of this title, and regulations and orders thereunder. For such purposes the Administrator may administer oaths and affirmations, may require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documents at any designated place, may require persons to permit the inspection and copying of documents, and the inspection of inventories, and may, by regulation or order, require the making and keeping of records and other odcuments and the making of reports. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (49 U. S. C., sec. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

"(b) The Administrator shall not publish or disclose any information obtained under this title that he deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless he determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended.

"(c) The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required under this section in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena issued with respect thereto, such person either has furnished the Administrator with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy), or has entered into a stipulation with the Administrator as to the information contained in such documents.

"REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

"SEC. 211. The Administrator may, from time to time, issue such regulations and orders as he may deem necessary or proper in order to carry out the purposes and provisions of this title, and to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof. Any regulation or order issued under this title may be amended or rescinded by the Administrator whenever in his opinion such action is necessary or proper in order to carry out the provisions of this title or to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof.

"ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 212. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of this title, or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with this title or such regulation, order, or requirement, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond. In cases of actual controversy, a like application may be made by any interested person, and upon a proper showing a like order or decree shall be granted.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, and any person who willfully falsifies in any material respect a document or report required to be kept or filed thereunder, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. Whenever the Administrator has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"(c) The district courts shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title and of regulations, orders, or requirements thereunder, and concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all civil proceedings to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder. Such civil proceedings and any criminal proceedings may be brought in any district in which any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil proceedings may also be brought in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. No costs shall be assessed against the United States Government in any proceeding under this title.

"(d) No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties in any Federal, State, or Territorial court, on any grounds for or in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in good faith pursuant to any provision of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, notwithstanding that subsequently such provision, regulation, order, or requirement may be modified, rescinded, or determined to be invalid. The Administrator may intervene in any suit or action wherein a party relies for ground of relief or defense upon this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder.

"SEC. 213. The powers granted in this title shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, or changes in established rental practices, except where such action is affirmatively found by the Administrator to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title.

"SEC. 214. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility except where such action is affirmatively found necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this title, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting station, or (4) rates charged for any professional services.

"SEC. 215. If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, the person who buys such commodity for use or consumption other than in the course of trade or business may, within 1 year from the date of the occurrence of the violation, except as hereinafter provided, bring an action against the seller on account of the overcharge. In any action under this subsection, the seller shall be liable for reasonable attorney's fees and costs as determined by court, plus whichever of the following sums is greater: (1) Such amount not more than the amount of the overcharge, or the overcharges, upon which the action is based as the court in its discretion may determine, or (2) an amount not less than $25 nor more than $50, as the court in its discretion may determine. For the purposes of this section the word "overcharge" shall mean the amount by which the consideration exceeds the applicable ceiling. If any person selling a commodity violates a regulation or order prescribing a ceiling or ceilings, and the buyer either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the President may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the President the buyer shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations. Any action under this subsection by either the buyer or the President, as the case may be, may be brought in any court of competent jurisdiction. A judgment in an action for damages under this subsection shall be a bar to the recovery under this subsection of any damages in any other action against the same seller on account of sales made to the same purchaser prior to the institution of the action in which such judgment was rendered. The President may not institute any action under this subsection on behalf of the United States—

"(1) if the violation arose because the person selling the commodity acted upon and in accordance with the written advice and instructions of the President or any official authorized to act for him;

"(2) if the violation arose out of the sale of a commodity to any agency of the Government, and such sale was made pursuant to the lowest bid made in response to an invitation for competitive bids.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 216. For the purposes of this title and title II—

"(a) 'Person' means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, or any organized group of persons, or any receiver, trustee, or other legal representative of any of the foregoing, and includes the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

"(b) 'Article' means any article, product, material, or commodity.

"(c) 'Services' means any service, operation, or function performed otherwise than as an employee by a person (other than a State or political subdivision thereof) for any other person for compensation.

"(d) 'Labor' means any function performed by an individual as an employee of a person other than a State or political subdivision thereof.

"(e) An article shall be deemed the 'same' article as another article if it is identical in every respect with such other article.

"(f) An article shall be deemed 'similar' to another article if it is not the same article but is an article of the same kind and of the same or substantially the same quality as such other article.

"(g) An article shall be deemed a 'new' article if neither the same article nor a similar article was sold at wholesale during the base period.

"(h) Services shall be deemed the 'same' services as other services if they consist of the same or substantially the same operations or functions as such other services.

"(i) Services shall be deemed 'new' services if the same services were not performed during the base period.

"(j) Labor shall be deemed the 'same' labor as other labor if it consists of the same or substantially the same functions and duties of the same or substantially the same functions and duties as such other labor.

"(k) Labor shall be deemed 'new' labor if the same labor was not performed during the base period.

"(l) 'Sale' means any disposition, exchange, lease, or other transfer, or any contract to do any of the foregoing, and 'sell', 'selling', 'seller', 'buy', and 'buyer', shall be construed accordingly.

"(m) 'Sale at wholesale' of an article means (1) any sale of such article for resale by the buyer, or (2) in the case of a sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of such article for consumption or use by the buyer, such sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer; except that wherever specific reference is made to a 'sale at wholesale of an agricultural commodity,' such sale shall be deemed to refer only to a sale of such commodity by the farmer who produced such commodity.

"(n) 'Price' means the consideration received or receivable in connection with the sale of an article or for the performance of services.

"(o) 'Wage' means the rate of consideration received or receivable for the performance of labor, whether in the form of wages, salary, or any other form.

"(p) 'Ceiling' means the maximum price for which an article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of services, or the maximum wage which may be paid for labor.

"(q) 'Agricultural commodity' includes only an agricultural commodity in the form in which it is customarily marketed by farmers.

"(r) 'Base period' means the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, both inclusive.

"(s) 'Comparable' means substantially the same real, utility, and neighborhood value.

"(t) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control created by section 4.

"ADMINISTRATOR OF OFFICE OF INFLATION CONTROL

"SEC. 217. (a) The President is hereby authorized to create in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Inflation Control, which shall be under the direction of an Administrator, to be known as the Administrator of the Office of Inflation Control (in this act referred to as the 'Administrator'). The Administrator shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and receive compensation at the rate of $17,500 a year.

"(b) The Administrator may establish and utilize such advisory, regional, local, industry, or other groups or agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated service, as may from time to time be needed. The Administrator shall give due consideration to the recommendations of such groups, committees, or other agencies appointed under this section, and he shall utilize, insofar as practicable, local agencies to the end that compliance with the act may be effectuated.

"(c) The Administrator may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary in order to carry out his functions and duties under this title and title II, and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the Administrator in any case in any court. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Office of Inflation Control, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

"(d) The principal office of the Administrator shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or his duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of his powers in any place.

"(e) The Administrator shall submit to Congress a quarterly report covering his activities for the preceding quarter and including such information and data and recommendations with respect to matters covered by this title and title II as he may find advisable.

"(f) The Administrator, with the approval of the President, may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Federal Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as he may deem appropriate."

Mr. HALLECK (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this amendment includes, with a few changes, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania can quickly explain, the price and wage control and rationing features of the so-called Kunkel substitute, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, this proposes to add to the present Spence bill that part of the so-called Kunkel bill which creates price and wage ceilings and authorizes rationing at the retail level. This is all contained in 9308, copies of which are available.

Mr. PATMAN. I have a copy of 9308. Title 2 of this particular bill is the one that has been read so far.

Mr. KUNKEL. It is 9308, starting at the bottom of page 4, with the definitions. The definitions are included as a separate section of it. Then it takes in that part of the bill in regard to price and wage ceilings, beginning on page 9 of the bill 9308.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KUNKEL. I refuse to yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I am trying to find out what it is.

Mr KUNKEL. Well, I have only a few minutes. The gentleman can get a copy of the bill and find out. In the meantime let me try to explain these other changes.

It accepts the dates outlined in the Spence substitute as amended by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] and changes the base-period date from May 25 to June 25. On page 10, at line 7, is added another clarifying provision, to make it mandatory on the President, or whoever administers the act, to impose ceilings on articles sold, services performed, and wages paid, all at one time. The three must be established all in one package. No ceiling shall be imposed on any one of the three that does not at the same time impose ceilings on the other two. That makes it very clear that one group cannot be picked out to the exclusion of the other.

Also, there has been added a provision taken from the Spence substitute which was read for amendment yesterday. This addition would permit a civilian to sue in a civil court to recover damages for overcharges. It is the same provision that was in the Spence substitute yesterday. But the licensing provision in that same substitute is not included.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] concerning milk is also included and added to H. R. 9308.

Inasmuch as all this has already been debated and has been available for study, and inasmuch as the amendments which have been included in it in addition to the original language are all amendments to which the House has given its approval during the debate of the last few days, I feel that this will perfect the present measure under consideration very much.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman's amendment would establish price and wage ceilings within a certain period, would it not? It would freeze them to the prices and wages received during a certain period, would it not?

Mr. KUNKEL. It would place those into effect as soon as the President created the Office of Inflation Control. Under the provisions of my bill they can then be adjusted in the light of future developments. I do not think you can have a permanent freeze lasting for all time to come at the same level; some room must be left for adjustment in the light of new and changing conditions and experience. From time to time conditions are going to change and there are going to be pressures upward which will have to be recognized at some future time.

Mr. YATES. How would the gentleman's amendment apply to those contracts between labor unions and management which provide for progressive increases in wages over a period of years? Would not the gentleman's amendment freeze the provisions of the agreement to the wages paid during the base period?

Mr. KUNKEL. I do not think it would. That, of course, is a special case.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The language of the gentleman's amendment states "as far as practical." It would not, of course, be found practical for the administration to change an existing labor-management contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Jennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like the gentleman to tell me where he commences in this bill 9308 and where he ends.

Mr. FULTON. The Chairman, I ask for the regular order, I ask for a ruling on the request.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order has been called for. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I will yield as soon as I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON], who wants to ask a question.

Mr. FULTON. Section 214 of the original Kunkel amendment provided an exemption to newspapers, books, magazines, and radio. As the gentleman recalls, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] and I sponsored an amendment of the same nature to the Spence bill, taking the gentleman's provision and broadening it. Does the gentleman's present amendment contain the Buchanan-Fulton amendment on newspapers, and so forth, or is it the gentleman's old amendment?

Mr. KUNKEL. It is the old amendment, but I would be perfectly willing to accept and support any amendment along the line the gentleman has indicated. That was supported by himself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] yesterday, and I supported it then.

I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. I wish to know where the gentleman's amendment commences. I have page 9 before me.

Mr. KUNKEL. Yes; that is where it commences as read by the Clerk.

Mr. PATMAN. How far does it go?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. If the gentleman will yield, it is a new section entirely.

Mr. KUNKEL. It is a new title and it goes over to page 26 where title III starts. A new section is added which includes the part of the bill which begins on page 4, line 23, and runs over to page 9, line 13.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the gentleman point out first where in his amendment and read the text of it this question of adjustment insofar as practical is set forth which the gentleman gave in answer to a question?

Mr. KUNKEL. Line 18 on page 15.

Mr. JAVITS. I have read the section and all it does is to say he shall give due consideration.

Mr. KUNKEL. I do not yield any further. As stated during general debate, this is modeled after the original Gore bill which was debated in this House back in 1941 and 1942 when we first considered price control. It has had a good deal of thought put into it over the years and I believe it will be the most efficient way that we can attack the problem of trying to get a stabilization period during which the President can have the power to act toward stabilizing prices and wages before they get completely out of line. We must do this before they become so dislocated that it will be impossible to install any kind of wage or price freeze except through the process of imposing selective price control. If we do not do this right now, if we let it go a month or 2 months, even if this bill is passed and the President lets it go for 2 or 3 months, we will have lost the one time in which we can take effective action or when the President can take effective action.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I am at a loss to understand the gentleman's reply to my previous question and the explanation given by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I found no such provision in the law. I should like to direct the gentleman's attention to page 10, line 4, in which it is mandatorily stated that it shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable with respect to such labor.

It seems to me the terms are inflexible and that the Administrator could not under any circumstances alter that ceiling. If that is not the case I wish the gentleman would point out in his amendment where there is a provision which permits deviation from that conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out a very glaring weakness to this amendment. Whereas in the intent of the bill offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the new provisions, as was pointed out, this bill still provides for a mandatory general freeze. Regardless of what the intent says that it does not, nevertheless the provisions are very clear as to that particular thing.

I have here a list of some 25 bugs that appear in this provision of the bill, but time do[illegible] permit us to go into them. I feel t[illegible] should take these up step by step.

This freeze, of course, does not apply to retail sales, although the Administrator's power to set ceilings is not limited to wholesale ceilings. While starting with wholesale prices may be a practical approach, the bill should not be so drawn that a retail freeze is impossible at the same time. This depends on the effective date which is discussed later in the bill.

The effective date of the general freeze is immediately upon enactment. This bill does not allow any time to set retail ceilings or to set up administrative machinery for enforcement, hearing protests, making adjustments, and so forth. The date at which the freeze goes into effect should be left to the President.

The base period is inflexibly set as June 10 to June 25. Now, 2 weeks is not long enough. Many articles would not be priced during that period. The shortest period should be at least a month.

In case of roll-backs, either to the last 2 weeks before the Korean attack or to the months preceding the attack, are not possible, the President should be able to set later base periods.

Ceilings are set in advance for new products or services as the highest price charged during the base period for comparable products or services in a specified area. This is manifestly unworkable, particularly after the act has been in force for a while. Ceilings of comparable products might have been raised from the base period, substitute materials with different costs might be used, and so forth. Instead, a general power of regulation, with the criterion that due consideration be given to prices prevailing for comparable products, should be given to the President.

Regional price differences are completely ignored in the ceiling for products not sold by the seller during the base period. This ceiling is the highest charged anywhere in the United States for a comparable product.

For services and labor not previously performed, the area for comparison is the same county or parish, or, if nothing similar exists in the county, the same State.

County areas are often too small for proper comparisons.

Political boundaries, either county or State, often do not coincide with marketing or other economic boundaries.

Many economic areas, such as metropolitan districts, labor markets, and milksheds, are already customary and well defined.

The President should be allowed to issue regulations classifying areas.

Public-utility and transportation charges are exempted from control. Since these charges are already controlled by public utility commissions, and so forth, such an exemption would probably be made by regulation for reasons of administrative convenience. However, control should not be forbidden because such charges are an important item of costs. Actions by various Federal, State, or local commissions which were inconsistent with general stabilization could force up price ceilings. Therefore, the President should be given power to intervene in public utility proceedings.

Several miscellaneous exemptions are made, such as for insurance, newspapers, and professional services. It is probable that such charges might later be exempted under the general authority to make exemptions where ceilings are not needed to preserve the price structure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure from my observations of the last few days as these debates have progressed that there are many Members of this body who believe that some start should be made in the direction of controls such as contained in this amendment. Obviously, there are differences of opinion as to how those controls should be imposed, when they should be imposed, and what their effect should be. Whatever those differences may be, I think it ought to be crystal clear that in these proposals that are here being offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the House of Representatives has a really decent, fair opportunity to deal with the subject.

As the debate opened, the gentleman from Kentucky, the very estimable chairman of the committee, indicated that the substitute which he offered dealing with these various subjects was offered because of what he said was the insistence of the minority, the Republicans in the House, that something be done about the problem. Whether that was the principal reason or not I do not know. At any event, in order to prove our good faith in trying to bring something before the House in an orderly way that could be acted upon, these proposals were drafted and presented in the committee. As objections have been raised, or defects pointed out, or something needed here or there, those suggestions have been weighed and analyzed and have been incorporated in many particulars.

The amendment as now offered contains certain of the amendments that were adopted yesterday after debate in committee of the whole. I think certainly it should appear that it is a good faith effort to try to provide the standby controls that, as I say, so many seem to think should be invoked.

Earlier, as the committee met today, I made a parliamentary inquiry as to what the motion to recommit might be. I have since learned that, in view of the fact that this whole bill is a substitute or an amendment, and even though the resolution making the consideration in order provides that it shall be considered as an original bill, no motion to recommit except a straight motion will be in order.

I may say at this point that I think that, being in the minority, I am not going to be for many more rules like that, because the motion to recommit should be preserved to the minority. In this particular instance we might offer the motion to recommit containing this amendment and then obtain a record vote that would give us an opportunity to register ourselves for our people and the country on this very important matter.

However, if this amendment is defeated the motion to recommit will be offered. I would dare to express the hope that no point of order would be addressed against it, in view of the very peculiar circumstances which confront us. However, being realistic, I must understand that that point of order might be raised. So in contemplation of that, this is the time and the chance to stand up and be counted. If you think that this standby authority should be granted to the President, this is a good, fair proposal to act upon.

We all recognize, not only in respect to this amendment and this proposal but generally in matters of this sort, that when action is taken first in the House of Representatives it is only the beginning of the legislative process. Whatever measure we pass must go to the other body. There it will be acted upon.

If there are differences between the two measures as passed, and there almost always are, then the matter goes to conference and the conferees work out the details. Finally we get an opportunity to pass upon the conference report.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

(Mr. CARROLL asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to stop this wrangling and come to grips with the real issue. This is not a difficult problem. In the past 2 or 3 days there has been entirely too much political maneuvering on a question which is of vital importance to the American people.

Let us reflect for a moment on the legislative issues under consideration. The President has requested in the interest of national defense that the Congress pass legislation authorizing the establishment of priorities, allocations, and the requisitioning of those commodities which are essential to our national security. At the same time, the President has requested that the Congress take certain steps to control inflation. Without attempting to enumerate all of these steps, we know that they involve increased taxation, control of consummer credit, and so forth. The feeling is general that the President's requests were too modest in the light of inflationary forces which might reach runaway proportions. Some of us are of the opinion, therefore, that the President should be granted stand-by authority to regulate price and wage stabilization. In order to delegate the President this stand-by authority, we must necessarily establish certain standards and specifications to conform to constitutional requirements. At the same time, we must not unduly restrict the action and authority of the President by setting up such rigid standards that will prevent the President from assuming and carrying out the full responsibility which we have imposed upon him.

In my opinion, the Kunkel amendment now under consideration is too inflexible for it does not permit the executive branch of Government that degree of flexibility which is necessary to formulate a sound equitable price and wage stabilization program. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN], in his excellent speech in opposition to the Kunkel amendment, has presented an argument so technical in nature that few of us have been able to grasp its meaning. Therefore, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN], if it was not true, during the early days of OPA in the last war, that many regulations were set up which, although equitable to the Atlantic seaboard, imposed great inequities on other geographic areas in the Middle West, the South, and the West, and that in reality these regulations had no application to the regional economic problems of these areas.

Would the gentleman say that these inequities might again arise as a result of the inflexibility of the provisions contained in the Kunkel amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes. It does the same thing. That is a mistake that we should profit by. In other words, we live in a Nation where we have economic geographical areas which have to be treated accordingly.

Mr. CARROLL. That is exactly the OPA experience during the last war. What happened? In the West and in the South and other areas of the country we fought to limit the power of Washington regulations and to delegate certain powers to the regions so that CPA economists could apply the regulation with some degree of intelligence and equity.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. PICKETT. If I understand the proposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], it is to establish a base period on the basis of which these prices and services would be frozen. Is that not correct?

Mr. CARROLL. As I understand it, although the gentleman from Texas may not agree with me, it goes deeper than that. The base period is something that can be determined. We are talking about something different now. We are talking about different geographical economies.

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania purports to set up a certain base period for the freezing and rolling back operation. I understand that to be true. Then it would apply all over the country for the same purpose. The answer would be that whatever the situation were in Colorado on the given date, and whatever the situation might have been on the Atlantic seaboard on the same date would be in keeping with the economic condition in that particular part of the country and it would not be all mixed up, varying from one part of the country to the other.

Mr. CARROLL. I think the gentleman from Texas misconceives what we are talking about. The gentleman from Pennsylvania earlier mentioned base period. He said the President should not be limited to that short period of time. He may want to go back beyond the period set up by the Kunkel amendment.

When you give the President stand-by power you do not have to set up specific base periods. He has his own experts. He has his own boards. The Congress has the right of review, too. We are talking about an entirely different situation. We are talking about setting up inequitable regulations which may be applicable only to the Atlantic seaboard but which may be superimposed on our economy in the West, the Middle West, and in the South.

Those regulations may not be suited to our regional problems.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. As I understand it, the Kunkel amendment makes it mandatory, when the President makes his determination, that prices, wages, and rationing be imposed simultaneously.

Now, even before he makes his determination upon the enactment of the act. If we do so, let me point out that from an administrative standpoint, rationing boards have not been set up in the United States; rationing books have not been printed. What this actually means is a delay in imposing rationing because of the difficulty in administration of the act, as provided for in the Kunkel amendment. It might take 90 days or it might take 4 months before the boards are set up and the books printed for distribution all over the United States.

Mr. CARROLL. I think the gentleman makes a good point. But many of us feel that the administration did not go far enough when it asked for certain limited controls. What are we asking the administration to do? We are delegating our legislative authority, setting up certain standards, and saying to the President and his advisers, "The responsibility rests upon you to go forward if the need arises." As we put that responsibility on them, all we are asking now is that there be some flexibility so that we do not tie their hands too much.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. ENGLE of California. Do we have any assurance that the committee is going to offer any bill that will permit us to vote for stand-by price and wage controls? I have not heard anything that indicates that this committee is going to give us a chance to do that. As far as I am concerned, unless they do, I am going to support the Kunkel amendment.

Mr. CARROLL. I now ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE], or some member of the committee, are we going to have an opportunity to pass upon price and wage stabilization, to give the President stand-by controls? We are entitled to know that.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. DEANE. At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] that would provide what the gentleman is asking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CARROLL] has expired.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARROLL. Does the amendment you propose to offer provide flexible controls and stand-by authority to be given the President for price and wage stabilization?

Mr. DEANE. It does.

Mr. CARROLL. More flexible than the Kunkel amendment? That is what the Members want to know.

Mr. DEANE. That is true; wages tied with prices.

Mr. CARROLL. And it is entirely free from any freezing action or tying of the President's hands?

Mr. DEANE. It is.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I take it the gentleman favors granting the President more than he asked for; namely, at least stand-by price and wage-control authority.

Mr. CARROLL. There is no question about that.

Mr. KEATING. Is it not the sensible thing for the Members who feel that way, as I do, to vote for the Kunkel amendment, with possibly some modifications, but to vote? Now is our chance. Will we get any chance hereafter?

Mr. CARROLL. I respect the gentleman's opinion and his sincere desire to give the President stand-by controls. We believe that the present controls, as contained in this amendment, are so inflexible that it ties his hands. Therefore, most of us who are also sincere in trying to give the President regular stand-by authority, with the proper legislative delegation setting up certain specifications and standards, putting the responsibility on the executive branch of Government, want to support the Deane amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARROLL. I yield.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman's explanation has been exactly correct. I believe the desire of this House is to pass at least stand-by price and wage ceilings and I, too, would favor such action. but the Kunkel amendment is worse than no controls at all. It has so many generalities and so many gadgets in it that the very purpose of the House will be thwarted if the Kunkel amendment is accepted. For instance, on page 9 a distinction is attempted to be drawn between subsections (b) and (c), a distintcion which has not been explained. Contracts between labor and management like the Ford contract, providing for progressive wage increases are abolished by the terms of subsection (c). We want an act which will prevent strikes, not provoke them.

We want controls which are workable; not controls which will straitjacket our economy and our people.

When the gentleman was on the floor, I asked him whether the inflexibility of the provision of subsection (c) could in any way be alleviated by the Administrator, and my attention was directed to page 15. Page 15 in no way, in my opinion, gives the Administrator the flexibility necessary to change the mandate of subsection (c) on page 10, because it reads as follows:

> He shall by regulation or order establish such ceiling or ceilings in his judgment which will generally be fair.

What does the word "generally" mean? It is a loose term which cannot stand against the stringent provision of subsection (c).

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is absolutely correct. And he is to be commended for the time, study and contribution he has repeatedly made during consideration of this important legislation.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Has the reading of title I been completed at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of title I; yes.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield for a consent request?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. My attention has just been called to the fact that the prohibition against rationing at the retail level in title I of the bill is still included. I do not believe any of the membership want to have that prohibtion included. I therefore ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment striking it out.

Mr. MULTER. I shall object to it at this time, but if the gentleman would formulate his amendment I may withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I think we really should be moved to tears when we see the confusion of the Members on the minority side over this amendment now before us. Ever since the amendment was offered I have been trying to find out what it is. We were referred to H. R. 9380 which the gentleman from Pennsylvania introduced on August 2. I have in front of me the amendment as it was offered at the desk, and I think the Clerk should very sincerely thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for getting permission to have him excused from reading it. Many of us have gone to the desk, and it is utterly impossible to find out what is in this amendment from the manner in which it has been submitted. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the author of the amendment, himself told us a moment ago that there is at least one thing in the amendment that even he does not want included.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. YATES. As a matter of fact, the question that I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania with respect to whether or not there could be any flexibility in the administration was answered a few moments ago by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], saying that flexibility was given. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] came to me later and stated that he was not sure that his answer to me was correct because of the various amendments that have been offered.

Mr. MULTER. I am sure the Members can spend the rest of the day examining this document and trying to find out what is in it and what is not in it, but when you get to the end of the day you will be just as confused as I am at this moment.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. FLOOD. Before the gentleman from New York, who now has the floor, went to the desk I went there trying to read this hodge-podge. There are three or four writings in it, different handwritings, and slips of paper, and torn sheets; and three clerks and the gentleman from New York were unable to get any clear idea as to what is in it.

Mr. MULTER. I am sure that at the end of the day after all the debate has closed we still will not know what is in it. But one thing is certain, and that is that as this amendment stands now at least that much of the language which is in H. R. 9308 that has been read is an absolute and complete freeze as of now. It reads:

> It shall be unlawful regardless of any contract or other obligation for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy, or to accept delivery of any article at a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such sale.

If the housewife goes out and buys an item over the ceiling price and her husband accepts delivery, they both can be sent to jail or be made to pay a $5,000 fine or both; or if a man pays a 1-cent an hour increase over the wage that he should have been paying as of now he can be sent to jail and fined $5,000.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I thought the vote on the amendment this morning settled one question, to wit, that we were going back to the original bill reported out and amend it but not try to amend it by adding price control at this time; that we should have hearings on price control, which the gentleman from Kentucky promised us; and I expect to vote for it, but not in this bill. The inflation control part of it should be in another bill. Witnesses should be called immediately and the committee should consider it. We do not want to mix all of these things up. We should have a committee meeting at once, at which time we will take up the inflation controls. I hope we will go back to that thought. If we are going to roam all over again, go through all the amendments, some of which we have rejected and some of which we have adopted, there would be even more confusion. Let us get back to business and pass the original bill and take up price and wage controls later.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Does not the gentleman think this Congress today should pass some stand-by price and wage stabilization measure and incorporate it in this bill?

Mr. MULTER. I thought we had perfected such a bill yesterday. The vote this morning here rejected that bill, which had stand-by control of wages and prices in a flexible form which you might be able to work out in conference with the other body and eliminate those parts which might be objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. If we had passed that, then there might have been some hope of working out something in conference, giving the President stand-by controls that would not tie his hands. This kind of a thing does not accomplish that purpose.

Mr. KEATING. We still have the opportunity to change this in conference, do we not?

Mr. MULTER. Of course, you have the opportunity of changing it in conference. What I am objecting to is that we do not have the opportunity now to perfect this before it goes to conference. That is the objection I raise.

Mr. KEATING. We should pass today some price and wage stabilization measure giving this authority to the President which he said he does not want?

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman says on a stand-by basis?

Mr. KEATING. On some stand-by basis.

Mr. MULTER. It should be flexible?

Mr. KEATING. I am not wedded to any particular provision of the bill. What I am saying to the gentleman is that we should pass some measure, some price and wage stabilization measure, giving to the President this stand-by authority and should support some bill to that effect as an amendment to the bill that was brought in here and which we are now considering.

Mr. MULTER. Is the gentleman prepared to say whether or not the President shall enforce these stand-by provisions when the time arrives through a separate agency or through existing agencies? Which does the gentleman want the President to do?

Mr. KEATING. I say all of those details are matters that can be worked out in conference. Those of us who sincerely feel that the President should have this authority, which he stated he does not want, should vote for some stand-by wage and price stabilization measure. That is what our people want. Does not the gentleman agree with me?

Mr. MULTER. This amendment is inflexible and bad in many respects. The procedures are set up for a brand-new agency with a man at the head of it at a salary of $17,500 with all the personnel he may need. The only choice given to the President is as to the time when he will set up the agency, and whether he sets up the agency or not the bill now inflexibly fixes a ceiling on wages and prices.

Mr. KEATING. Then I suggest to the gentleman he offer a perfecting amendment to change those details.

Mr. MULTER. If the gentleman will prevail on the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his amendment, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] will offer a stand-by flexible-provision amendment.

Mr. KEATING. That is, the gentleman wants a price and wage stabilization bill giving the President this authority, the gentleman and Members on his side want to give him that authority, but he wants to introduce an amendment to that effect?

Mr. MULTER. I would suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment and work out with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] a proper stand-by measure, which is a stand-by measure and flexible and not mandatory and inflexible.

Mr. KEATING. It is later than you think. I have heard a lot of statements from the gentleman's side this should not be handled on a political basis, it should be handled from the point of view of the welfare of the country, and I agree with that. Here we have an amendment. Let us offer any perfecting amendments to it that the gentleman pleases or that other Members wish, then let us vote for it.

Mr. MULTER. We did that all day yesterday, and then your colleagues rejected the perfected bill. Now you ask that we repeat the process.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania..

Mr. FLOOD. Is it not true that within the last hour this House had a chance to vote on stand-by controls, including my distinguished friend from New York? I do not know how he voted, but I saw most of the Members on that side of the aisle vote against stand-by controls as of today.

Mr. MULTER. I observed the same thing.

Mr. KEATING. I favor stand-by legislation for price and wage controls. The fear I have in my mind is that either we or the Congress are not acting fast enough here.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. May we ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] whether he intends now—he has the power to get recognition—to offer his substitute for the Kunkel amendment? Does he intend to do it now so that both alternatives will be before the House? I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] that that is the least, in fairness, that ought to be done.

Mr. DEANE. I propose to do so, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. This clearly demonstrates the inability of this whole House to act as a committee. Why, in heaven's name, does not the Committee on Banking and Currency ask the committee to rise and bring this thing back in such shape that some of us fair-minded ones can support?

Mr. MULTER. We brought you a bill which the committee approved by a 20 to 1 vote covering what the President requested. Let us go to work on a price and wage control bill in committee that we can work out as a bipartisan measure and bring that in to you next week.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman understands, as do we all, that when the matter of price control and wage control was before the Committee on Banking and Currency, the majority members, the Democratic members of that committee, elected not to deal with that subject. The only time you moved to deal with it at all was when yesterday you trotted out the Spence substitute.

Mr. MULTER. The answer to that is, sir, that the Kunkel amendment was submitted in the committee for the first time in an executive session; it was introduced the night before, and we did not even have an opportunity to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I listened to the observation of my friend from Indiana from which one would draw the inference that if he were a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that he would vote for the Kunkel amendment. I am wondering if my inference is correct that the gentleman would vote for the Kunkel mandatory bill that was offered in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HALLECK. The Kunkel bill as offered in the committee may have been mandatory at that time, I do not know.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the point. Would the gentleman have voted for it?

Mr. HALLECK. But the measure that is now before us has been revised in numerous particulars about which the gentleman from Massachusetts undoubtedly knows, and it is that measure with which we are dealing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would the gentleman have voted for the mandatory bill in committee?

Mr. HALLECK. Personally I am for standby controls as against immediate mandatory controls. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with my friend.

Mr. HALLECK. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the gentleman ought to be against this Kunkel bill because it is mandatory.

Mr. HALLECK. It is not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh yes; it is mandatory.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman made that statement before. The Kunkel bill says that the President is authorized. That is not a directive; that is permissive, not mandatory in anybody's language.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will say to my friend from Indiana, who is usually correct, I suggest he read this Kunkel amendment again and I am sure he will find that that is not correct; that it is mandatory in certain respects.

Mr. HALLECK. It is not mandatory except in certain situations like base periods, certain ceilings being imposed, but the invoking of the measure as a whole is left to the discretion of the President. It has been so interpreted by every newspaper reporter who has read it, everyone who understands it. I know what is in it and I am just sorry that the gentleman from Massachusetts does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have asked for this additional time to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] who is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, if the real reason why we find ourselves in the present situation and in this great confusion today is not the fact that his committee rushed this legislation through without due consideration, hearing only three government witnesses, shutting off witnesses from business and industry that might have contributed to the hearings some bits of information that would have been of help in amending this bill, and that the language was so hastily drafted that even the chairman of the committee himself brought in a new bill rather than support the bill that the committee recommended. So the responsibility rests entirely with the gentleman's committee, which failed somehow or other to bring in legislation that did take care of the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will yield, of course the observations of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] and my good friend from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] show that our Republican leadership do not know where they are at. First they wanted something stronger, then they wanted something weaker, and now they want to send it back to the committee. As a matter of fact, they are just taking a position opposite to anything that is proposed by the Democratic majority of the committee. They just do not know where they are at. Am I right?

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The fact of the matter is that there was ample and due consideration of the bill as reported out by our committee. Twenty of twenty-one members who were there in executive sesion agreed that it was a good bill, that it should be brought out. We were giving to the President by that bill the powers he asked for and needs now and should have now. When the temper of the country reached the Members of the Congress on both sides indicating that they wanted the President to have standby control so that he could invoke price controls when he was ready for them and the country needed them, we wanted him to have that power. Everybody agrees now we still want him to have that power. The trouble is that while some of the gentlemen on that side of the aisle are for talking about giving him the power, they do not want to put it in language which will give it to him.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Did the gentleman from New York get the impression from the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, the majority leader, that he was insinuating that those of us on this side of the aisle are as confused now as he has appeared to be through this entire debate?

Mr. MULTER. No. He meant and he said that he clearly understands the situation, political, and otherwise, then and now. The confusion is still on my left.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might say that the big business interests that ordinarily support the Republican Party understand the situation.

Mr. MULTER. I also concur in that statement of our distinguished majority leader.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the bill that was submitted to the House was carefully considered by the committee. It involves speculative trading, credit controls, restoration of the old regulation W, and matters of that kind, which the President asked for. Then after that was considered, the committee decided to submit it to try to get the House to pass it as an emergency measure, with the understanding that the committee will take up later, immediately hereafter, price-and-wage controls and related subjects.

I sincerely hope the House will adopt the bill as the committee reported it. It means a lot in preventing inflation. It is something we need now. We need it quickly. I hope we can leave off these other amendments and just put through the original bill. I think that is the only chance we have to get a bill today or within a reasonable time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. As a matter of fact, inflation of prices is caused by inflation of the currency. There is nothing in this bill at all to check the inflation of the currency, is there?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; on commercial loans.

Mr. RANKIN. I am talking about this new currency. Prices in a free economy are governed by two things—the volume of the Nation's currency multiplied by the velocity of its circulation. There is not a word in this bill which would check the issuance of Federal Reserve notes which are being inflated now at the rate of more than $60,000,000 a month. You are not striking at the root of the trouble at all.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about that because there is a lot in this bill that will stop the issuance of Federal Reserve bank currency.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As long as you have deficit financing you are bound to have an inflation of the currency.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; you have inflation and that is the reason I voted against the tax reduction bill because I wanted to balance the budget.

The Kunkel amendment is an overall freeze. The Kunkel amendment is a definite and immediate freezing of prices and wages. I heard what the distinguished gentleman from Indiana said a while ago, that it required the President to activate—I do not know that he used that exact word but that it required the President to do something to put the law into effect.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But with one exception—it does not include retail prices.

Mr. PATMAN. I have not noticed the latest version. I know the original version did not have retail prices. The bill has been changed a number of times. The present amendment submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania contains parts of three bills and several amendments which were proposed here on the floor of the House yesterday, some adopted and some defeated. We do not know where we are with this present amendment. But we do know it is an absolute freeze. I want to read to the gentleman from Indiana title II, section 201:

SEC. 201. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy or accept delivery of, any article at a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such sale.

(b) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to receive or pay, or to enter into any contract, agreement, or other obligation under which he is entitled or required, or under which he purports to be entitled or required, to receive or pay, for the peformance of any services a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such services.

Then it defines the ceilings applicable to sales of articles and services.

That is the law. That is the law if this is enacted. The only place where the President must do anything or can do anything under this proposed amendment is under section 4, which is on page 7, in which the President is given the authority.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman know whether there is going to be any attempt to cut off debate?

Mr. PATMAN. I think there has not been any attempt so far. I think eventually there should be.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I know you are a great prophet, maybe you could tell us.

Mr. PATMAN. I am no prophet. I am willing to accept the prophecies of the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, the only place where the President comes into action is not to make this unlawful—not to freeze wages—not to freeze prices—because the law itself will freeze them—but the President is authorized to create in the Executive Office of the President an office of inflation control. He is authorized under this Act to set up the agency to administer these provisions which are made unlawful under this act.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course the gentleman will agree with me, I am sure, because he is always fair, that if this proposal should be adopted and should become the law, there still would be required affirmative action by the President to make the provisions of the Act effective.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not agree. Respectfully I disagree with the gentleman. I want to tell him the reason why because I have some good reasons. Turn to page 9 of this bill, the Kunkel amendment, and the bill itself makes it unlawful. What? Wages and prices and everything except retail prices. This is an immediate freeze. If the President did not carry that out, he would be violating his oath of office. He would carry it out. How? Since there is an immediate freeze, they would turn back to this other part of the Kunkel bill and create this office of inflation control. He would have to do it.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. As a matter of fact, on page 14, section 206, the language is:

Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator, such action is necessary or proper in order to effect the purposes of this title, he shall, by regulation or order, establish such ceiling.

In other words, I am sure the gentleman——

Mr. PATMAN. You are reading from what?

Mr. HALLECK. It is the language included in the amendment. Now, the gentleman should understand there are two terms that have been used that are important in this consideration. One of them is "stand-by" and the other is "flexible." This is stand-by, and, by and large, the other proposals that have been offered are stand-by. Apparently the gentleman is arguing for complete flexibility, which I call a blank-check authorization to the President, with no criteria created by the Congress at all. This proposal does set standards. It does undertake to provide the manner in which controls shall be applied, if they are voted by the Congress. Personally, I subscribe to that approach rather than the blank-check approach.

Mr. PATMAN. In closing I insist that this is a definite and immediate freeze of all prices and all wages.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has had three extensions. Can you finish in this minute, if not interrupted?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, I hate to make any commitments.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. In the case of the General Motors contract, the wage earners have an increase in pay when the cost of living increases. This would freeze it where they could not possibly get that increase. There are hundreds of those contracts in this country. We would not know what we are doing under this Kunkel proposal. The Kunkel proposal day before yesterday is not the one we had yesterday, and the Kunkel proposal today is different from either one of them. So we would not know what we were doing. So let us vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEANE as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL: Insert the following:

"That this act, divided into titles, may be cited as the 'Defense Production Act of 1950.'

"TABLE OF CONTENTS

"Title I. Priorities and allocations.
"Title II. Authority to requisition.
"Title III. Expansion of productive capacity and supply.
"Title IV. Control of credit.
"Title V. Prices and wages.
"Title VI. General provisions.

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 2. It is the policy of the United States to oppose acts of aggression and to promote peace by insuring respect for world law and the peaceful settlement of differences among nations. To that end this Government is pledged to support collective action through the United Nations and through regional arrangements for mutual defense in conformity with the Charter of the United Nations. The United States is determined to develop and maintain whatever military and economic strength is found to be necessary to carry out this purpose. Under present circumstances, this task requires diversion of certain materials and facilities from civilian use to military and related purposes. It requires expansion of productive facilities beyond the levels needed to meet the civilian demands. In order that this diversion and expansion may proceed at once, and that the national economy may be maintained with the maximum effectiveness and the least hardship, normal civilian production, and purchases must be curtailed and redirected.

"It is the purpose of title V to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases in prices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities caused by the efforts of the United States in support of collective action to oppose aggression and promote peace.

"It is the objective of this act to provide the President with authority to accomplish these adjustments in the operation of the economy. It is the intention of the Congress that the President shall use the powers conferred by this act to promote the national defense, by meeting, promptly and effectively, the requirements of military and other programs in support of our national security and foreign policy objectives, and by preventing undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of materials for civilian use.

"TITLE I—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATIONS

"SEC. 101. The President is hereby authorized (1) to require that performance under contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense shall take priority over performance under any other contract or order, and, for the purpose of assuring such priority, to require acceptance and performance of such contracts or orders by any person he finds to be capable of their performance, and (2) to allocate materials and facilities in such manner, upon such conditions, and to such extent as he shall deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

"SEC. 102. Any person who willfully performs any act prohibited, or willfully fails to perform any act required, by the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for more than 1 year, or both.

"TITLE II—AUTHORITY TO REQUISITION

"SEC. 201. Whenever the President determines (1) that the use of any equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment, supplies, or component parts, is needed for the national defense, (2) that such need is immediate and impending and such as will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply, and (3) that he has been unable to acquire such property or the use thereof, as the case may be, on fair and reasonable terms, he is authorized to requisition such property or the use thereof for the defense of the United States upon the payment of just compensation for such property or the use thereof to be determined as hereinafter provided. The President shall determine the amount of the compensation to be paid for any property or the use thereof requisitioned pursuant to this title but each such determination shall be made as of the time it is requisitioned in accordance with the provision for just compensation in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. If the person entitled to receive the amount so determined by the President as just compensation is unwilling to accept the same as full and complete compensation for such property or the use thereof, he shall promptly be paid 75 percent of such amount and shall be entitled to recover from the United States, in an action brought in the Court of Claims or, where the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, in any district court of the United States within 3 years after the date of the President's award, an additional amount which, when added to the amount so paid to him, shall be just compensation. Whenever the need for the national defense of any property requisitioned under this title shall terminate, the President may dispose of such property on such terms and conditions as he shall deem appropriate, but to the extent feasible and practicable he shall give the former owner of any property so disposed of an opportunity to reacquire it (1) at its then fair value as determined by the President, or (2) if it is to be disposed of (otherwise than at a public sale of which he is given reasonable notice) at less than such value, at the highest price any other person is willing to pay therefor: Provided, That this opportunity to reacquire need not be given in the case of fungibles or items having a fair value of less than $1,000.

"TITLE III—EXPANSION OF PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND SUPPLY

"SEC. 301. (a) In order to expedite production and deliveries under Government contracts, the President may authorize, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Department of the Army, the Department of the Navy, the Department of the Air Force, the Department of Commerce, and such other agencies of the United States engaged in procurement as he may designate (hereinafter referred to as 'guaranteeing agencies'), without regard to provisions of law relating to the making, performance, amendment, or modification of contracts, to guarantee in whole or in part any public or private financing institution (including any Federal Reserve bank), by commitment to purchase, agreement to share losses, or otherwise, against loss of principal or interest on any loan, discount or advance, or on any commitment in connection therewith, which may be made by such financing institution for the purpose of financing any contractor, subcontractor, or other person in connection with the performance, or in connection with or in contemplation of the termination, of any contract or other operation deemed by the guaranteeing agency to be related to efforts or undertakings on the part of the United States or an agency thereof which are designed to meet the necessities of the national defense.

"(b) Any Federal agency or any Federal Reserve bank, when designated by the President, is hereby authorized to act, on behalf of any guaranteeing agency, as fiscal agent of the United States in the making of such contracts of guarantee and in otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. All such funds as may be necessary to enable any such fiscal agent to carry out any guaranty made by it on behalf of any guaranteeing agency shall be supplied and disbursed by or under authority from such guaranteeing agency. No such fiscal agent shall have any responsibility or accountability except as agent in taking any action pursuant to or under authority of the provisions of this section. Each such fiscal agent shall be reimbursed by each guaranteeing agency for all expenses and losses incurred by such fiscal agent in acting as agent on behalf of such guaranteeing agency, including among such expenses, notwithstanding any other provision of law, attorneys' fees and expenses of litigation.

"(c) All actions and operations of such fiscal agents, under authority of or pursuant to this section shall be subject to the supervision of the President and to such regulations, as he may prescribe; and the President is authorized to prescribe, either specifically or by maximum limits or otherwise, rates of interest, guarantee and commitment fees, and other charges which may be made in connection with loans, discounts, advances, or commitments guaranteed by the guaranteeing agencies through such fiscal agents, and to prescribe regulations governing the forms and procedures (which shall be uniform to the extent practicable) to be utilized in connection with such guarantees.

"(d) Each guaranteeing agency is hereby authorized to use for the purposes of this section any funds which have heretofore been appropriated or allocated or which hereafter may be appropriated or allocated to it, or which are or may become available to it, for such purposes or for the purpose of meeting the necessities of the national defense.

"SEC. 302. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for loans (including participations in, or guarantees of, loans) to private business enterprises for the expansion of capacity, the development of technological processes, or the production of essential materials. Such loans may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law and on such terms and conditions as the President deems necessary, except that financial assistance may be extended only to the extent that it is not otherwise available on reasonable terms.

"SEC. 303. (a) To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may make provision for purchases of or commitments to purchase metals, minerals, and other raw materials, including liquid fuels, for Government use or for resale.

"(b) Purchases and commitments to purchase and sales under subsection (a) may be made without regard to the limitations of existing law, for such quantities, and on such terms and conditions, including advance payments, and for such periods, as the President deems necessary, except that purchases or commitments to purchase involving higher than currently prevailing market prices or anticipated loss on resale shall not be made unless it is determined that supply of the materials could not be effectively increased at lower prices or on terms more favorable to the Government, or that such purchases are necessary to assure the availability to the United States of overseas supplies.

"(c) The procurement power granted to the President by this section shall include the power to transport and store, and have processed and refined any materials procured under this section.

"SEC. 304. (a) For the purposes of sections 302 and 303, the President is hereby authorized to utilize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and such other departments, agencies, officials, or corporations of the Government as he may deem appropriate, or to create new corporations.

"(b) Any corporation created under this section—

"(1) shall have the power to sue and be sued; to acquire, hold, and dispose of property; to use its revenues; to determine the character of and necessity for its obligations and expenditures and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, paid, and accounted for subject to laws specifically applicable to Government corporations; and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of such corporation;

"(2) shall have its powers set out in a charter, which shall be published in the Federal Register, and all amendments to which shall be similarly published;

"(3) shall not have succession beyond June 30, 1952, except for purposes of liquidation, unless its life is extended beyond such date pursuant to act of Congress; and

"(4) shall be subject to the Government Corporation Control Act to the same extent as wholly owned Government corporations listed in section 101 of said act.

"(c) Any corporation established or utilized pursuant to this section is authorized to borrow from the Treasury of the United States, for any of the purposes of the corporation, such sums of money as may be necessary to carry out its functions under this title: Provided, That the total amount borrowed under the provisions of this section by all such corporations shall not exceed an aggregate of $2,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time. For the purpose of borrowing as authorized by this paragraph, any corporation established pursuant to this section may issue to the Secretary of the Treasury its notes, debentures, bonds, or other obligations to be redeemable at the option of the corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations. Such obligations may mature subsequent to the period of succession of the corporation. Such obligations shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average rate on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the issuance of the obligations of the corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase any obligations of any such corporation to be issued hereunder and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the obligations of any corporation hereunder.

"TITLE IV—CONTROL OF CREDIT

"SUBTITLE A—CONSUMER AND REAL ESTATE CREDIT

"SEC. 401. (a) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this act, the President is authorized from time to time to prescribe regulations with respect to such kind or kinds of consumer and real estate credit which thereafter may be extended as, in his judgment, it is necessary to regulate in order to prevent or reduce excessive or untimely use of or fluctuations in such credit. Such regulations may, among other things, prescribe maximum loan or credit values, minimum down payments in cash or property, trade-in or exchange values, maximum maturities, maximum amounts of credit, rules regarding the amount, form and time of various payments, rules against any credit in specified circumstances, rules regarding consolidations, renewals, revisions, transfers, or assignments of credit, and rules regarding other similar or related matters. Such regulations may classify persons and transactions and may apply different requirements thereto, and may include such administrative provisions as in the judgment of the President are reasonably necessary in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle or to prevent evasions thereof.

"In prescribing and suspending such regulations, including changes from time to time to take account of changing conditions, the President shall consider among other factors, (1) the level and trend of consumer and real estate credit and the various kinds thereof, (2) the effect of the use of such credit upon (i) purchasing power and (ii) demand for real property and improvements thereon and for other goods and services, and (3) the need in the national economy for the maintenance of sound credit conditions.

"(b) No person shall extend or maintain any credit, or renew, revise, consolidate, refinance, purchase, sell, discount, or lend or borrow on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arrange for any of the foregoing, in contravention of any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this section. Any person who extends or maintains any credit, or renews, revises, consolidates, refinances, purchases, sells, discounts, or lends or borrows on, any obligation arising out of any credit, or arranges for any of the foregoing, shall make, keep, and preserve for such periods, such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the President may by regulation require as necessary or appropriate in order to effectuate the purposes of this subtitle; and such accounts, correspondence, memoranda, papers, books, and other records shall be subject at any time to such reasonable periodic, special, or other examinations by examiners or other representatives of the President as the President may deem necessary or appropriate. The requirements of this section apply whether a person is acting as principal, agent, broker, vendor, or otherwise.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this subtitle or any regulation or order thereunder, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

"(d) To assist in carrying out the purposes of this subtitle, the President by regulation may require transactions or persons or classes thereof subject to this subtitle to be registered or licensed; and, after notice and opportunity for hearing, the President by order may suspend any such registration or license for violation of this subtitle or any regulation prescribed by the President pursuant to this subtitle. The provisions of section 25 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, as amended, shall apply in the case of any such order of the President in the same manner that such provisions apply in the case of orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission under that act. In carrying out this subtitle, the President may act through and may utilize the services of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and any other agencies, Federal or State, which are available and appropriate.

"(e) Any restrictions for real estate credit for home construction shall not restrict loans made by private lenders to any percentage of value or maturity less than the maximum authorized for any loans authorized to be made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government or any Government-owned agency or instrumentality, nor shall any restriction otherwise discriminate in favor of Government loans or Government insured or guaranteed loans against private loans for home construction.

"(f) For the purposes of this subtitle, unless the context otherwise requires, the following terms shall have the following meanings, but the President may in his regulations further define such terms and, in addition, may define technical, trade, and accounting terms, insofar as any such definitions are not inconsistent with the provisions of this subtitle:

"(1) 'Consumer credit' means credit which the obligor undertakes to pay in two or more payments, or any other credit: Provided, That it shall not include (i) any credit to finance or refinance the construction or purchase of an entire residential or nonresidential building, (ii) any credit extended to a business enterprise solely to finance the purchase of goods for resale, or (iii) any other credit extended to a business or agricultural enterprise for any business or agricultural purpose unless the credit is secured by or is for the purpose of purchasing or carrying any durable or semidurable goods which are used or usable for personal, family, or household purposes, or any accessory, insurance, or service connected with any suech goods or any interest therein.

"(2) 'Real estate credit' means credit secured, either wholly or partly, by real property; credit for the purpose of purchasing or carrying real property or constucting buildings or otherwise improving real property; and credit involving a right to acquire or use real property. As used in this paragraph the term 'real property' includes leasehold and other interests therein.

"(3) 'Credit' means any loan, advance, or discount; any conditional sale contract; any contract to sell or sale or contract of sale, of property or services, either for present or future delivery, under which part or all of the price is payable subsequent to the making of such sale or contract; any rental-purchase contract, or any contract for the bailment, leasing, or other use of property under which the bailee, lessee, or user has the option of becoming the owner thereof, obligates himself to pay as compensation a sum substantially equivalent to or in excess of the value thereof, or has the right to have all or part of the payments required by such contract applied to the purchase price of such property or similar property; any option, demand, lien, pledge, or similar claim against, or for the delivery of property or money; and purchase, discount, or other acquisition of, or any credit under the security of, any obligation or claim arising out of any of the foregoing; and any transaction or series of transactions having a similar purpose or effect.

"(4) 'Person,' in addition to the definition given it by section 602 (a) of this act, includes the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, and any agency or instrumentality of one or more such authorities, except that the criminal penalties of this subtitle shall not be applicable to the United States, any State, or other governmental agency or instrumentality.

"SEC. 402. To assist in carrying out the objectives of this act, the President may, at any time or times, notwithstanding any other provision of law, reduce, for such period as he shall specify, the maximum authorized principal amounts, ratios of loan to value or cost, or maximum maturities of any type or types of loans on real estate which thereafter may be made, insured, or guaranteed by any department, independent establishment, or agency in the executive branch of the United States, or by any wholly owned Government corporation or by any mixed-ownership Government corporation as defined in the Government Corporation Control Act, as amended, or reduce or suspend any such authorized loan program, upon a determination, after taking into consideration the effect thereof upon conditions in the building industry and upon the national economy and the needs for increased defense production, that such action is necessary in the public interest: Provided, That in the exercise of these powers, the President shall give consideration to the preservation of such relative credit preferences as are accorded to veterans of World War II under existing law.

"TITLE V—PRICES AND WAGES

"NOTICE OF INTENDED PRICE INCREASES

"SEC. 501. The President may by regulation or order require sellers of any commodity which significantly affects the cost of living, the costs of industrial or agricultural production or of construction, or the costs of national defense or foreign aid to give up to 60 days' notice to the President prior to the effective date of any intended price increase with respect to any such commodity. After the issuance of any such regulation or order, no price increase shall become effective for the specified commodity without the giving of notice required by the regulation or order and until the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice. The President may require any seller who has filed such a notice to appear at a public hearing with respect to the justification for such price increase. At the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice, the price increase may become effective, unless prior thereto a maximum price for such commodity is established pursuant to this title. If a maximum price is not so established prior to the expiration of the period required to be specified in the notice, that fact shall not preclude the establishment at a later date of a maximum price for such commodity in accordance with this title.

"CONDITIONS FOR ESTABLISHING MAXIMUM PRICES

"SEC. 502. The authority granted by this title to establish maximum prices for a commodity shall not be exercised unless it is determined by the President that—

"(1) the price or prices of such commodity have risen or threatened to rise at any time after June 1950 to such an extent as to effect significantly the cost of living, the costs of industrial or agricultural production, or of construction, or the costs of national defense or foreign aid;

"(2) other measures available under this act would not promptly and effectively deal with the rise or threatened rise in prices in a manner consistent with the purposes of this act;

"(3) the proposed action will help to carry out the objectives of this act as stated in section 2.

"DECONTROL

"SEC. 503. Whenever any authority is exercised under this title, the President shall periodically review the conditions of its exercise for the purpose of assuring the removal of such control at the earliest practicable date and, to the extent that he determines that the continued exercise of such authority is no longer necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act, he shall immediately rescind such controls.

"STANDARDS FOR ESTABLISHING AND ADJUSTING MAXIMUM PRICES

"SEC. 504. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President the conditions set forth in section 502 for the establishment of maximum prices for a commodity have been satisfied, the President may by regulation or order establish such maximum prices for the commodity as, in his judgment, will be generally fair and equitable and will aid in effectuating the purposes of this act. In establishing any such maximum price, the President (1) shall, so far as practicable, ascertain and give due consideration to the prices generally prevailing between May 24, 1950, and June 24, 1950 (or if, in the case of any commodity, the prevailing prices in that period are not generally representative because of abnormal or seasonal market conditions, or other cause, then to the prices prevailing during the nearest period in which, in the judgment of the President, the prices for such commodity are generally representative for such commodity) and shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine and deem to be of general applicability; and (2) may consider, among other factors which he deems relevant, speculative fluctuations, unusual price relationships, and the level of costs of production, distribution and transportation: Provided, That no such regulation or order shall contain any provisions requiring the determination of costs otherwise than in accordance with established accounting methods.

"(b) Before issuing any regulation or order under the foregoing provisions of this section, the President shall, so far as practicable and appropriate, advise and consult with persons who, in his judgment, are representative of the industry which will be subject to such regulation or order, and shall give consideration to their recommendations. In the case of any commodity for which a maximum price has been established, the President shall, at the request of any substantial portion of the industry subject to such maximum price, regulation, or order, appoint an industry advisory committee, or committees, either national or regional or both, consisting of such number of representatives of the industry as in his judgment may be necessary in order to constitute a committee truly representative of the industry, or of the industry in such region, as the case may be. The President shall from time to time advise and consult with the committee with respect to the regulation or order, and with respect to the form thereof, and classifications, differentiations, and adjustments therein, and shall consider any recommendations that the committee may submit.

"(c) After the issuance of any regulation or order establishing a maximum price under subsection (a), the President may on his own initiative or at the request of the industry advisory committee, establish under subsection (b), review and, when he deems necessary, revise the maximum price or prices established by such regulation or order. In making such review the President shall consider, among other factors which he deems relevant, changes in the costs of production, distribution, and transportation since the establishment of the maximum price, and the level of profits earned by sellers of the commodity or commodities.

"(e) Every general regulation issued under the foregoing provisions of this section establishing a maximum price or prices for commodity shall be accompanied by a statement of the considerations involved in the issuance of such regulation. This requirement shall not aply to modifications of any such previous regulation where the President determined that justification for such modification is adequately covered by previously published statements of consideration.

"(e) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, he may, without regard to the foregoing provisions of this section, issue temporary regulations or orders establishing as a maximum price or maximum prices the price or prices prevailing with respect to any commodity or commodities during such period subsequent to June 1, 1950, as the President shall specify; but any such temporary regulation or order shall be effective for not more than 90 days, and may be replaced by a regulation or order issued under the foregoing provisions of this section.

"(f) The President shall make an adjustment for hardship to a seller caused by a maximum price established under this section, if in the judgment of the President such adjustment is necessary to prevent gross inequities and can be made without impairing compliance with the provisions of this title and the effectiveness of the regulation.

"(g) Whenever in the judgment of the President such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this title, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit manipulative practices (including practices relating to changes in form or quality) or hoarding, in connection with any commodity, which in his judgment are equivalent to, or are likely to result in, price increases inconsistent with the purposes of this title.

"AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

"SEC. 505. (a) No maximum price shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such commodity the parity price, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, or, in case a comparable price has been determined for such commodity under subsection (b), such comparable price for such commodity (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no maximum price shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to the producers of such agricultural commodity a price therefor equal to the parity price or comparable price, as so determined.

"(b) For purposes of this title, in the case of any agricultural commodity other than the basic crops—corn, wheat, cotton, rice, tobacco, and peanuts—the Secretary shall determine and publish a comparable price whenever he finds, after investigation and public hearing, that the production and consumption of such commodity has so changed in extent or character since the parity base period as to result in a price, out of line with parity prices for basic commodities: Provided, That comparable prices heretofore determined by the Secretary may be used for the purposes of this title.

"(c) Whenever a maximum price has been established, under this title or otherwise, with respect to any fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable, the President from time to time shall adjust such maximum price in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in cost of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such commodity.

"(d) Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provisions thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act.

"SEC. 506. (a) Whenever a maximum price is established under this title with respect to any commodity ceilings with respect to the salaries, wages, or other compensation of individuals engaged in producing the commodity shall be established at the same time.

"(b) The provisions of this title shall apply with respect to ceilings established under this section in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply with respect to maximum prices established under section 504.

"ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 507. (a) The protest procedure set forth in section 203 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable to this title, except that protests may be filed only within a period of 60 days after the issuance of the protested regulation or order, or, if such protest is based solely on grounds arising after the issuance of such regulation or order, within a period of 60 days after such grounds arise.

"(b) The Emergency Court of Appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of review of proceedings under section 507 (a) of this act, and for those purposes the provisions of section 204 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be applicable.

"(c) The enforcement provisions of section 205 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, with the exceptions of subsections (b), (f), and (g) thereof, shall be applicable to this title.

"(d) (1) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, lease, or other obligation heretofore or hereafter entered into, for any person to sell or deliver any commodity, or in the course of trade or business to buy or receive any commodity, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act in violation of any regulation or order under this title, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"(2) It shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States or for any adviser or consultant to the President (or to any department or agency to which functions under this title may be delegated) to disclose, otherwise than in the course of official duty, any information obtained under this title or to use any such information for personal benefit.

"(3) Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any commodity.

"(e) The President from time to time, but not less frequently than once every 90 days, shall transmit to the Congress a report of operations under this title. If the Senate or the House of Representatives is not in session, such reports shall be transmitted to the Secretary of the Senate, or the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as the case may be.

"(f) The provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, which are incorporated by reference in section 507 (a), (b), and (c), shall be applied to this title with such changes in designation of provisions as may be appropriate. Reference in these incorporated provisions to the Administrator shall be deemed to refer to the President (or to any department or agency to which functions under this title may be delegated). Reference in those incorporated provisions to a regulation or order issued under section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be deemed to refer to a regulation or order issued under section 504 of this act. Reference in those incorporated provisions to the violation of section 4 of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, shall be deemed to refer to the violation of section 407 (d) of this act.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 508. As used in this title—

"(a) The term 'sale' includes sales, dispositions, exchanges, leases, and other transfers, and contracts and offers to do any of the foregoing. The term 'sell', 'selling', 'seller', 'buy', and 'buyer' shall be construed accordingly.

"(b) The term 'price' means the consideration demanded or received in connection with the sale of a commodity.

"(c) The term 'commodity' means commodities, articles, products, and materials (except materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap), and it also includes services rendered otherwise than as an employee in connection with the processing, distribution, storage, installation, repair, or negotiation of purchases or sales of a commodity, or in connection with the operation of any service establishment for the servicing of a commodity: Provided, That nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) compensation paid by an employer to any of his employees, except as provided in section 506, or (2) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (4) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio-broadcasting station, a motion picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor-advertising facilities, or (5) rates charged for any professional services.

"(d) The term 'maximum price', as applied to prices of commodities, means the maximum lawful price for such commodities. Maximum prices may be formulated in terms of prices, margins, commissions, fees, and other charges and allowances.

"TITLE VI—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 601. (a) It is the sense of the Congress that small-business enterprises be encouraged to make the greatest possible contribution toward achieving the objectives of this act.

"(b) In order to carry out this policy—

"(i) the President shall provide small-business enterprises with full information concerning the provisions of this act relating to, or of benefit to, such enterprises and concerning the activities of the various departments and agencies under this act;

"(ii) such business advisory committees shall be appointed as shall be appropriate for purposes of consultation in the formulation of rules, regulations or orders, or amendments thereto, issued under authority of this act, and in their formation consideration shall be given to providing fair representation for small, medium, and large business enterprises, for different geographical areas, for trade association members and nonmembers, and for different segments of the industry;

"(iii) in administering this act, such exemptions shall be provided for small-business enterprises as may be feasible without impeding the accomplishment of the objectives of this act; and

"(iv) in administering this act, special provision shall be made for the expeditious handling of all requests, applications, or appeals from small-business enterprises.

"SEC. 602. As used in this act—

"(a) The word "person" shall include individuals, firms, corporations, associations, partnerships, and any organized groups of persons whether or not incorporated.

"(b) The word "materials" shall include raw materials, articles, commodities, products, supplies, components, technical information, and processes.

"SEC. 603. The President may delegate any power or authority conferred upon him by this act to any officer or agency of the Government and may authorize such redelegations by that officer or agency as the President may deem appropriate. Any officer or agency may employ civilian personnel for duty in the United States, including the District of Columbia, or elsewhere, without regard to section 14 of the Federal Employees Pay Act of 1946 (60 Stat. 219), as the President deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 604. The President may make such rules, regulations, and orders as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the provisions of this act. Any regulation or order under this act may contain such classifications and differentiations and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions as in the judgment of the President are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 605. (a) The President shall be entitled, while this act is in effect and for a period of 2 years thereafter, by regulation, subpena, or otherwise, to obtain such information from, require such reports and the keeping of such records by, make such inspection of the books, records, and other writings, premises or property of, and take the sworn testimony of, any person as may be necessary or appropriate, in his discretion, to the enforcement or the administration of this act and the regulations or orders issued thereunder. The President shall issue regulations insuring that the authority of this subsection will be utilized only after the scope and purpose of the investigation, inspection, or inquiry to be made have been defined by competent authority.

"(b) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section or from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena before any grand jury or in any court or administrative proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture in any court, for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is so compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such natural person so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying: Provided, That the immunity granted herein from prosecution and punishment and from any penalty or forfeiture shall not be construed to vest in any individual any right to priorities assistance, to the allocation of materials, or to any other benefit which is within the power of the President to grant under any provision of this act.

"(c) The production of a person's books, records, or other documentary evidence shall not be required at any place other than the place where such person usually keeps them, if, prior to the return date specified in the regulations, subpena, or other document issued with respect thereto, such person furnishes the President with a true copy of such books, records, or other documentary evidence (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or enters into a stipulation with the President as to the information contained in such books, records, or other documentary evidence. Witnesses shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(d) Information obtained under this section which the President deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information shall not be published or disclosed unless the President determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the interest of the national defense, and any person willfully violating this provision shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 606. The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject ot the jurisdiction of the United States shall have jurisdiction of violations of this title or title I, II, III, or IV or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder, and of all civil actions under such titles to enforce any liability or duty created by, or to enjoin any violation of, such titles or any rule, regulation, order, or subpena thereunder. Any criminal proceeding on account of any such violation may be brought in any district in which any act, failure to act, or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any such civil action may be brought in any such district or in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business. Process in such cases, criminal or civil, may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found; the subpena for witnesses who are required to attend a court in any district in such case may run into any other district. The termination of the authority granted in any title or section of this act, or of any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, shall not operate to defeat any suit, action, or prosecution, whether theretofore or thereafter commenced, with respect to any right, liability, or offense incurred or committed prior to the termination date of such title or of such rule, regulation, or order. No costs shall be assessed against the United States in any proceeding under this act.

"SEC. 607. No person shall be held liable for damages or penalties for any act or failure to act resulting directly or indirectly from his compliance with a role, regulation, or order issued pursuant to title I of this act, notwithstanding that any such rule, regulation, or order shall thereafter be declared by judicial or other competent authority to be invalid. No person shall discriminate against orders or contracts to which priority is assigned or for which materials or facilities are allocated under title I of this act or under any rule, regulation, or order issued thereunder, by charging higher prices or by imposing different terms and conditions for such orders or contracts than for other generally comparable orders or contracts, or in any other manner.

"SEC. 608. (a) No act or omission to act which occurs while this act is in effect, if requested by the President and found by him to be in the public interest as contributing to the national defense, shall be construed to be within the prohibitions of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act of the United States. A copy of each such request intended to be within the coverage of this section, and any modification or withdrawal thereof, shall be furnished to the Attorney General when made, and it shall be published in the Federal Register unless publication thereof would, in the opinion of the President, endanger the national security.

"(b) The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be delegated except to a single official of the Government and then only upon the condition that such official consult with the Attorney General not less than 10 days before making any request or finding thereunder.

"(c) Upon withdrawal of any request or finding made hereunder the provisions of this section shall not apply to any subsequent act or omission to act by reason of such finding or request.

"SEC. 609. The functions exercised under this act shall be excluded from the operation of the Administrative Procedure Act (60 Stat. 237) except as to the requirements of section 3 thereof.

"SEC. 610. (a) The President, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, is authorized to place positions and employ persons in grades 16, 17, and 18 of the General Schedule established by the Classification Act of 1949, and such positions shall be addtiional to the number authorized by section 505 of that act.

"(b) The President is further authorized, to the extent he deems it necessary and appropriate in order to carry out the provisions of this act, and subject to such regulations as he may issue, to employ persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation; and he is authorized to provide by regulation for the exemption of such persons from the operation of sections 281, 283, 284, 434, and 1914 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 190 of the Revised Statutes (5 U. S. C., sec. 99). Persons appointed under the authority of this subsection may be allowed transportation and not to exceed $15 per diem in lieu of subsistence while away from their homes or regular places of business pursuant to such appointment.

"SEC. 611. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary and appropriate for the carrying out of the provisions and purposes of this act by the President and such agencies as he may designate or create. Funds made available for the purposes of this act may be allocated or transferred for any of the purposes of this act, with the approval of the Bureau of the Budget, to any agency designated to assist in carrying out this act. Funds so allocated or transferred shall remain available for such period as may be specified in the acts making such funds available.

"SEC. 612. Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 507 (d) of this act and any person who makes any statement or entry, false in any material respect, in any document or report required to be kept or filed under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this section, he shall refer the matter to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"SEC. 613. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 614. This act and all authority conferred hereunder shall terminate June 30, 1952, or at such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation may designate."

Mr. FULTON (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FULTON. Is the amendment being read any different from the original Deane bill, H. R. 9280? If so, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that the gentleman from North Carolina explain the difference to us.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Kunkel amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 2:30.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is not in order at this time; the reading of the amendment has not been completed.

The Clerk continued the reading of the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with, with the exception of the section relating to wages.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the section on wages is entirely new. I am willing to consent to dispense with the reading of the bill as printed, except as to the paragraph on wages.

Mr. SPENCE. I included that in my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I trust you will bear patiently with me as I try, if I can, to describe this particular amendment I am offering to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]. May I say that I appreciate very much the faithful and tireless efforts the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made in presenting his amendment. I joined with him in committee in voting for consideration of an amendment to the committee bill that would provide price and wage controls, not because I thought it was perfect but I felt our committee should have an opportunity to go into rather exhaustive and full hearings on such an amendment.

I believe that the amendment I am offering is more or less a middle-ground procedure as compared with the very broad bill that was offered as a committee print yesterday morning and defeated this morning and the Kunkel amendment now pending.

My amendment is the only one that provides for any public hearings to determine whether a commodity should have a maximum price.

If you have before you the bill H. R. 9280 I hope you will follow me as I attempt to describe the provisions of my amendment.

As I attempted to study the provisions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], I am inclined to share with my colleagues the feeling it is mandatory and likewise the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I understand it, sets up another OPA. My amendment will not do that. It is discretionary with the President to designate an existing agency, or he may set up an Office of Price Administration or any other agency that will take charge of this particular legislation.

Section 501 reads:

The President may by regulation or order require sellers of any commodity which significantly affects the cost of living, the costs of industrial or agricultural production or of construction, or the costs of national defense or foreign aid to give up to 60 days' notice to the President prior to the effective date of any intended price increase with respect to any such commodity.

After that hearing and in connection with the hearing the prices that are established will be the prices generally prevailing between May 24, 1950, and June 24, 1950.

There is no rationing in my amendment because, frankly, at this time I do not believe rationing is warranted. However, if this particular amendment of mine is adopted, I certainly would accept an amendment for rationing if that is the will of the House.

Before proceeding, let me direct attention to section 503. My amendment is the only one that expressly sets forth that decontrol shall be considered.

The President shall periodically review the conditions of its exercise for the purpose of assuring the removal of such control at the earliest practicable date.

The period for my bill shall terminate on June 30, 1952. The House on yesterday limited it to a period in March, I believe, of next year. Frankly, it seems to me if we limit it to only a period of 7 months, we might just as well have no legislation at all because it will take 2 or 3 months within which to set up any kind of a price- or wage-control procedure.

I would like to emphasize the fact that the amendment that I am offering is not in any case mandatory. After the hearings and maximum prices are established, wages are invoked. I direct your attention to section 506. I read:

Whenever a maximum price is established under this title with respect to any commodity, ceilings with respect to the salaries, wages, or other compensation of individuals engaged in producing the commodity, shall be established at the same time. The provisions of this act shall apply with respect to ceilings established under this section in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions apply with respect to maximum prices established under section 504.

Thus prices and wages are tied together.

I point out also if labor and management have agreed through agreements that wages shall be determined by agreements previously entered into, then such wage adjustments are protected.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Might I ask the gentleman whether title 4 of his original bill, control of credit and commodity speculation, subtitle (a), consumer and retail credit, or subsection (b), which is the commodity speculation provision, are each left out?

Mr. DEANE. If I may, I will state to the gentleman that my amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is limited to title 5. It has nothing to do whatsoever with the commodity exchanges. That provision in the bill comes under another title.

Mr. FULTON. In the present status of the parliamentary situation, title 4 is not in then either the Kunkel amendment or the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. DEANE. It is not in mine. I cannot answer for the gentleman from Pennsylvania. But, I think the gentleman is stating the facts correctly.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask one further question? On the control of newspapers, books, and periodicals, does the gentleman in his amendment have any provision like the one the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] and I sponsored yesterday, and which was adopted, containing the broad exemption for those items?

Mr. DEANE. I will say to the gentleman that that is not included in my particular amendment because I did not have the time to put it into the amendment in an orderly way. I shall be very glad, of course, to accept it if my amendment is adopted.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has contended that the Kunkel amendment makes immediate price control and wage control mandatory. While I differ somewhat with the gentleman's analysis of the Kunkel bill, I am very much concerned with the delay which seems to be envisioned in the gentleman's bill in sections 501 and 502 about setting up price and wage controls. We are confronted with a pretty serious situation here.

Mr. DEANE. I agree perfectly with the gentleman, but I was advising with my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CHATHAM], a moment ago, involving certain commodities, which even this particular 60 days' notice might not be sufficient time within which to set up the correct price.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand from the gentleman's bill that no price or wage control could be set up at all within the next 60-day period?

Mr. DEANE. That is true, but when they are set up the prices that are determined would be those particular prices prevailing during the period from May 24 to June 24, 1950.

Mr. KEATING. In other words, we would be confronted with a situation some 60 or more days hence where a freeze would be instituted extending back to the base period here. Is that correct?

Mr. DEANE. That is correct.

Mr. KEATING. Does not the gentleman feel that if we are going to freeze the sooner we do it the better, and that as envisioned in the Kunkel amendment to do it now or in the very near future would be preferable from the point of view of the economic stability of this country to delaying that action more than 60 days hence?

Mr. DEANE. That is a matter that concerns me likewise. At the same time, as we deal with this particular measure it seems to me it is going to be completely impossible to set something immediately in motion when you think of the great mass of our economy and the commodities involved.

Mr. CARROLL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CARROLL. I think the gentleman's way of handling this is the American way. You have 3,000,000 business and about 8,000,000 commodities. It needs consideration. As the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] said the other day, in our desire to move expeditiously we must not work great hardship on a large number of business people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Kunkel amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 2 o'clock. This will not preclude the offering of amendments, it merely would conclude debate at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KUNKEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the chairman suggested that all debate close at 2:30. I wonder why he has shortened the time a half an hour, when there are so many gentlemen on their feet who want to speak.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Kunkel amendment and all amendments thereto conclude at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FULTON. How many amendments are at the desk?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments to the Kunkel amendment.

The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. MORTON. According to the new language which the Clerk read and which you just reread, do I understand this to be the situation? If a commodity is frozen in price and the ceiling is placed on the price, then the wages of those who are producing that commodity are subject to restraint?

Mr. DEANE. That is right.

Mr. MORTON. Obviously that will not work. If we put steel under a ceiling, the men in the steel mills get their wages frozen. But they are not buying steel, they are buying groceries. I do not see how we can possibly do that.

Mr. DEANE. It is reasonable to assume that when the President exerts his authority with respect to one commodity which affects another commodity, both commodities would be under control.

Mr. MORTON. I cannot see how the price of steel would have very much to do with the price of a loaf of bread. But if you put steel, which is in very short supply, under a ceiling, then we would freeze the wages in that great steel industry and the price of bread goes up 3 cents a loaf. Certainly we cannot pass that kind of legislation.

Mr. DEANE. I would remind the gentleman that under the provisions for hearings as outlined in the bill I am satisfied that in the setting up of industry groups to determine what would be the maximum price that a fair adjudication would result.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I believe the observation made by the gentleman from Kentucky brought it out very clearly that this strictly contemplates selective price controls on various individual commodities from time to time and on other commodities at other times under the jurisdiction and discretion of the President or his administrator.

There is no thought of any general freeze or any general stabilization of the price level in order to protect our existing economy.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. With reference to section 505 relating to agricultural commodities the provisions as I read them say that no maximum price shall be established below a price that will reflect the parity price or a comparable price. However, there is nothing in this provision which deals with the price of commodities which are above parity prices at the present time. Other bills that we have considered have provided an alternative, that the price should not be below the price during the base period.

Does the gentleman's bill have any similar provision so far as agricultural commodities are concerned?

Mr. DEANE. The observation made by the gentleman from Kansas is certainly very timely. This particular provision was drafted with the hope that it would be broad enough to take care of prices that may be higher than parity prices. If the gentleman has in mind an amendment which would strengthen and make more equitable provision in this section, I would be certainly pleased to accept it.

Mr. HOPE. Then the gentleman would have no objection to an amendment which would provide an alternative on prices during the base period.

Mr. DEANE. I certainly would be very glad to consider it.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEANE. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman's bill contain the original section 411 as contained in the bill which was reported by the committee?

Mr. DEANE. No; it does not.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to ask the chairman to permit a vote on the Deane amendment first, so that if anyone wants to speak just on the Deane amendment, either in opposition or in favor of it, they may do so, and that then we may vote on it?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there may be other amendments to the Deane amendment, and therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT].

(Mr. COUDERT asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, in three-quarters of a minute there is not very much that one can say. I want to make this point. We have two problems before us: First, necessary priorities and second, general controls. We are wrestling with two very difficult problems when one would be enough—at a time. I think we should seriously consider passing the President's original request—the original Spence bill, and thereafter if the Committee on Banking and Currency would go to work on Monday and carry on and produce an intelligent and carefully deliberated rationing and price control stand-by bill, which I believe is needed, we would probably end up by getting better results, and getting more effective inflationary controls and also do it to the greater satisfaction of more people. As it stands now I think the Kunkel amendment is the more satisfactory of the attempts to deal with controls.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, on June 25 we took about 2 or 3 hours to lift all restrictions on the drafting of manpower. We have given the President authority to call up an unlimited number of men who can be sent to any part of the world. We have taken 4 days on this bill, because we have been fearful of taking away some of the rights of our civilians at home. I am for the immediate imposition of controls on prices and wages and anything else necessary to prevent further inflation and to bring about a return to normal and the return of our boys back home.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I yield my 45 seconds to the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, in three-quarters of a minute allowed to me, I want to speak on behalf of those who do not fully understand either one of these proposals. I think I am speaking for the majority. But I do want to say that I believe the people would like to have prices and wages frozen as of that period in June immediately before the Korean outbreak. Of that I am thoroughly convinced.

I am also convinced that neither of the substitute proposals before us has been thoroughly worked out, and I do not believe that they can be on the floor. Although I want to support the immediate freeze of wages and prices as of that period, I want to know whether or not either of these amendments are so designed as to fairly do that. If so, I will vote for it, hoping it will be worked out in conference. I do not care which side of the aisle it comes from. The boys in Korea are not divided by a center aisle. Neither are the folks out in the country. If someone will explain which substitute, if either, does this, then I will vote for that proposal. If not, then it certainly should go back to the committee. I do not think it has been made clear up to this time.

I hope someone will clarify this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

(Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to follow the gentleman from Indiana and just add this one word. All of the debate up to this point has convinced me that the Kunkel amendment is stronger and more immediate than the Deane amendment. In fact, the objection made to the proposal of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is that it fixes a definite price and wage freeze and goes into effect at once rather than providing, as does the Deane amendment, that nothing be done for at least 60 days and then only after a hearing. In the face of the emergent situation which we face, I think that suggestion is altogether too slow and cumbersome.

I believe, as does the gentleman from Indiana, that the people of this country expect us to pass a price, wage, and profit-control measure, and to do it now, and to make it just as strong as we can, because they are very much upset about the devastating and galloping inflation and they want to join with the boys in Korea in backing this war effort right up to the hilt.

I shall support the Kunkel amendment but if it fails I shall support any other reasonable proposal, by whomever introduced, which seeks to grant authority for a temporary control over prices, wages, and profits.

In this connection, I would like to quote an excerpt from a letter I received today from a constituent. It is typical of many I have had. My correspondent writes:

Now with the situation taking on a critical nature, is the time for action by every person and organization in this country. There should be no exception. The solution is obvious, and I shall be very such disappointed with the representatives of the people if something is not done. That something should be: price control, allocation of essential materials, wage control, higher individual income taxes, and a tax on business which would take practically all of the profits out of war. The last item should not be startling to anyone. If we are to command young men to fight and give up their lives in a stuggle for peace, then we should also command a similar effort from every person and organization. I cannot understand why there should be any question of sacrifice when lives are being offered for a cause which we believe is right. If a program is adopted which will ask something of everyone, then there should be no cause for complaint.

To this, I say "amen." The sentiments here expressed are the reason why I have favored legislation requiring all to share in the sacrifices which naked aggression has forced upon us.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

(Mr. GROSS and Mr. BATES of Massachusetts asked and were given permission to yield the time allotted to them to Mr. FULTON.)

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULTON: Add a new section to read as follows:

"Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio or television broadcasting station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities, or (4) rates charged for any professional services, or (5) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (6) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I just want to agree with my colleague the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS] and my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], that the people want a rationing and price control statute enacted today, and I hope the House does it by these amendments.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. Is the gentleman offering this to my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state to which amendment he is offering his amendment?

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] if his amendment was not to title V?

Mr. DEANE. That is right.

Mr. FULTON. Beginning with section 501. So that, therefore, his amendment is an amendment to the Kunkel amendment and it is not really to section 214.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state to which amendment he is offering his amendment?

Mr. FULTON. On that basis I offer this amendment as an amendment to section 214 of the Kunkel amendment.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. KUNKEL. I might say that this is in keeping with language which I had already included in my bill, although it is a little broader. I will however be very glad to accept it as far as I personally am concerned.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE], if he accepts this language?

Mr. DEANE. I accept it.

Mr. FULTON. I may say that this amendment is to permit an exemption for newspapers, books, periodicals, and informational media in the country, but does not refer to newsprint. It also exempts professional services, materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, and books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals, and newspapers other than as waste and scrap.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman inform us why insurance companies are exempted? I wonder why the need for exempting them.

Mr. FULTON. Under subsection (2), rates and charges of any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance.

Mr. YATES. Why is that exempted?

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. I may say to the gentleman that the basis on which insurance rates are exempted is that they are generally regulated by State regulatory bodies. The same is true of public utilities, which is another exemption.

Mr. FULTON. And the same is true for common carriers. They have their regulation, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois. This amendment is sponsored on a bipartisan basis by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself, and was offered and adopted by the House on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOPE to the Deane amendment: On page 26, line 15, of the Deane amendment, strike out the period and insert "or the highest price received during the base period as provided in section 504."

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the views of the gentleman from kansas and I am sure I can accept and do accept his amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, may I say to the committee, merely makes the Deane amendment in line with the provisions of the Kunkel bill and the Spence substitute which we considered on yesterday with respect to maximum prices on agricultural commodities. The language is a little different, but the effect is just the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON].

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MORTON to the Deane substitute: Strike out section 506 of the Deane substitute.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. Chairman, section 506 is new language which the gentleman from North Carolina read to us and provides that wage and price ceilings have to go in together. The effect of it is merely to freeze wages in those industries where the commodity prices are frozen. There is no relationship between living costs and the cost of the products of heavy industry; that is, no immediate relationship. The only way I see at this late hour to correct it is to strike the section in the hope that the administrator when he puts in any particular price controls will put in at the same time adequate wage controls.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORTON. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DEANE. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would eliminate the provision freezing wages when prices are frozen, is that not true?

Mr. MORTON. I certainly do not want to do that, but it seems to me you have a situation now that is almost hopeless. We have to leave it up to the administrator.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MORTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DEANE) there were—ayes 29, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. SHELLEY].

(Mr. YATES asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted to him to Mr. SHELLEY).

[Mr. SHELLEY addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missiouri [Mr. BOLLING].

Mr. BOLLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the time allotted to me to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in order to reemphasize that to me it seems to be the better part of wisdom that all these amendments be turned down; that we return to the Spence substitute, adopt it, and then let all these questions go back to the Committee on Banking and Currency for the immediate study which we are confident the committee will give it. This House is at sea; it does not know where it is, and it would be folly, in my judgment, for us to depart from the Spence substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Illinois to the Kunkel amendment: After section 214 add the following section:

"SEC. 215. Whenever prices and articles and commodities and salaries and wages are frozen under this title, rents shall be frozen on the same basis."

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the bill or to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this is not the same amendment that was offered yesterday. There are other features and other language in the situation we are now dealing with that, in the opinion of the Chair, make this amendment germane to the legislation now under consideration. Therefore, the point of order is overruled.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think it is plain to the Members on both sides of the aisle that if and when there is a freeze of prices and wages there must be a freeze in rents. It should not be necessary for me to argue that. If my distinguished colleagues are not already cognizant of the grim fact that people in order to exist do have to have roofs as well as food and clothing, and that rents are a real factor in the cost of living, then nothing that I can say in seven-eighths of a minute will change their thinking. So, Mr. Chairman, having left the issue to the common sense and the conscience of the Members, I yield back any of the seven-eighths of a minute that may be left.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HARA] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'HARA of Illinois) there were—ayes 37, noes 70.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BARRETT].

(Mr. BARRETT of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to yield the time allotted to him to Mr. FLOOD.)

[Mr. McKINNON addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, it was my purpose in getting this time to speak in favor of the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON]. In view of the situation which has arisen, and debate has been limited, we will not have an opportunity to properly discuss the amendment as a substitute for the Kunkel amendment. One-half minute to speak on a subject as important as this is so inadequate that I shall defer any further comment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I have abstained from debate on this bill. But I want to say this, and I want to go on record, and I want the RECORD to show that I am absolutely contemptuous of freezing milk at 21 cents a quart to the poor consumer and freezing the price of milk to the farmer who is now getting between 5 and 6 cents a quart up my way, so that he cannot get any more; I predict that if this goes through, 1,000,000 cows are going to dry up in New York. Then they will be sold for beef. When this happens, the Armed Forces of the United States are not going to have sufficient food. Millions of people in New York and all the other big cities are going to go without proper nutrition which they need and ought to have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

(Mr. WHITTEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to both pending amendments because, in my judgment, the McKinnon provision, which will be offered shortly, more adequately meets the problem. It is my opinion that without delay we should freeze wages, prices, and services. If we will act at once and freeze the prices paid for wages and services at the date of June 25, or a short period prior to that date, we will fix such schedule at such levels as had been built up through the law of supply and demand. Every day and every hour that we wait to act in this case means increases in the inventories that will have been built up in the forces of inflation we will have to try to contain. It increases the amounts that we will have to pay out of the Federal Treasury to get a start. Every day and every hour that we delay we increase the dangers of real inflation, which in the long run will destroy the very foundations of our economy. If we act now, in view of our supplies, it is my belief that rationing will not be necessary.

I know there are those of our leaders who say it is not yet necessary to act. I know there are people on this floor who hope and believe that we do not have to take this drastic action now. Many of those leaders are the ones who felt that after the war was over with Germany and Japan that everything would be all right. When it appeared that everything was not right with Russia they believed that through the Marshall plan and economic assistance we could restrain communism. They are the ones who believed along with the Secretary of the Armed Services that they could cut back and fail to spend much of the money which this Congress appropriated for military preparedness, and that we would be safe enough from Russia. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, they believed we would have little trouble in Korea; that all of these people believed that they were right, but they were wrong. I am sure that those who believe that now is not the time to act to prevent inflation believe they are right, but I believe they are wrong, Mr. Chairman. As hard as it is to freeze wages, services, and prices, I think we must act and act now. Goodness knows if all can do as well as they were doing before June 25, they should feel thankful indeed.

Others that would say this is just an action in Korea and that business should go on as usual, that England policed the world for generations and that business went on as usual at home, I would like to point out that England had a professional army. Their soldiers were in the service because of choice. We have reached into American homes and drafted young men who are today facing the enemy in Korea, and I am not opposed to business going on as it was so far as possible, but I do say that profits, wages, services, and prices too should be held at least to the level that existed before Korea, and that we should freeze them at that level so that no one at home will make profit out of this tragic war to which we send our young men.

Inflation would ruin all on fixed income. It would deplete the value of insurance, all to the profit of a few wartime profiteers, be they businessmen or labor leaders.

I believe the American people by and large are for such action, now, but unfortunately among our number we have some who would take advantage of the tragedies of war to make money, and it is those that make it necessary for us to hold business down to the level that existed prior to June 25. If they but knew, with inflation, our paper money would mean little. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the pending amendments will be defeated and that the McKinnon amendment will be approved. It is not perfect but it is the nearest approach that we have before us at this time to take the profit out of war and to put the American people and the American Republic solidly behind the troops abroad. With an excess profits tax, we will cover the major home fronts. Mr. Chairman, it is time we faced realities just as those of our leaders who made mistakes in believing that everything would be all right; we must make the right choice now; we must make the hard choice. We cannot make a mistake here by delaying and hoping.

A comparison of the production of steel and other commodities in Russia with that of our own shows that the United States far exceeds Russia in the quantity of production and in its capacity to produce. Russia has only a small percentage of the potential that we have in this country. But, Mr. Chairman, in Russia all that production can and I am afraid will be directed toward the support of any war in which they engage; in fact it is being used in getting ready, before there is any war. Yet there is a serious question in my mind as to how far this country will go in diverting its production to the support of our armed services. I hate to say that. Certainly the attitude expressed here on this floor and in the press in the last few days would indicate that many of our leaders hesitate to take decisive action on inflation and price supports just as they have hesitated to take those actions which might have prevented us from being in the terrible situation we are in today. I for one am ready to act now. I believe the American people are ready for us to act and I hope that this committee will adopt the McKinnon bill, which is the best provision before us to hold down inflation and to prevent enormous profits from the tragedies of war. We have a war, true it is in a small area now, but we too must be ready for any eventuality. Most Americans are solidly behind our men at the front. Let us see to it that all Americans are behind them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLOOD to the amendment offered by Mr. KUNKEL:

On page 10, line 4 of the Kunkel amendment, strike out all of lines 4 to 7, inclusive.

On page 12, line 21 and line 22 of the Kunkel amendment, strike out all of section 204.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is where I came in yesterday with reference to price and wage controls. Again nobody has evinced any interest in the control of profits. You are all very excited and you should be about price controls, but the exorbitant and fantastic profits that you have been inserting in the Appendix of the RECORD, taken from newspapers, nobody seems to be concerned about. You all seem to be quite satisfied and very smug that sooner or later the Committee on Ways and Means or the other body or somebody is going to pass a taxation law which is going to control excessive war profits. I doubt very much if we take a recess in a couple of weeks and then go on a 3-day recess schedule after that that you are going to see any excess-profits legislation come out of this session. But you had better pass a tax on excess profits and quickly.

It does not look very much like it now. My amendment is to strike from these controls, wage controls, until such time as there is legislation adopted by the House, on excess war profits. I refuse to identify prices and wages as analogous. To me profits and wages are entirely analogous. That is the purpose of this amendment. This is the amendment I introduced yesterday to the Spence substitute for the Kunkel amendment. It was defeated. Later, if and when this amendment or the Kunkel amendment is defeated, at the proper time I will introduce language which at least will give expression to the intent of the House on profit taxes in this emergency.

I realize we cannot write a tax bill in this committee. The amendment providing a profits tax in this bill would not be germane, but certainly if I introduce an amendment to the existing Spence bill, if these present amendments are defeated, there could be no reason why this committee and this House could not read into this bill an expression of congressional intent that there be legislation controlling excess war profits. Washington is crawling with people all looking for war contracts. This Congress absolutely must prevent profiteering and stop anyone from making any profit out of war. Good heavens cannot you read the papers—men are dying as we sit here; fighting and dying in Korea and still we have no law to tax the profit out of the activities of those who would try to turn their blood to gold.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FLOOD) there were—ayes 43, noes 98.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the Deane substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCHANAN to the Deane substitute: Add a new section to read as follows:

"Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility; or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance; or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio or television broadcasting station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities; or (4) rates charged for any professional services; or (5) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service; or (6) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment that was adopted yesterday, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] to the Kunkel amendment. I am offering it to the Deane amendment.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

The amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered clearly provides for ceilings at the retail level. That is covered in subsection (5) on page 11, under the general methods and practice outlined in section 206. I do not have time to discuss it, but I would like to have everyone read section 206 and determine for themselves that it really does give sufficient flexibility for the adjustment and revision of the various ceilings, wages, prices, and services which the Administrator may have placed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] is recognized.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Banking and Currency carefully considered the amendment which they have reported. We have a well-considered report. The Members of the House had ample opportunity to know and understand the import of that bill. I hope that all ill-considered amendments, which we have had no opportunity to investigate, will be voted down, and that the original bill will be voted up, and then the Banking and Currency Committee can go on and consider these other involved and complicated questions and bring back to the House a bill and a report that will give the Members of the House an opportunity to know what they are voting on.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman is making a request along the very line I have advocated all along.

Mr. SPENCE. That only adds to my confidence in the wisdom of the request, that my good friend the gentleman from Georgia agrees to it. I hope that it will be done.

These are just as complicated and involved questions as taxation which we bring in here under closed rules. We did not ask for a closed rule on this bill because we knew we could not obtain it, but I think we have as much confusion on this bill as we would in trying to write a tax measure on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with all that our distinguished Chairman has just said. I merely want to add one word. If we must have any stand-by controls as part of this bill then I say to you by all means the best things that has been offered to us to this minute is the Deane substitute for the Kunkel bill. There is nothing mandatory about it; it is a standby power; it is flexible and will give the President some opportunity to put into effect what he deems is necessary when he thinks it appropriate. If you are not going to let the Committee on Banking and Currency bring in a bill, then adopt the Deane bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 127.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. DEANE and Mr. KUNKEL.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 140, noes 151.

So the substitute for the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL] is defeated, will it be in order to offer an amendment on ceilings and rationing at a later point in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Further germane amendments will be in order to the committee bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. KUNKEL and Mr. PATMAN.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 130, noes 165.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: On page 29, line 15, after the word "appropriate", strike out the words "to promote the national defense" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "in the interest of the national security for the Government to obtain prompt delivery of any articles or materials the procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that this amendment strikes out the language in line 15 on page 29, which reads "to promote the national defense," and in substance substitutes the language of the Selective Service Act of 1948, section 18 of which has to do with the utilization of industry.

One of the principal objections to the powers granted in this bill was that it was too broad, and that the President can activate any of the powers in the bill by the mere finding that it is necessary to promote national defense. That language appears fourteen or fifteen different places in the bill, and if the amendment is adopted, it is my purpose to offer identical language in each instance where the language "to promote national defense," or similar language, appears in the bill. It is to restrict the operation of the act and the use of the powers to take plants and facilities, to allocate materials, to exercise priorities, to grant credits and make loans, to do everything which he does under the act, not in the name of national defense alone, but in the interest of the national security and for the prompt delivery of the articles and materials, procurement of which has been authorized by the Congress, exclusively for the use of the Armed Forces of the United States, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

What it would do would be to restrict the use of those powers to that field in which the President may operate in section 18 of the Selective Service Act, and we would then be certain that no mistake of judgment could be made; that no strictly civilian enterprise could be closed up or utilized under the mistaken idea that it was in the national defense.

It will be recalled that in the War Powers Act of 1942 there were limiting provisions which limited the taking of properties for the uses which I have mentioned. Of course, we did not have the Atomic Energy Commission then, so I have brought that language up to date.

In the section which we know as 5 (d) of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act wherein we authorized the creation of subsidiary corporations we were very careful to provide that those corporations could act only in this field, that they could buy and operate plants only so far as those plants were to be used in the manufacture of war materials. We authorized them to acquire excess stocks of strategic and critical materials for the manufacture of war goods.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, merely restricts the powers in this act by similar limitations to those contained in the War Powers Act and the RFC Act which we passed for our protection during the last war.

Let me reiterate that it is my purpose, and I think it should be the purpose of all, to give the President all of the powers he had during World War II but, however, no more.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think if the proponent of this amendment were to be frank about this he would say just adopt this amendment and forget about title I. Let me point out to you some of the things this restriction would do, things that occur to me from a very casual reading of the amendment without trying to dig out all of its implications.

Every city and State in the Nation today is devising civilian defense against attack from foreign sources by the atomic and hydrogen bombs. You would be restricted by this amendment from allocating any materials or requisitioning any materials that may be needed by any of those political subdivisions of Government. You would be restricted from permitting the National Government itself to attempt to do anything along that line. You would restrict the Government from taking over necessary plants and facilities that may not be strictly military. You might just as well not pass this bill if you are going to limit it in accordance with the language that is now sought to be inserted.

The bill as it now reads says that the President is authorized to require performance under contracts or orders which he deems necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense, and can order them to take priority over performance of anything else. This amendment that is now offered strictly limits the allocations and requisitions, limits them exclusively for the use of the armed forces, for the use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or for use in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. In other words, instead of letting us go ahead and set up our civilian defense establishment, unless it is connected with the military, it cannot be done.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Michigan referred to the Second War Powers Act as covering the same language. I believe that is in error in that it was in the peacetime Selective Service Act but not the World War II War Powers Act.

Mr. MULTER. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. Any powers that are now vested in the President by existing law are strictly and solely war powers. Until there is a declaration of war, no matter what the existing conditions may be called, we must go along now and perfect these peacetime powers.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. We are now back on the committee bill.

Mr. MULTER. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I agree with the gentleman that if you are going to adopt this amendment you might just as well kill the whole bill.

Mr. MULTER. I thank the gentleman for that contribution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few observations in reference to the pending amendment which are in no way to be construed as impugning the motives of my good friend from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that this bill is here not because of what our country does or has done or because of what any one of us has done. There is nothing we want but peace in the world. We have no imperialistic designs or policies. We do not seek 1 inch of territory that any other government has.

This bill is here as the result of the actions of a small group abroad, 12 to 14 men in the Kremlin, who control hundreds of millions of people and determine their policies.

I have repeatedly said on the floor of this House and outside of the House, and I now repeat, that there is only one thing the Communists fear and that is greater power in others than they possess. I am very fearful that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is adopted, confining it exclusively to the use of the armed services of the United States, for use of the Atomic Energy Commission, or in connection with the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, as amended, it will be a sharp limitation upon the development of our power, because we have great power in America for good. We are developing it not only for our own national interests but in the hope that that power will be utilized effectively to bring about future permanent peace. I repeat again, the only thing the Communists and those in control of the Kremlin respect is what they fear and that is greater power than they possess.

I am fearful that unintentionally the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, if adopted, will reduce and minimize the ability of our country to develop to its fullest extent that power which will bring about the respect that we all hope on the part of those who are challenging our way of life. I therefore trust the Wolcott amendment will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKINNON: Page 30, after line 5, insert a new title as follows:

"TITLE _ —PRICE AND WAGE STABILIZATION

"SECTION 1. It is the purpose of this title to promote the national defense, to prevent inflation and preserve the value of the national currency, to assure that defense appropriations are not dissipated by excessive costs and prices; to stabilize the cost of living for workers and other consumers and the costs of production for farmers and businessmen; to eliminate and prevent profiteering, hoarding, manipulation, speculation, and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions or scarcities; to protect consumers, wage earners, investors, and persons with relatively fixed or limited incomes from undue impairment of their living standards; to prevent economic disturbances, labor disputes, interferences with the effective mobilization of national resources, and impairment of national unity and morale; to protect the national economy against future loss of needed purchasing power by the present dissipation of individual savings; and to prevent a future collapse of values. All agencies of the Government dealing with the subject matter of this title, within the limits of their authority and jurisdiction, shall cooperate in carrying out these purposes. It is the intent of Congress that the controls provided in this title shall be put into effect simultaneously.

"SEC. 2. Whenever the consumer's price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics increases by 5 percent or more over the index for June 15, 1950, the President shall establish ceilings on prices (sec. 4), services (sec. 5), and wages (sec. 6), all at the same time, and in accordance with the base period: Provided, however, That the President may establish ceilings under this title earlier if he deems it in the public interest to do so.

"TITLE _ — PRICE AND WAGE CEILINGS

"PROHIBITED ACTS

"SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to sell or deliver, or to buy or accept delivery of any article at a price in excess of the celing applicable to such sale.

"(b) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to receive or pay, or to enter into any contract, agreement, or other obligation under which he is entitled or required, or under which he purports to be entitled or required, to receive or pay, for the performance of any services a price in excess of the ceiling applicable to such services.

"(c) It shall be unlawful, regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SALES OF ARTICLES

"SEC. 4. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) the ceiling applicable to the sale of an article by any person shall be—

"(1) in case the article is the same article as an article sold at wholesale by such person during the base period, the highest price at which it was so sold by such person during the base period;

"(2) in case article is not the same article as an article sold by such person during the base period, but is similar to an article so sold by such person during the base period, the highest price at which such similar article was so sold by such person during the base period;

"(3) in case the article is not the same article as, nor an article similar to, an article sold by such person during the base period, the highest price at which the same article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, or if the same article was not regularly so sold by any other person during the base period, the highest price at which a similar article was regularly so sold by any other person during the base period;

"(b) No ceiling shall be established or maintained for any agricultural commodity below the higher of the two following prices: (i) the parity price for such commodity, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture in accordance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials), or (ii) the highest price received by producers during the period of May 24 to June 24, 1950, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and (adjusted by the Secretary of Agriculture for grade, location, and seasonal differentials); and no ceiling shall be established or maintained hereunder for any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity below a price which will reflect to producers of such agricultural commodity a price for such agricultural commodity equal to the higher price therefor specified above. Whenever a ceiling has been established under this title with respect to any agricultural commodity, or any commodity processed or manufactured in whole or in substantial part therefrom, the President from time to time shall adjust such ceiling in order to make appropriate allowances for substantial reductions in merchantable crop yields, unusual increases in costs of production, and other factors which result from hazards occurring in connection with the production and marketing of such agricultural commodity. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to modify, repeal, supersede, or affect the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, or to invalidate any marketing agreement, license, or order, or any provision thereof or amendment thereto, heretofore or hereafter made or issued under the provisions of such act.

"(c) Ceiling prices to producers for milk used for distribution as fluid milk in any marketing area not under a marketing agreement, license, or order issued under the Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act of 1937, as amended, shall not be less than (1) parity prices for such milk, or (2) prices which in such marketing areas will bear the same ratio to the average farm price of milk sold wholesale in the United States as the prices for such fluid milk in such marketing areas bore to such average farm price during the base period, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, whichever is higher; Provided, however, That whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the prices so fixed are not reasonable in view of the price of feeds, the available supplies of feeds, and other economic conditions which affect market supply and demand for milk and its products in any such marketing area, he shall fix such prices as he finds will reflect such factors, insure a sufficient quantity of pure and wholesome milk, and be in the public interest, which prices when so determined shall be used as the ceiling prices to producers for fluid milk in such marketing areas.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO SERVICES

"SEC. 5. The ceiling applicable to services performed by any person shall be—

"(1) in case such services are the same services as services performed by such person during the base period, the highest price for which such services were so performed by such person during the base period; and

"(2) in case such services are not the same services as services performed by such person during the base period (or in case such person did not perform any services during the base period), the highest price for which the same services were regularly performed by any other person within the same county or parish, or within the same State if there be no such other person within the same county or parish, during the base period.

"CEILINGS APPLICABLE TO WAGES AND SALARIES

"SEC. 6. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the ceiling applicable in respect of labor performed by an individual shall be—

"(1) in case such labor is the same labor as labor performed, whether or not by him, for his employer during the base period, the highest wage paid by his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, for the same labor to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service;

"(2) in case the same labor was not performed either by him or any other employee, for his employer during the base period, at the place of employment where such individual is employed, the highest wage paid for the same labor by any other employer within the same county or parish, or within the same State, if there be no such other employer within the same county or parish, during the base period to an employee with the same seniority rights and length of service.

"(b) The ceiling applicable in respect of any labor shall in no case be less than the minimum compensation prescribed therefor in or pursuant to any law of the United States, or of any State or political subdivision thereof, or of any Territory, District, or possession of the United States.

"SEC. 7. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 4, 5, 6, the President is authorized to establish such ceilings as he may find necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act with respect to (a) new products or services to which there were no similar or comparable products or services during the base period, or (b) commodities, services, or wages directly incident to the production of the actual implements of war.

"SEC. 8. Regulations or orders under this title may be established to provide for such requirements, classifications, and differentiations, and such provisions, including provisions relating to types of employment, and quality, speculation, hoarding, standardization, manipulation, simplification, and production by a manufacturer of a required percentage of the less expensive items of his line, and definitions as in the judgment of the President are necessary to effectuate the purposes of this title, or to prevent circumvention or evasion, or facilitate enforcement, of this title or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder. Section 504 of this act shall not apply to this title.

"SEC. 9. Whenever a ceiling is established under section 4 (a) at a level lower than the level prevailing at the time it is established the President shall pay equity reimbursements out of funds that are authorized to be hereafter appropriated for that purpose to any person who proves to the President's satisfaction that he will suffer extreme hardship as a result of the retroactive effect of the ceiling, due to normal inventory purchases made after June 24, 1950, and before the effective date of the ceiling.

"SEC. 10. In carrying out the provisions of this title the President shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with, and establish and utilize committees of, representatives of persons substantially affected by regulations or orders issued hereunder.

"SEC. 11. Nothing in this title shall be construed to require any person to sell any material or service, or to perform services.

"SEC. 12. The emergency court of appeals created by section 204 (c) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, is hereby continued in existence for the purposes of this title, and the powers heretofore granted by law to the emergency court of appeals are hereby continued for purposes of exercise of the jurisdiction granted by this title. Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the emergency court of appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and hereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code. The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The emergency court of appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the emergency court of appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under this title and of any provision of any such regulation or order.

"SEC. 13. (a) Whenever in the judgment of the President any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provisions of this title, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the President that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of section 3 of this title shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both. Whenever the President has reason to believe that any person is liable to punishment under this subsection he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"SEC. 14. Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the regulation of (1) rates charged by any common carrier or other public utility, or (2) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of selling or underwriting insurance, or (3) rates charged by any person engaged in the business of operating or publishing a newspaper, periodical, or magazine, or operating a radio or television broadcasting station, a motion-picture or other theater enterprise, or outdoor advertising facilities, or (4) rates charged for any professional services, or (5) materials furnished for publication by any press association or feature service, or (6) books, magazines, motion pictures, periodicals and newspapers, other than as waste or scrap.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 15. For the purposes of this title—

"(a) 'Person' means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, or any organized group of persons, or any receiver, trustee, or other legal representative of any of the foregoing, and includes the United States, any State or political subdivision thereof, or any Territory, district, or possession of the United States.

"(b) 'Article' means any article, product, material or commodity.

"(c) 'Service' means any service, operation, or function performed otherwise than as an employee by a person (other than a State or political subdivision thereof) for any other person for compensation.

"(d) 'Labor' means any function performed by an individual as an employee of a person other than a State or political subdivision thereof.

"(e) An article shall be deemed the 'same' article as another article if it is identical in every respect with such other article.

"(f) An article shall be deemed 'similar' to another article if it is not the same article but is an article of the same kind and of the same or substantially the same quality as such other article.

"(g) An article shall be deemed a 'new' article if neither the same article nor a similar article was sold during the base period.

"(h) Services shall be deemed the 'same' services as other services if they consist of the same or substantially the same operations or functions as such other services.

"(i) Labor shall be deemed the 'same' labor as other labor if it consists of the same or substantially the same functions and duties as such other labor.

"(j) Labor shall be deemed 'new' labor if the same labor was not performed during the base period.

"(k) 'Sale' means any disposition, exchange, lease, or other transfer, or any contract to do any of the foregoing, and 'sell,' 'selling,' 'seller,' 'buy,' and 'buyer,' shall be construed accordingly.

"(l) 'Price' means the consideration received or receivable in connection with the sale of an article or for the performance of services.

"(m) 'Wage' means the rate of consideration received or receivable for the performance of labor, whether in the form of wages, salary, or any other form.

"(n) 'Ceiling' means the maximum price for which an article may be sold or which may be received for the performance of services, or the maximum wage which may be paid for labor.

"(o) 'Agriculture commodity' includes only an agricultual commodity in the form in which it is customarily marketed by farmers.

"(p) 'Base period' means the period May 24, 1950, to June 24, 1950, both inclusive.

"(q) 'Comparable' means substantially the same real, utility, and neighborhood value.

"SEC. 16. This title shall expire March 31, 1951."

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the author of the bill if the amendment submitted to the Clerk is exactly as printed in the amendment submitted to us?

Mr. McKINNON. There have been a few changes which I will touch on in the course of my 5 minutes.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I know that the gentleman from California would not submit an amendment which we did not have an opportunity to examine and understand. Last night we had a little misunderstanding about permitting an amendment to be voted upon without its being read; therefore I am constrained to object.

Mr. McKINNON. If I may say to the gentleman, I will touch completely on whatever has been altered in the copy the gentleman has, and much quicker than having it read.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I must insist on my objection, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the amendment.

Mr. NICHOLSON (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close at 3 o'clock.

Mr. HARDY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I apologize for taking the valuable time of the Members of this body at this late hour. I realize we have discussed comparable things this afternoon, and I will make this as brief and to the point as I possibly can.

Mr. Chairman, I think this matter of price stabilization and wage stabilization is too important for us to skip off this afternoon; that the country at large demands some action by the Congress, and I think we should live up to our responsibility.

In this particular amendment that has just been read there are three changes so far as the amendment is concerned that are not on the copies the Members have. One is a provision in section 2. The additional provision says and, I quote: "Provided, however, That the President may establish ceilings under this title earlier if he deems it in the public interest to do so." The first paragraph of section 2 puts the mandatory control upon the President if the cost of living rises by 5 percent, as established by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the President must then roll back prices to May 24 to June 24 base. However, a 5-percent rise is a very large rise, and it is not likely to happen in the foreseeable future, unless people become afraid and do more hoarding than they have in the past. So, we are not tying the President's hands by saying he must wait and operate on this particular provision. We are giving the President the power to move in by selective controls, with his hands free, and regulate such parts of the economy that he may deem necessary to keep price stabilization and wage stabilization at a lower level than the 5-percent rise in our first paragraph.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. Is it not true that the President yesterday severly criticized this provision and said it would be an invitation to increased prices?

Mr. McKINNON. That is true, but there is room for difference of opinion. I do not agree. Further, the addition of this second paragraph to section 2 will have a compensating effect, for the simple reason that he can step in any time prices start to move up and by selective controls start to operate, if necessary. But it is our direction to him that if he does not take action prior to the time that prices go up by 5 percent he shall then do so. I think the people of our country want him to do so; in fact, I believe he would, anyway, but this is one of our directives to him in the form of legislation.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TAURIELLO. How did the gentleman arrive at the date of June 15?

Mr. McKINNON. I will be glad to explain that to my friend. The Bureau of Labor Statistics issues a bulletin once a month, in the middle of the month, dated June 15, July 15, August 15, and so on. We want to take a base period from May 24 to June 24. June 15 therefore is the middle point and is the only time in which the Bureau of Labor Statistics issues a report in that respect.

Mr. TAURIELLO. Is it not a fact that prices have been skyrocketing since February, March, April, and May, and that these prices should be rolled back probably to one of the months I mentioned to protect the consumer?

Mr. McKINNON. I would love to do that but, from a practical, workable program, I do not believe it can be done.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I should like to refer the gentleman's attention to subsection (b) on the second page, where the gentleman says:

> It shall be unlawful regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

For instance, the Ford contract recently entered into was hailed by both labor and management as being one which would do much to stabilize labor-management relations. As I understand that contract, it provides for progressive increases for the laborers. The gentleman's section here will preclude the effective operation of that contract, will it not?

Mr. McKINNON. I do not believe any one man can write a complete bill. If such a condition is prohibited in my bill, I would be glad to take the suggestion of the gentleman if he cares to offer it in the form of an amendment at a later time.

Mr. YATES. I was just asking the gentleman's opinion as to whether or not under that section the operation of a contract such as the Ford contract would be practical.

Mr. McKINNON. I would not read it that way, because it says here, "It shall be unlawful to enter into any contract." The contract is already entered into, it is part of the base, and allows the provision of a gradual step-up.

Mr. YATES. Perhaps we are looking at different sections.

Mr. McKINNON. The gentleman is referring to section 3, paragraph (b)?

Mr. YATES. The copy I have is not numbered. I guess it is section 3, paragraph (c), where the gentleman says:

> It shall be unlawful regardless of any contract, agreement, or other obligation, for any person knowingly to pay for any labor a wage in excess of the ceiling applicable in respect of such labor.

Therefore, the Ford Co. could not exceed the amounts it was paying during the base period.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I shall support the gentleman's amendment, although I am not entirely in accord with the exact language of section 2 at the bottom of the first page. Am I not correct that this will be our last clear chance in this committee to vote for a bill for price and wage stabilization and some kind of control governing that section of our economy?

Mr. McKINNON. I should think so, but that is only my opinion.

I should like to point out further for the benefit of the gentleman from Kansas that on page 3 we have adopted toward the middle and the bottom of the page the change in the definition of fresh fruit or any fresh vegetable or agricultural commodity in keeping with the rule of the House yesterday on this amendment. We have also added the clause that has been voted on I think twice today and once yesterday, that pertains to the matter of professional services and the exclusion of newspapers, radio stations, picture shows, and so forth.

Aside from that I do not believe there are any changes in the bill other than you have in the printed copy.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to go a little further and explain the bill. This bill does not tie the President's hands. We give him flexible controls as well as selective controls. He has a way to operate if he wishes to move in and do something prior to the time that living costs go up by 5 percent. If he does not do that, then we insist upon rigid ceilings for what we deem the best interest of our country and its people.

The bill provides a psychological assist toward keeping prices down. More than that, it is going to assist us in holding the line now instead of waiting 2 or 3 or 4 or 5 months and then coming in and trying to roll back prices. Then it will be an impossible situation.

I think the time has come to give the President flexible controls if he wants to exercise them. If not, and the need grows critical, the Congress directs him to take positive action.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. MULTER. I must say I differ with the gentleman when he says that this amendment is flexible. The amendment being offered according to section 2 of the bill as read provides in so many words that when the price index goes up 5 percent the President must establish a ceiling on prices and services and wages, all at the same time. That is an invitation to everybody in the country to boost their prices 5 percent. At least you know that you are going to get 5 percent more than you are getting now. Then the President must act under this bill. I think it very unwise.

Mr. McKINNON. I disagree most heartily with the gentleman from New York.

I would like to point out that the biggest single thing we have in this economy of ours is the voluntary psychological incentives and the willingness among business and labor to conduct their own economy. This gives our people a chance to run their own show knowing full well that if they do not take care of that responsibility then the Government will move in. But as long as they restrain themselves the Government will not step in.

However, if prices start going up, the bill provides for that condition. Under the second paragraph of section 2 we give the President powers to impose selective controls and to move in immediately and put a freeze on prices and wages, even to reestablishing them as of pre-Korean levels.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. The second paragraph of section 2 is likely to have exactly the opposite effect from that predicted by the gentleman from New York because the freeze will be of the base period, which is June 15. If they know that they go up 5 percent, then they are going to be "freezed" back to June, and that is an incentive not to increase prices 5 percent, or more, because they do not want to be frozen.

Mr. McKINNON. The gentleman is right because we do have a penalty provision and they are not only stopped where they are, but they go backward.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let me put the question to the gentleman this way. Suppose the price index drops in the succeeding month, does it mean that he has to remove those controls?

Mr. McKINNON. There is nothing in the bill that would require that. That would be optional with the President.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman will agree that if there is a price rise and this is mandatory or automatic at the date you set, there will have to be an automatic wage rise to meet the price rise. You will not object to an automatic wage rise, will you?

Mr. McKINNON. I would object to anything which would discriminate one group against the other.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McKINNON. I am glad to.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman will not object to any wage rise to meet a price rise, will he?

Mr. McKINNON. I would not.

Mr. FLOOD. Then you are producing a situation under your mandatory provisions, and I say they are mandatory and automatic, at a certain date, when you will be inviting a price and wage rise higher than 5 percent.

Mr. McKINNON. I do not agree with the gentleman. We have taken care of such problems as the gentleman outlines in section 9 by freezing prices as of the base period, and where it creates an inequity we buy out that inequity by providing authority for the Government to make an equity payment where the maladjustment exists, rather than duplicating the mistakes of the old OPA and passing the maladjustments on down the line. Such procedure only compounds the maladjustments and creates the conditions to which the gentleman refers. I believe we have anticipated that condition.

[Mr. SPENCE addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Appendix.]

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not recall that in the 7 years I have been a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency I have differed with my chairman on a major issue and I do not enjoy that situation today; neither do I enjoy being on the opposite side of this issue from the President. However, I believe the gentleman from California and those who helped him perfect this amendment have met some of the objections of the President and some of the objections voiced by Members of the House in debate. All of us appreciate the work that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL], and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE] have done. I appreciate their service in dramatizing the importance of this issue. I believed with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] that we could perhaps take this issue back to the Committee on Banking and Currency and because of its technical character and importance do a better service but, Mr. Chairman, I have abandoned hope of that. I believe we have come to the place where we must either accept the McKinnon amendment in spite of the fact that it may have some imperfections, or have no legislation at all. Because of that I have reached the conclusion that we ought to adopt this amendment.

The lowest common denominator is that the Congress obviously would like to do something to express its conviction that ceilings may be in order to stop inflation. There is every reason for that conviction. We also want to do no injustices to particular groups within the economy.

We must also keep in mind the fact that we will never tie up in one package all the measures that are necessary to keep inflation from overtaking us. I am convinced that an excess-profits tax is a factor. Further, I am not sure but that the Labor Committee has work to do. I had doubts with reference to title V, the Spence substitute. Rigid controls will damage wage-price relationships unless labor participates in some of these decisions. The Committee on Agriculture also has work to do. I think we owe it to our people to tell them that the time may come when some commodities will have to suffer a price lowering in order to maintain a stable economy which makes any price of value. All of these things enter into the calculation.

Let me take a few moments to point out what the McKinnon amendment does and to acknowledge also that it has its weakness. Naturally we want to interfere as little as possible with the discretion of the Executive. This amendment has a scientific basis, for it relies on the index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and goes into effect when the index has risen five points unless the President shall have acted previously.

The weakness is that changes are being made in the BLS standards themselves. That point has been made, but the conference committee will take note of that and the conferees can adapt the language to the clear purposes of the amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. I want to commend the gentleman from Arkansas for his approach to this problem. We do not care whose name is attached to such an amendment. We in this Congress should, and the people expect us to, pass some bill relating to price and wage control.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. If prices and wages are frozen under the terms of this bill there is no mechanism set up to adjust prices or wages, the way I read this bill; they would just be frozen immediately.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I have said that the amendment is not perfect, but at least have adopted a scientific approach; we have given the President the best method we can possibly provide the cost of living index. But under the amendment offered by the gentleman from California the President can act before the index has risen five points if he wishes. It is flexible to that extent and I think the gentleman will find that it does provide for adjustment.

Mr. PATMAN. Is that not a fatal defect, the fact you cannot adjust wages and prices? There is no mechanism provided to adjust them. It would be purely an inflationary proposition.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the gentleman from California has offered this amendment. There is not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency that is more conscientious than the gentleman from California and I want to support what he has done.

Mr. Chairman, the American Legion, a group of men and women who showed the world in 1917 what we could do whether we were prepared or not prepared, in every one of their conventions has said that when we start drafting men to give up their lives for our country, we should draft labor, industry, and everybody else, and freeze them as of that time.

It seems to me, and I think the gentleman from Arkansas might agree with me, that this bill ought to be sent back to the Committee on Banking and Currency and give everybody in this country, if they want it, an opportunity to give their views to us. When we introduce a bill, we would represent the considered opinion of the people in America. I think that is what all of us are trying to do here. I know I am.

I have seen amendments adopted here that appear laughable to me. For instance, we adopted an amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. ROGERS] who is one of the outstanding Members, but he does not know that our people up in Massachusetts and up in Maine fill up their cellars to take care of their needs and the needs of their neighbors during the winter months.

We are passing amendments, we are loading the bill up with something we cannot expect to do without being more or less hypocrites. So I want to go along wholeheartedly with the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. In my opinion, it does not go far enough; that is, do what the American Legion suggested, freeze prices, freeze labor, draft men, and draft everybody else to carry what we have to do in this country. If we would do that, then we would be 100 percent better off.

WE SHOULD PROTECT THE COUNTRY BY STABILIZING THE CURRENCY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to vote to recommit this bill to the committee for further hearings and study. I have never seen an attempt to solve a great problem approached in the wrong way more consistently than this one has been today.

It reminds me of a certain emperor in a small oriental country who was once presented a library by the English minister, a library of English classical books. The emperor had his carpenters go out and make him some beautiful mahogany shelves to put them in. But lo and behold when he went to put the books in, he found the shelves were too short. So he just had his carpenters take the books out and saw the ends of them off.

Now, this bill does not touch side or bottom of the real thing that has got to be done in order to prevent dangerous inflation or to control inflation, whichever you want to call it. Prices in a free economy—and I am quoting every outstanding economist I have ever heard speak on the subject—are governed by two things: The volume of the Nation's currency multiplied by the velocity of its circulation.

In 1928, and I have the record before me, on June 30, we had $4,796,621,260 in circulation; roughly speaking, you might say, $4,796,000,000. Cotton was 20 cents a pound and wheat was in proportion. What have we got today? Not $4,796,000,000 but $27,156,000,000 in circulation.

You remind me of a fellow trying to hold the lid that is too small down on a pot of boiling water, with the water spouting up around him. You are not even reaching the gist, the heart of this proposition.

The amount of money in circulation is increasing at the rate of more than $60,000,000 a month.

You are going to have to put a check on the Federal Reserve banks issuing Federal Reserve notes, and stabilize the currency within a given bracket, or else we are going into wild inflation. It cannot be regulated by fixing prices, or regimenting the people. There is also the danger of drastic deflation which might be even more disastrous.

I am for sending the bill back and letting the committee study it and work out a measure that will stabilize the currency and not try to go to the top and appoint a bunch of bureaucrats to try to regulate prices, and everything else except the volume of the currency while the expansion or deflation of the currency runs wild.

That would be like the drunken man trying to lift himself over the fence by his boot straps.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. I agree with the gentleman in what he has said. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Republican members of the Committee on Banking and Currency insisted time after time, and vigorously protested about the fact that we were not permitted to hear any other testimony than three Government witnesses. In my judgment if we had 3 days of hearings on this bill, in addition to what we have had, this confusion would never have occurred.

Mr. RANKIN. This is not a partisan matter with me, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas. The welfare of my country comes above party affiliation. You are dealing here with one of the most serious problems that has come, or will ever come before the Congress of the United States, and the debate shows clearly that you have not gone into it thoroughly enough to understand it sufficiently to present a bill that would regulate the volume of the currency, and thereby curb inflation or prevent drastic deflation that might produce a panic.

But you leave it wide open and come in here with a bill that would attempt to regulate prices, regiment the people, and to prosecute them for hoarding without even touching the real source of the trouble.

I hope that the bill is recommitted, and that the committee will give it further study, hold hearings on it, and bring in a measure that will stabilize the currency and protect the American people from the evils of inflation, and also from the dangers of drastic deflation, which might wreck the economy of the entire Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STANLEY to the McKinnon amendment: On page 3, line 16 of the McKinnon amendment, after the word "differentials" strike out the semicolon and insert: "or (3) if for the year 1950 a producer normally does not market a commodity during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950, the highest price received by producers during the first 30-day period following May 24, 1950, in which such commodity is normally marketed."

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for safeguard or protection to the producers of agricultural commodities.

As the amendment is offered, it is based on one of two factors, the parity price for a commodity as set for the year 1950 or the highest price received by producers during the period May 24 to June 24, 1950.

I offer this amendment because some of the commodities produced by the agricultural producers have already been marketed. There would be then no pattern for the commodities to be marketed after May 24 to June 24.

This amendment provides that for the year 1950 a 30-day period may be established which will set the price of a particular commodity offered during that time that has not already had an opportunity to be offered or has not been processed for marketing by the dates provided in this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. I understand there is no objection raised to it by the patron of the amendment already offered. I have conferred with him, and he has offered no objection to it.

Mr. ABBITT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. ABBITT. I understand further that the amendment is only to apply for the year 1950.

Mr. STANLEY. It is only to apply for the year 1950, to even up prices, those that may be received after June 24 with those received by the growers who marketed prior to that time.

Mr. ABBITT. I heartily concur in the gentleman's amendment and hope it will be the pleasure of this Committee to adopt it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman have in mind any particular commodity in offering this amendment?

Mr. STANLEY. There are many commodities to which it would apply. It would apply, of course, to any commodity that was ready for market and had been marketed prior to the period May 24 to June 24. There will be similar commodities on the market later that would not have the same opportunity of price protection that those sold prior to that time had.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. Is it not a fact that tobacco is sold at different times in different belts? At the present time the tobacco auctions have opened only in Florida and South Carolina. They have not opened in the Middle Belt, the Eastern Belt, or the Old Belt, or in the Burley Belt. Therefore, there would be no way to determine the prices unless the gentleman's amendment is agreed to.

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman is correct. I would say further that tobacco is one of the commodities that has acreage control and marketing quota.

Mr. COOLEY. Unless the gentleman's amendment is adopted, the Administrator would have no alternative in fixing the price level.

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I wonder if the gentleman's amendment pertains also to manufacturing industries, or does it pertain only to agricultural products?

Mr. STANLEY. It pertains to agricultural commodities only. It deals with the section in which agricultural commodities are dealt with here.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If agriculture is to be given relief because of this base period not fitting in with the agricultural marketing season, why should not business interests be given the same adjustment?

Mr. STANLEY. As far as I am concerned, I would have no objection to such an amendment.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If an industry is in a depressed period and is actually losing money during the period named in the McKinnon amendment, and the index goes up and that company is obviously being hurt because its prices are frozen as of a time when it is selling at a loss, there is no method in the McKinnon amendment whereby an adjustment can be made.

Mr. STANLEY. I would not agree altogether with the gentleman.

FATAL DEFECTS IN M'KINNON AMENDMENT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in the McKinnon amendment I think there is a fatal defect. No. 1, I think it is bad because it will be an "inflation escalator" which will force prices up immediately. Second, there is no mechanism set up in the bill to adjust prices or wages after they are frozen. So it occurs to me those are fatal defects right there. If you are going to freeze wages and prices, there should be some way to adjust hardship cases and provide equity where equity is not being received.

Section 9 of the bill provides a way of compensating people who have losses by reason of lower prices. Although personally I favor the Brannan plan because I think it is a fine plan, there are many Members of the House who are opposed to it. They claim it is too expensive. I think the expenses in connection with the Brannan plan would be very small compared to the expenses involved in section 9 of this bill.

Section 9 of the bill says that whenever a ceiling has been established—that is, this quick freeze or this flash freeze deal, where they just freeze them right now with no adjustments, where that is done and it is frozen at a lower level than the level prevailing at the time it is established, the President shall pay equity reimbursements. Do you know what equity reimbursements mean? You know and I know. That means subsidies. The equity reimbursements are to be paid out of the funds that are authorized to be hereafter appropriated for that purpose to any person who proves to the President that he will suffer extreme hardship as a result of the retroactive effect of the ceiling due to normal inventory purchases made after June 24, 1950, and before the effective date of the ceiling.

So there you have a subsidy provided. How much will that subsidy cost? We do not know. Why should the Government pay that subsidy out of the Treasury when, if the consumers pay it, it will be anti-inflationary. We must do something to stop inflation. That is one of the principal purposes of the bill. If you pay it out of the Treasury, it is inflation and if the consumers pay it, it is anti-inflationary. There is a big difference there. That is another fatal defect.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Did we not pay those subsidies under the old OPA law to certain producers of food?

Mr. PATMAN. I do not recall any such provision in the old OPA law. They were bound to have been exceptional cases, and not the general rule.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. TABER. I think the gentleman from Texas has described section 9 correctly. I think it is an absolute menace to our entire economy and that it cannot work out successfully or satisfactorily. There were some subsidies under the OPA, but they were special items which were paid by the Department of Agriculture. This amendment has not been properly considered, and I hope it is voted down.

Mr. PATMAN. I thank the gentleman from New York.

Let me give you some applications of it. Let us suppose there is a bale of cotton involved and the price is rolled back to 30 cents a pound or $150 a bale. The person is compelled to sell it to the textile mill for $150, but he runs to the Treasury and he collects the going price, $50 a bale more or 40 cents a pound. The Treasury pays that. If the consumer paid that, it would be anti-inflationary. If the Treasury pays it, it would be inflationary.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. It is not at all different from what the gentleman from Texas and I both supported in the OPA days, consumer subsidies. It was done to spare the people a larger blow in the form of higher prices.

Mr. PATMAN. This is a general subsidy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I point out the consumers' price index of June 15, 1950, was 170.2. The 5 percent plus that is 178.7. We know there have been sensational price rises since June 15, 1950. Can the proponent of the amendment tell us whether or not if this amendment is immediately operative, to wit, today, with the 5 percent rise that has already taken place, therefore we might be passing an ex post facto amendment?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. PACE. The gentleman's illustration with regard to the farmer with a bale of cotton is not quite accurate, when section 9 appears to be confined only to inventory purchases.

Mr. PATMAN. It does not confine it to "inventory."

Mr. PACE. Yes. It says "due to normal inventory purchases made after June 24."

Mr. PATMAN. Well, I do not know how far that would be. I do know that it authorizes an appropriation of any amount of money to take care of these losses. I do not know whether it will be two billion or ten billion or twenty billion or half a billion, but this provision authorizes the appropriation of money to take care of the difference. I do not know how much that difference will be.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Has the gentleman prepared an amendment to strike out section 9 of the McKinnon amendment?

Mr. PATMAN. No. I do not want to improve it, because I think it is bad fundamentally.

Mr. KEATING. So the gentleman is aganist the whole idea?

Mr. PATMAN. I am against the whole idea.

Mr. KEATING. O price and wage controls?

Mr. PATMAN. No; not against price and wage controls, but I am against the approach contained in this amendment. That is what I am against.

Mr. KEATING. I would think the gentleman would offer an amendment to improve this section.

Mr. PATMAN. I am not trying to improve anything that I am against.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I do not see how you can figure this runs into billions when it applies only to extreme hardships, due to normal inventories.

Mr. PATMAN. Whenever the Government will make up the difference between the established price and the going price it will run into billions.

Mr. JUDD. But it is limited to a very small number of commodities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. McKINNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the section that the gentleman from Texas has been talking about needs a little explaining. We all know that the reason the OPA was such an awful headache during the last war was because whenever an adjustment was made at one end of the supply line that adjustment was only compounded in its troubles as it went on down the line to the final consumer, and the consumer finally paid the bill. But he was an individual. A lot of these hardships fall on him individually. It is to the welfare of both society and the Government that a good rigid policy of price controls be effective; a price control proposition that can hold the line. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE] asked a few days ago what would happen to a textile mill that honestly went out and bought some cotton for his inventory. Between the time he bought that cotton and the time the roll-back order came, reestablishing prices on the peace level, it is fair to penalize him to that extent, or should you give him an adjustment? That adjustment goes on down the line. It throws out of line the wholesaler, the retailer, and wages. It compounds our difficulty no end. Since it is to be of advantage to society as a whole to hold this line, it should be the Government's business to move in quickly and adjust there inequities right at the source, rather than to pass them down the line. The cost will not be excessive compared to the value because it will only apply to the period between the time the price roll-back takes effect and the peace period. It will be an adjustment period of 2 or 3 months, perhaps, but after that period is out of the way we have established a sound and lasting foundation, instead of the constant maladjustments that characterized the life of OPA and caused terrific expenses to business, labor, and the consumer. Before a retailer, wholesaler, or manufacturer can establish his claim, he must prove an extreme hardship—one that threatens to put him out of business.

I am positive that this provision will save us a great deal more money than not to have it. An adjustment is going to cost money. We either pass it along the line until it finally ends up with the consumer paying compounded costs, or we step in as the Government for the best interest of the Nation and take care of a smaller cost there and then, once and for all.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Does the gentleman know what the consumer's price index was on July 15, 1950?

Mr. McKINNON. I have an idea what it was. I might say to the gentleman from New York that I think a 5-percent increase is waiting too long. I don't believe we should wait that long, but we do provide a directive from the Congress to the President that we want action before prices get completely out of line.

Mr. JAVITS. The Bureau of Labor Statistics price index on June 15 was 170.2. Five percent plus that would be 178.2. There have been many rises since June 15. I ask the gentleman whether or not his amendment would be effective today.

Mr. McKINNON. It would not because the Bureau of Labor Statistics does not very closely approach that today. Furthermore, we give the President power to step in himself if he wishes to before the 5-percent increase occurs.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. The amendment offered by the gentleman primarily sets up a factor, namely the Bureau of Labor Statistics vital living statistics. Would not the gentleman think that there were many, many other factors just as important that go into the making of a price? For example, the moral factor, the psychological factor, the factors of supply, bottleneck supplies like coal, steel, aluminum, manganese? And if one of those bottleneck commodities rise insofar as its impact on other commodities is concerned all commodities rise. Would the gentleman say that his criteria are sufficient to do justice to what the President might do with reference to stopping inflation?

Mr. McKINNON. I think the authority contained in the amendment is ample, for we give the President the power to take a hand right now, if he concludes it advisable to do as the result of all information available to him.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does not section 9 that is here presented apply to any and every kind of inventory that might be on the shelves of any dealer in the United States?

Mr. McKINNON. I think you can stretch it that far, but I might add that in a lot of these cases there will not be sufficient dollar hardship to justify coming to Washington and demanding a rebate; in most cases they will absorb the loss for their cases will not be extreme.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They do not have to come to Washington to make a claim. Immediately there would be set up in every trade association of the United States a service department and you would begin to pile up claims to the extent of four, five, or six hundred thousand.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Texas not only that section 9 is fundamentally bad, but section 2, page 1, is fundamentally bad. It provides that if prices rise 5 percent or more then the President may fix prices and wages back to a base period. Can you imagine labor including provisions in contracts for a 5-percent increase consenting that the President roll back their wages to a base period of June 15, 1950?

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWINN. I yield.

Mr. PACE. If everybody else should roll back their prices what objection would labor have to rolling back its wages to a comparable date except a handful who had a favorable contract?

Mr. GWINN. As a matter of practical politics, does the gentleman believe the President is going to roll back wages once established?

Mr. Chairman, the thing that disturbs me about all this debate is that our memories are so short that we forget that we won the First World War in a free economy. We then produced and invented and outproduced the rest of the world. We got well under way in the Second World War in production, which was amazing to the world, before price controls came on. We won the election in 1946 because the people wanted in a kind of whirlwind protest to eliminate the whole concept of price control because it reduced the production of beef, butter, and the essentials of life.

We forget that only the free countries, with the all-out dedication of the individual productive and creative power, are the only economies that win wars in modern times. Many of the war economies lose their wars. Why should we fight a war if we are going to imitate Stalin and fix our prices and manage costs so that the individual cannot pay the price of his production? If we are going to join the rest of the world and establish a managed economy as our concept in modern times, let us join Stalin instead of fighting him.

If we want to look at the managed economy, let us look at what the price of corn is today. We have corn at $1.42 a bushel and we have beef and pork at a price that the people cannot pay. So the farmer cannot pay his costs. He kills off his beef animals and his dairy animals and quits raising young stock.

Today the clamor from the people is coming to us for control of prices. To the extent they are clamoring, which is greatly overemphasized, they are angry because we have got controls now that make it impossible for us to produce beef and butter and milk and sell it to the people at market and pay $1.42 for corn.

Let us get rid of this control concept and get back to the committee bill and not try to write impossible legislation on this floor. Let us vote for the things that the committee originally had in its bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made here earlier by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. McKINNON] and amended in the form of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, came as an original proposal from the Governor from Connecticut, Chester Bowles, former OPA Administrator.

I have in my possession a letter from Mr. Bowles which was written to every Member of Congress, and especially to Senator MAYBANK, in which he points out this language which is identical in this proposed McKinnon amendment:

This stand-by price-control law should provide that if at any time after 60 days following the passage of the act, the consumer price level as reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics rises—say 5 percent above the level of June 15, 1950, a complete program of economic controls would automatically go into effect. This program would include:

1. A return of all prices including consumer prices to the level of June 15, 1950. Adjustments above that level should be strictly limited to special cases.

2. Whatever wage controls may be necessary to maintain these prices.

3. Authority to ration consumer commodities in short supply. In my opinion, based on several years of wartime experience, consumer rationing is definitely not needed now. I doubt that it will become necessary in the future unless our military requirements approach those of World War II.

4. Authority to allocate manpower. Again this is only a last ditch possibility.

5. An excess profits tax, retroactive to July 1, 1950, with rates high enough to eliminate all profiteering.

Commenting further, I should like to point out that it has been proposed that price-wage control authority not be used until the consumers' price index has risen a given percentage above the June 1950 level. This proposal is undesirable for the following four reasons:

First. It would be undesirable to tie control authority to any price index which measures the average rise in prices.

Such a formula ignores the fact that an average rise in prices is generally composed of very large price increases for some commodities and of much smaller increases or none at all for a large number of commodities. To prevent a broad general rise in prices, it would be necessary to take action with respect to the prices of those commodities which have advanced very sharply or are threatening to do so. The index formula would tie the hands of the President in those areas where he should be taking prompt action before the index reached the permissive level.

Second. It would be very difficult to decide what percentage of price increase should be allowed before action could be taken.

If the percentage were set at a high level, it would tie the hands of the President in the areas where prompt action is needed. It would then encourage sellers to raise their prices as fast as they could and eliminate any restraint on holding prices which now exists. If it were set at a low level, it would have litle meaning. at a low level, it would have little meaning.

Moreover, prompt action is made difficult by the fact that the index of consumers' prices is only available about 5 weeks after the day on which the retail prices are collected. Consequently, even though the index had reached the level at which action could be taken, this fact would not be known for a month or more after the event.

Third. Such a formula would create enormous administrative and practical problems if it required mandatory action whenever the price index reached a certain level.

If, for example, it required a given type of roll-back to levels in a specified base period, the ease of doing this would depend on how far back that base period was. It is more important to prevent any excessive price increases than to try to roll them back after they take place.

If a mandatory roll-back to a pre-Korea base is required, should, for example, wage increases which reflect increases in productivity, and which do not affect the cost of production, also be rolled back?

If no mandatory roll-back is required but prices are frozen at the levels they have attained when the index reaches the specified level, it penalizes those who did not raise prices very much while conferring enormous benefits on those who did.

Fourth. This proposal ignores wholesale prices, which generally precede a rise in retail prices.

By the time retail prices have risen a certain amount, wholesale prices will have risen far more. To take action only when the consumers' price index has risen a certain amount will mean that wholesale prices have already risen far more, thus creating a very difficult problem of maintaining a fair relationship between wholesale and retail prices. It is very important to ensure that wholesale prices are kept from rising excessively to prevent pressure on retail prices.

All of the above objections underline the need for a flexible approach to the problem of price and wage control. Any attempt to strait-jacket the economy into a rigid formula will cause great difficulties and inequities. Price and wage controls must take into account the proper relationships between prices and wages at different levels of production and distribution. A great deal can be accomplished by selective price control when action is necessary. Any attempt to prevent such selective action until prices have risen by a specified amount and then to require mandatory across-the-board action could create more harm than good.

We are in a situation similar to attempting to write a tariff bill, an appropriation bill, a revenue bill, an income tax bill or a social security bill when you are trying to write a price and wage stabilization bill here on the floor of the House. I most earnestly request that the Committee on Banking and Currency be given an opportunity at the earliest possible time to consider a matter of this character.

I think the full committee should have an opportunity to consider legislation of such a wide sweeping character.

Two recent editorials one in the Washington Post of August 3 and the other in the New York Times of August 4 point up this situation.

They follow:

[From the Washington Post of August 3, 1950]

STAND-BY CONTROLS

As a precautionary measure it may be desirable to give the President powers to impose consumer rationing and price and wage controls. This the President has now recognized. But he insists—rightly—that it be left to his discretion to decide when to invoke such powers and where to apply them. If this country should become involved in a full-scale war requiring all-out mobilization of its resources, a comprehensive control system like that advocated by Mr. Baruch would undoubtedly be essential. However, the partial mobilization in prospect does not call for immediate resort to such extreme measures.

We greatly fear that the public has been led to believe that an immediate freezing of prices—and possibly wages—would put a stop to hoarding and price gouging. This would not be the case. Suppose that prices were to be frozen at present levels or at the levels prevailing immediately before the Korean outbreak. The result would be widespread demoralization and eventual paralysis of some industries. Manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers could keep going until their inventories were exhausted. But when they had to replace them at higher prices, some concerns would be forced to sell at a loss or go out of business.

Remember what happened when the OPA ordered a general price freeze in March 1942? It was overwhelmed by a flood of petitions for price adjustments from concerns squeezed between the ceiling prices of replacements supplies and other costs. Although a huge price organization had been built up by that time, and an industrial allocation and priority system had been in operation for many months, that price freeze resulted in gross inequities and delayed for a long time the introduction of an improved system of dollars and cents pricing.

At present there is no price control agency prepared to tackle the job of maintaining retail price ceilings, and the American people, who have never taken kindly to economic regimentation, would have good cause to turn against an administration that prematurely attempted to enforce such controls. Moreover, price roll-backs are practically impossible to effect, and even if prices were rolled back to a fixed date, the prices of some commodities would still be too low or too high with reference to the general price level.

Wage stabilization presents even more knotty problems—political as well as economic. Unless organized labor agreed to support the proposal, strikes would follow and production would be retarded. Effective control over food prices at retail levels is also impracticable without radical modification of agricultural price-support laws. All these changes would, we believe, be accepted by industrial wage earners and farmers, if the necessity arose, but the experiencees of World War II are proof that a section of the public resents and resists direct consumer control measures even under conditions of extreme danger. OPA's struggle with meat rationing is a case in point. Retail meat prices were controlled, to be sure, but meat disappeared and consumers unwilling to pay exorbitant black-market prices had to be content with meats of very inferior quality, or not meat at all.

What we need at the moment is time—time to assess the effectiveness of the President's restricted control program; time to discover how great a strain the armaments program is going to put on the economy; and time for the administration to build up an organization that will provide a basis for a more comprehensive control program, if it eventually becomes necessary to invoke the stand-by control powers that Congress is now considering.

[From the New York Times of August 4, 1950]

HYSTERIA ON CAPITOL HILL

The House voted tentatively yesterday to go far beyond providing the President with stand-by controls over prices and wages in case of serious rearmament inflation. It passed by a voice vote an amendment to the pending Defense Production Act which would invoke such controls automatically when and if the Government's cost-of-living index reached a level 5 percent higher than that prevailing on June 15.

The fact that the House could approve such a proposal even tentatively reflects a lack of understanding of the problem before it and of the possible consequences of its action that are gravely disturbing. Only a few short weeks ago this same Congress was making plans for a sweeping reduction in excise taxes, although the Federal Government was then running in the red at a rate of more than $5,000,000,000 a year. This newspaper and many others warned more than once in recent months that the time was at hand to consider a reversal of the inflationary fiscal and monetary policies then being pursued; but until the Korean invasion such warnings fell for the most part on deaf ears.

Then the administration, acting with commendable intelligence and speed, moved toward disinflation with the Defense Production Act and a request for an increase of $5,000,000,000 in taxes. And now Congress, suddenly aroused from a deep slumber by the flurry of scare buying which has followed the outbreak of Korean hostilities, has given way to hysteria. Before a single one of the anti-inflation weapons proposed by the administration has even been tested, it is demanding that the country be plunged into the kind of regimented economy that would require a police state to enforce it.

"To propose a complete freeze of the domestic economy at this time," declared Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, "would be fantastic. For the next year," he added, "you'd do nothing else but throw out 90 percent of what you froze. The first mobilization task," declared the President's chief economic adviser, "is to figure out what your top problems are, and then clear them up. Those top problems are mandatory allocations of scarce materials, credit controls and higher taxes."

Whatever may be said for an all-out freeze of the economy when war, as in 1942–45, was the almost exclusive business of the United States, and when the Government was running an average deficit of more than $54,000,000,000 a year, it is plain economic quackery to suggest that the same prescription is indicated when only 10 percent of the Nation's product is marked for defense, and when the administration has made it clear that it means to finance the defense effort on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9176) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

AN ABSURDITY

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, to ban all war, establish world peace, the United Nations was created. Fifty-nine nations signed, Communist Russia being one of them. The agreement was that all, standing against a single agressor or group of aggressors which might war against any member of the organization, would suppress such aggressor. Unfortunately, there was no adequate method of preventing a member nation either instigating or starting a war; hence world war III is here.

After Germany and Japan surrendered, by agreement, in the southern half of Korea, the Republic of Korea was established. Control of the northern half Russia assumed.

United Nations and its adherents and some internationalists in this country evidently assumed that dollars, ideas, and propaganda could successfully resist armed might. Acting under that theory and to aid the underprivileged carry the "four freedoms" into South Korea, we poured around a billion dollars into South Korea—to increase agricultural and industrial production—but spent no money on armament.

United Nations permitted—and in fact we as a member encouraged—the Communists, directed by Russia, to drive the Nationalist Chinese Army out of Manchuria and, finally, without opposition from us or United Nations, they took over China, forcing Chiang Kai-shek and the remnants of the Nationalist Army to flee to Formosa. Then the North Koreans, undoubtedly inspired by Russia, invaded the Republic of South Korea.

At the request of the Security Council of the United Nations, passed on to President Truman by the United Nations itself, he ordered our Armed Forces to join the South Koreans in opposing the invasion of their country.

In that effort, our Armed Forces have lost many men. Overwhelming numbers and superior armament, including tanks and artillery, to resist which they had no adequate equipment, have driven them to the southeastern tip of Korea, where a few days ago they were ordered by their commanding officer to stand or die. Many of them, who have not the faintest knowledge as to why they are there, no interest whatever in United Nations or any other country but their own, will die.

While they are dying in their effort to repel the Communist hordes, directed by Russian officers, armed with Russian implements of war, Jacob Malik, the Soviet Union's delegate to United Nations—notwithstanding Russia's withdrawal months ago of its former representative—at Lake Success, in New York, here in America walks back into the United Nations organization and, believe it or not, assumes the presidency of the Security Council.

His first act is to demand that the representative of Nationalist China, which has been and which still is fighting the Communists in China, be ousted and that the representative of Red China be admitted in his place and stead. Such action would increase the voting strength of the Reds.

Now, I ask you, is there anything more absurd than to call for the expenditure of billions of dollars, an army of three or four million young Americans, to fight Communists in Korea, while, at the same time, we take orders from an organization presided over by a representative of Communist Russia, which, according to persuasive evidence, is directing the efforts of the North Korean armies who are slaughtering yours sons, brothers, and husbands in Korea?

If our men must fight the Communists in Korea or elsewhere, it is an absurdity and, in my judgment, a betrayal of our men, to permit Jacob Malik or any other Red to sit as president of the Security Council or even as a member of United Nations. There, he and those who vote with him are in a position to obtain and pass on information which undoubtedly would aid those fighting our men in Korea or elsewhere.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to inquire of the majority leader as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday there will be the call of the Consent Calendar. Following that will be H. R. 8396, Disasters Aid to States, and H. R. 9129, Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949.

On Tuesday we shall continue the consideration of the Defense Production Act of 1950 under the 5-minute rule. There are primaries on that day, and, in accordance with our practice in regard to roll calls on days when primaries are being held, if there is to be a roll call on final passage on Tuesday it will be postponed until Wednesday. However, I hope every Member will be here Tuesday, because the consideration under the 5-minute rule is very important. Of course, the consideration of that bill will continue until the bill is disposed of.

If either one of the bills I have put on the program for Monday is not disposed of, that will follow the disposition of the pending bill. Thereafter, the freight forwarders bill will be in order. I cannot make a definite commitment as to the day it will be brought up, because it is impossible to state a particular day, but it will not be before Wednesday in any event, and probably will be Thursday. However, on Thursday the social

Calendar No. 2251

81st Congress, 2d Session | SENATE | Report No. 2250

THE DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

August 7, 1950.—Ordered to be printed

Mr. Maybank, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following

REPORT

[To accompany S. 3936]

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3936), to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

General Statement

The seriousness of the situation which was thrust not only upon the United States but upon the whole world as well when the forces of communism were unleashed on the Republic of South Korea has impressed upon every American the necessity and importance of taking prompt and vigorous action to meet the threat of Communist aggression. This situation has been the motivating factor in all the considerations of your committee in making an effort to bring out a bill broad enough to give the Executive necessary powers to cope with this critical situation, but not so broad as to regiment the economy of our Nation to the extent that the fundamental democratic principles of free enterprise are endangered. The dilemma presented was, on the one hand, being too late with too little or, on the other, of fettering the business of our country and seriously hampering the economy. In furtherance of the effort to meet the threat of Communist aggression the United States is continuing to conclude regional agreements for national defense. These programs will involve a substantial expansion in the military power of the United States.

71199—50——1

They will also require a sharp increase in our contribution to the military strength of the nations associated with us in these mutual defense agreements.

In his message of July 19, the President recommended a number of major changes in national economic policies, which he judged to be necessary to assure that these expanded military programs would be met fully and without delay, while at the same time protecting essential civilian needs and combatting inflation.

These recommendations included requests for authority to establish priorities, to allocate critical materials needed in the national defense, to requisition necessary equipment, supplies, materials, and facilities to provide for the expansion of productive capacity by a system of loans to private business enterprises, guaranteed loans in connection with national defense contracts, a program to accelerate and supplement stockpiling, authority to establish new Government corporations of the type in being during the recent war, for reasonable controls on the use of credit for consumer buying as well as on real estate, and for the control of speculation in commodity markets.

Also on July 19, the President reported to the Congress on the developing international situation. He requested the appropriation of some $10,000,000,000 to permit a substantial enlargement of military procurement. Since that date, further appropriations have been requested, bringing the total recommended increases in appropriations for national defense purposes to over $16,000,000,000. It is recognized that the constantly changing situation may require even larger expenditures.

In his mid-year economic report, transmitted to the Congress 1 week later, the President described in greater detail the economic impact of these preparedness measures and the need for additional governmental authority. The President emphasized that governmental actions to meet this situation must proceed along three lines. First, he stressed that much can be done to limit private demand and thus to restrain inflationary pressures by the use of broad fiscal and credit measures. Second, he emphasized that even with vigorous action in the general field of fiscal policy and credit control, a number of particular commodity areas will present such conditions of tight supply and strong inflationary pressure, that other more direct and selective controls, including priorities and allocations, will be needed to assure military and essential civilian production and to contain these inflationary price pressures and prevent their spreading to other commodities. Third, the President underlined the important fact that, in an economy as highly productive and flexible as is the American economy, the most satisfactory method of meeting the problem of increased requirements is expanded production.

In his midyear report, the President commented on this subject of productivity as follows:

> This appraisal of our general productive strength is significant, but it does not cover the whole situation with which we now must deal. The specific requirements of our enlarged military effort cannot be spread over the whole economy. Instead, they will fall most heavily upon certain sectors, and our expansion of production can only partly be concentrated within these specific sectors. In many of these sectors, moreover, shortages and price increases were apparent even before the developments in Korea. These shortages have become more critical during the past month. They must be dealt with promptly, not only to support the military effort but also because if they are allowed to get out of hand they will increase the dangers of general inflation.

The steel industry has been operating above rated capacity almost continuously since April, and an increase in the military use of steel under the program which I have recommended will further increase the strain on supplies. Copper has been in such short supply that demand has exceeded output, and domestic stocks have been dwindling. Aluminum production is now going forward at 100 percent of capacity, and is booked solid for 6 months ahead. And the stepped-up military and stockpiling program will add to demand.

These shortages, and some others in strategic areas, have been reflected in the price structure. During the first half of this year, before the Korean situation, wholesale price increases were generally moderate. But there were sharp increases in the prices of lumber, copper, zinc, scrap steel, and rubber.

In the interests of the military effort, action is needed now to direct the use of some commodities essential to the national defense, and in some cases to increase the output. This is necessary also to reduce inflationary pressures.

Thus we are faced with an over-all economic situation which is essentially strong although threatened by considerable general inflationary pressure, coupled with intense and rising pressures in limited areas.

Events since these messages to Congress have emphasized and clarified the size of the demands which our expanded defense programs are placing upon the American economy and the economic distortions and inflationary pressures which they are creating. These events have also demonstrated that the economic impact of these stepped-up programs cannot be measured solely in terms of the magnitudes directly involved, but can be assessed only by taking into account the indirect effects of increased buying by business and by consumers caused by the mere anticipation of increased military expenditures and by fear of possible shortages and rising prices. Thus it seems clear that a $16,000,000,000 increase in Federal defense expenditures may have an effect on the demand for goods and services which will be several times that amount.

Never in our history have we been so strong, has our national product been so high, has the diversity of employment, plant location, and sources of supply been so extensive.

The President in his message referred to our current total output of goods and services of almost $270,000,000,000 a year. He referred also to the 61½ million people now in civilian employment and to our huge production of steel, electric power, and food. American plant capacity was expanded greatly during World War II. In the 5 years since 1945 American business has built and added to its productive facilities $115,000,000,000 of new plants and equipment. Our over-all capacity to produce has been increased by 40 percent since 1940.

The Secretary of Commerce in his testimony before your committee outlined the general productive and supply position of our economy.

Our supplies of steel, nonferrous metals, lumber, rubber, coal, oil, and transportation are far greater than for the period prior to World War II. In 1940, we were dependent completely upon natural rubber for the production of rubber products. Today, we have a synthetic rubber industry capable of rapid expansion and now producing substantial quantities.

In 1940, our outlook for adequate oil supplies was unfavorable. Today, the domestic and Western Hemisphere reserve producing capacity, together with refining capacity to process the oil, is adequate to meet foreseeable needs.

Our transportation system has a far greater capacity than prior to World War II. Locomotives and freight car capacity exceeds prewar levels. Private and commercial vehicle registrations in 1949 were 36 percent greater than the 1939–41 average. In the 1939–41 period,

American-flag vessels in the overseas trade totaled 563 with a gross tonnage of 3,400,000. We have, including reserve fleets, more than five times as many ships with a gross tonnage proportionately greater. Our oil gathering and trunk pipelines are 22 percent greater than prewar.

General industrial machinery capacity is two and one-half times larger than prewar. In machine tools, present production is utilizing only one-half of the capacity available.

Not only do we have a vast addition to our plant capacity and productive capacity, but it is better distributed than in 1940. The shift of population to the West has been accompanied by a shift in industry locations. The movement of plants toward the west coast has made it easier to operate in the Pacific than was true in 1940 and 1941.

We have thousands of airfields, shipyards, and other facilities available for use whose building in the early forties required not only a vast number of man-hours but tremendous quantities of steel, cement, and other basic materials. Most of the additional productive facilities which World War II required are available to be converted, if conversion proves to be necessary, without the drain on critical materials which was required to construct these plants in 1940, 1941, and 1942.

In spite of these considerations we are at the moment faced with certain grim problems. Much of the capacity available is now being fully used. There are already some shortages of materials, and our economy is operating at a very high tempo. The peacetime demand by businessmen and consumers has been due to confidence in our future. The recent increase in demand in certain areas is undoubtedly due to fear. While we should be reassured by the basic facts mentioned, we must do what we can to allay the fear which causes panic buying, and we should at the same time be prepared to discipline those who are trying to take advantage of that fear.

There are numerous signs, as represented by price movements, that the problems raised by increased consumer demand, by an expanded military program, and by an accelerated and expanded stockpile program, are already upon us.

Public hearings were commenced on the President's proposals on July 24 and the views of leaders in the administration, as well as the views of witnesses who represented large segments of industry and commerce were heard. Mr. Bernard Baruch appeared before your committee and out of his vast and intimate knowledge and experience in two wars made a most effective case for all-out controls. The opinions of numerous other leaders were obtained. Not a single witness appeared in opposition to all the titles of the bill.

Your committee was extremely concerned by the extent to which inflationary pressures have mounted in the last several weeks, and by the realization that it will take a much longer period of time than many had originally hoped to repel the aggressors in Korea and to develop a sound foundation for respect of international law. Some of the current inflationary pressures may be temporary and may subside as the fear of imminent war subsides. It is certainly to be hoped that a resumption of normal buying habits by all consumers will soon lessen substantially the current inflationary tendencies. Nevertheless, it is imperative that we be prepared to take the necessary steps if these hopes are not realized.

Inflationary dangers would not be so serious were it not for the fact that the expanded military programs have been superimposed upon an economy already operating at very high levels. In 1939–41, there was a considerable element of slack in our economy, so that increased military demands had their effect primarily in increased production and only secondarily in increased prices and wages. At the present time, however, with many industries operating at capacity or near-capacity levels, the major increases in demand resulting from either increased military procurement or increased business and consumer spending has its effect almost immediately in price rises. Your committee is convinced that the threat of inflation is so strong, and the dangers of inflation are so serious, that it would be unwise to rely solely upon the more limited control measures contemplated in the President's recommendations of July 19. Your committee believes that the Congress would be remiss in its duty if it did not provide the President with adequate authority to meet these potentially serious inflationary pressures.

Following the public hearings, the committee spent many long hours grappling with the problems presented, and fairly early in these executive sessions decided by an overwhelming majority that it was advisable to grant the President authority to invoke price control, wage control, and rationing when in his judgment it became necessary in the interest of national defense to do so, even though the administration did not request such authority. Foremost in the minds of your committee was the principle that any controls which should be granted would not exceed those in force during the recent war, and only in very limited areas where additional powers seem advisable on the basis of experience during the recent war is any additional authority granted by this bill. Following the decision to grant price and wage controls and the power to ration commodities, many details were worked out concerning the form this authority should take. At this point in the consideration of the bill, when the question of granting price and wage controls had become a matter of absorbing national concern, a letter was received from the President in which he restated his position that the Congress act on the bill he recommended without delay. However, he stated that there was no objection to the enactment of additional stand-by authority to control prices and wages and to ration at the consumer level.

The committee unanimously decided that it was absolutely necessary, in order effectively to control prices, to stabilize wages also. The bill would permit the exercise of price control on a selective basis—that is, on one commodity, or on any number of commodities or materials at a time, either at the wholesale or manufacturing level or at the consumer level, and whenever such a control is imposed the President is required to stabilize wages so as to prevent an undue burden on the seller or an inflationary increase in the price of the commodity. Furthermore, the bill provides for general wage stabilization whenever price ceilings have been imposed on a substantial part of all sales at the retail level. The bill is explicit in providing that rationing at the consumer level is not mandatory when price and wage controls are invoked generally.

Since the wage stabilization program provided for will no doubt put an additional strain on the normal collective bargaining process your committee felt that it was extremely important to provide machinery which was especially designed to cope with such eventualities. Your committee has in mind that the President would be empowered to set up war labor disputes procedures in cooperation with labor and management somewhat along the lines of the War Labor Board. Your committee feels that with the experiences gained during that period and since the end of World War II in the peaceful and constructive settlement of industrial disputes that such procedures will work more successfully than they did previously. Your committee in incorporating a labor disputes title in this bill was careful not in any way to change or in any way to interfere with existing law on the subject. Such a responsibility belongs to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee. Your committee, therefore, specifically provided that no action could be taken under this bill that would be inconsistent with the provisions of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, or the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, or any other applicable statute.

There has been criticism of the principle of giving these all-inclusive powers to the President, but your committee is convinced that he intends to use them only when the situation in relation to the national defense makes the exercise of the authority imperative. This is implicit in the statement of the President when he originally asked for the authority, and he repeated it in the letter referred to above. He also emphasized in his Mid-Year Economic Report:

> The realities of the current situation now require certain changes in national economic policy. These changes will take us in the right direction at once. And if the situation should become even more serious later on, the measures which I now propose for the current situation are also the measures which would make us more ready for further steps.
>
> Appropriate agencies of Government have for several years been preparing the detailed plans for these further steps, if and when needed. If it should become necessary, I shall without hesitation ask the Congress for the grant of the powers to implement these further plans, whether for complete economic mobilization or for further intermediate action depending upon the need.
>
> But the foregoing examination of our expanding material and human resources indicates that the substantial increases in our military forces and in supporting activities now under way do not call for a complete set of economic controls now—if business, labor, and consumers practice moderation, and if adequate steps are taken at once to adjust private and public policies and programs to our supply needs and to the curbing of inflation.
>
> First of all, for the immediate situation, we should rely in major degree upon fiscal and credit measures. These general measures can be helpful not only in restraining inflationary pressures, but also in reducing the civilian demand for some specific products, such as automobiles and housing, thus making available for necessary military use a larger proportion of an already short supply of some critical materials. The more prompt and vigorous we are with these general measures, the less need there will be for all of the comprehensive direct controls which involve the consideration of thousands of individual situations and thus involve infinitely greater administrative difficulties and much greater interference with individual choice and initiative.

Your committee is of the opinion that, by and large, the country is anxious and willing to support the national defense program on a voluntary basis. This support must be turned into useful and helpful channels. One of the problems which arises in connection with any voluntary efforts on the part of industry is the risk that it runs of unintended violations of the antitrust laws or the Federal Trade Commission Act. In order to protect those who are willing to undertake these voluntary programs and agreements from suffering penalties under these laws and equally important in order to insure that these voluntary agreements and programs are so conducted as to reduce to the minimum the danger that serious and permanent harm to our free competitive enterprise will result from these cooperative efforts provisions have been included providing for exemptions from the antitrust laws and Federal Trade Commission Act for actions taken at the request of the President in order to promote the national defense. Your committee recognizes the dangers inherent in these programs and urges that the greatest of care be exercised in carrying them out. On the other hand the committee recognizes the benefit to the national defense which can properly result from such programs and urges that they be vigorously promoted in order to make the maximum use of the patriotic cooperation of industry and the public generally.

In regard to consumer credit, your committee decided that it would be better to reinstitute the controls on durable goods by invoking provisions similar to those of regulation W which were in effect during World War II, rather than grant such controls in broad new general terms. This follows the general principle of not exceeding the powers exercised during the past war in the particular areas of control which the bills cover. These consumer-credit controls are assigned to the Federal Reserve Board in view of their familiarity with credit problems and their highly successful administration of regulation W. Your committee also felt that it would be desirable to centralize in the agency responsible for credit generally the control of conventional real-estate credit. Since the Federal-insured mortgage and guaranty programs are already being ably operated by the Housing Agency and the Veterans' Administration, respectively, the President in order to insure proper coordination in the over-all control of real-estate credit is required to consult with the Board of Governors before issuing any orders or regulations with respect to these programs.

The committee, recalling the success of the accelerated amortization program for emergency facilities during the war, felt that such a program would speed the expansion of productive capacity and instructed the chairman to confer with the chairman of the Finance Committee and request that his committee consider legislation providing for the revitalization of this program.

In regard to commodity exchange speculation your committee, after hearing a number of witnesses, decided that the matter was too complex to permit a prompt and satisfactory decision on the subject and instructed the chairman to confer with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and recommend that consideration be given to this matter with a view to specific legislation on the subject.

The other powers granted in the bill have been conferred on the President. The delegation of these other powers to the President was considered appropriate in view of the importance of the powers, and also because present and possible future problems may call for changes in administrative arrangements to reflect changing needs. There is one outstanding exception to this principle, however, in relation to price and wage stabilization controls and rationing. The bill provides that when it becomes necessary to exercise price and wage stabilization controls over a substantial proportion of the national economy, these controls must be exercised by a single new independent agency created for that purpose. It was felt that this provision was important because of the conviction that price and wage controls directed toward stabilization are so closely related that responsibility for both must be invested in a single agency responsible to the President. This new agency will also exercise consumer rationing controls, including any invoked prior to its creation.

The bill which your committee recommends substantially carries out the economic recommendations of the President, except for those recommendations pertaining to increased taxation, which are under consideration by the Finance Committee. It provides for termination of the authority conferred thereunder on June 30, 1952, or such earlier time as Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

Your committee believes that the need for the powers authorized in this bill has been amply demonstrated, not only by the testimony of witnesses but by the record of events which has been available to all. The committee, therefore, recommends that the bill be passed by the Senate as promptly as possible.

Summary of Provisions of the Bill

The bill begins with a declaration of policy which recognizes the interest of the United States in promoting peace and opposing acts of aggression and our determination to develop the military and economic strength to achieve these objectives by meeting the requirements of our military programs and by preventing undue strains on our civilian economy and our system of competitive enterprise (bill pp. 28 and 29).

Title I authorizes the granting of priorities and the allocation of materials and facilities when necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. It also specifically prohibits the accumulation of scarce materials in excess of the normal demands of business or home consumption or for the purpose of resale at prices in excess of prevailing market prices (bill pp. 29 and 30).

Title II authorizes the President to requisition equipment and supplies needed for the national defense or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation of such equipment and supplies. Provision is made for termination of the amount of compensation and payment to the owner of 75 percent of the award in the event he wishes to contest the amount. Provision is also made for return of the property when the Government no longer needs it (bill pp. 30–32).

Title III provides financial assistance to expand productive capacity and supply (bill, pp. 32–38).

Section 301 authorizes the Government, through the Federal Reserve Board to guarantee loans made in connection with defense contracts. This is based upon the V-loan program during World War II (bill pp. 32–35).

Section 302 provides for direct Governmnent loans to increase production (bill, p. 35).

Section 303 provides for Government purchasing programs of metals, minerals, and other raw materials and for exploration, development, and mining of critical strategic minerals and metals (bill, pp. 35 and 36).

Section 304 contains administrative powers to enable the carrying out of sections 302 and 303 (bill pp. 36 and 37).

Section 305 authorizes the transfer from the RFC to the Secretary of Commerce or to a new agency the rubber, tin, and abacá programs now conducted by that corporation (bill, pp. 37 and 38).

Title IV authorizes price and wage stabilization (bill, pp. 38–57).

Section 401 sets forth the purposes for which these powers are to be used, within the general framework of the objectives of the act (bill, pp. 38 and 39).

Section 402 authorizes the President to promote voluntary action by industry and others to stabilize prices and wages and also authorizes the President to exercise selective controls over prices and wages first above the retail level and if necessary at the retail level. It also authorizes general price and wage controls. Price and wage controls are tied closely together. When ceilings are placed on prices, wages must be stabilized so as to prevent wage increases which would impose an undue burden on the producer or make necessary inflationary price increases. When price controls are established over a substantial part of all sales at retail and materially affecting the cost of living, general wage stabilization must be established. This section also establishes as the basic criteria for the establishment of prices and wages those prevailing during the period from May 24 to June 24, with due consideration to be given for special factors and for increases or decreases in cost and profits after June 24. A general requirement is made that prices and wages must be generally fair and equitable and designed to accomplish the purposes of the title (bill pp. 38 and 39). Section 402 (e) provides minimum ceilings for wages and agricultural commodities. Wages may not be stabilized below those during the period from May 24 to June 24. Ceilings of agricultural commodities may not be established below parity or below the prices prevailing on June 15, 1950, as established by the Secretary of Agriculture. Additional provisions to assure generally fair and equitable prices for agricultural commodities are set forth in this section. Certain exceptions are made from price control: prices and rentals of real property, fees for professional services, prices for newspapers, books, magazines, and rates charged by newspapers, radio stations, insurance companies, and common carriers (bill pp. 39–46).

Section 403 authorizes the President when he has imposed price and wage controls generally over a substantial portion of the economy to administer these controls and rationing through a new independent agency (bill pp. 46 and 47).

Section 404 authorizes the President to consult with committees of persons affected by orders (bill p. 47).

Section 405 makes unlawful sales, or purchases in the regular course of business or trade, at more than ceiling prices. It also makes unlawful payment or receipt of wages, salaries, or other compensation in contravention of the President's regulations, and it also provides that excessive payments may be disregarded by other Departments in determining the costs of employers under other statutes (bill pp. 47 and 48).

Section 406 provides that the title does not require any person to sell or to make any payment or to perform personal services (bill p. 48).

Section 407 establishes a procedure for filing protests against orders and regulations issued under the title, giving those affected an opportunity to present their evidence in support of their position and an opportunity to appear before a board of review (bill pp. 48–50).

71199—50——2

Section 408 provides for appeals from denials of such protests to the Emergency Court of Appeals created under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 and now handling cases under the Housing and Rent Act. The Emergency Court of Appeals is given exclusive jurisdiction to enjoin regulations issued under this title but other courts of general or other competent jurisdiction are authorized to pass upon the validity of regulations or orders (bill, pp. 50–54).

Section 409 contains enforcement provisions. It authorizes the President to enjoin violations or threatened violations. It provides for the imposition, on conviction, of fines up to $10,000 and imprisonment up to 1 year. It also authorizes triple damage suits by purchasers not in the course of business, with a maximum recovery of the amount of the overcharges, plus $10,000, and a minimum recovery of $25. The Government may bring action under this section if the purchaser does not do so, except where the Government approved or was involved in the transaction (bill, pp. 54–57).

Title V authorizes the President after consultation with labor and management to make arrangements for the settlement of labor disputes affecting national defense through collective bargaining. The title provides that actions taken under it shall be consistent with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, and other applicable laws (bill, pp. 57 and 58).

Section 601 authorizes the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to exercise consumer credit controls as provided in Regulation W (bill pp. 58 and 59).

Section 602 authorizes the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to exercise control over the extension of credit on new real-estate construction or reconstruction begun on or after August 3, 1950 (bill pp. 59–63).

Section 603 imposes criminal penalties for violation of sections 601 and 602 (bill p. 63).

Section 604 provides investigatory powers for the Federal Reserve Board under the previous sections (bill pp. 63 and 64).

Section 605 authorizes the President, after consultation with the Federal Reserve Board, to impose controls over credit on real estate made, insured, or guaranteed by the Government (bill pp. 64 and 65).

Title VII contains general provisions applicable to the previous titles of the act (bill pp. 65–82).

Section 701 requires the President to give small business an opportunity to make its full contribution to the national defense. In addition to requiring full information for the benefit of small business and the granting of appropriate exemptions for small business and special handling of applications from small business, this section requires the appointment of advisory committees to consult with the President. These committees must be so composed as to give fair representation to all categories of business, particularly small business (bill pp. 65 and 66).

Section 702 contains definitions of the words "person," "materials," "facilities," "national defense," and "wages, salaries, and other compensation." The definition of facilities excludes farms, churches, and other places of worship, and private dwelling houses.

The exclusion of farms, churches or other places of worship, or private dwelling houses from "facilities" will prevent the requisitioning or allocation of such property. It would not, however, make it impossible to attach appropriate conditions on the use or reuse of such property built with materials obtained under the priorities and allocation powers contained in the bill, to assure that the property will be used for purposes consistent with national defense (bill, pp. 66 and 67).

Section 703 authorizes the President to delegate the authority conferred on him to offices or agencies of the Government and authorizes the creation of new agencies, but not to create new corporations. This section also provides that the head and assistant head of new agencies may receive compensation comparable to heads and assistant heads of independent agencies of the Government. Attorneys appointed for these agencies may appear in court. The head of the agency administering the over-all authority of title IV must be confirmed by the Senate (bill, pp. 67 and 68).

Section 704 contains the usual provision for the issuance of regulations. This will permit making classifications and other provisions necessary to achieve fair and equitable treatment of different kinds of situations, and to prevent evasions (bill p. 68).

Section 705 contains authority to require reports, collect information, and make investigations. Testimony may be compelled, but immunity from prosecution on the basis of such evidence may be claimed. Information obtained under this section must be kept confidential, with a penalty of $10,000 or imprisonment for a year for violation (bill pp. 68–71).

Section 706 gives jurisdiction to district courts over violations or authority to enjoin violations (bill pp. 71 and 72).

Section 707 contains exculpatory clause protecting persons who have complied with the act against liability for damages thereafter. In addition it prohibits discrimination against orders to which priorities are assigned or for which materials are allocated (bill pp. 72 and 73).

Section 708 contains a provision based on section 12 of the Small Business Mobilization Act exempting from the antitrust law and Federal Trade Commission Act acts or omissions to act in accordance with requests of the President pursuant to this act. The Attorney General and Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission must be consulted before any such request is made. Under this section, protection can be given for those entering into voluntary agreements and programs to achieve the objectives of the act, thereby avoiding the need for mandatory controls (bill pp. 73 and 74).

Section 709 contains the usual exemption for emergency legislation from the Administrative Procedure Act, except for the requirement of publicity under section 3 of that act. The section also requires consultation with industry in issuing regulations (bill p. 74).

Section 710 contains provisions relating to the appointment of officials in grades 16, 17, and 18. It authorizes the appointment of persons of outstanding experience and ability without compensation, the appointment of experts and consultants, and the utilization of the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and volunteer services, and it provides for exemptions for these employees from certain double compensation statutes in accordance with regulations to be issued by the President (bill pp. 74–76).

Section 711 authorizes appropriations (bill p. 76).

Section 712 contains provisions for exemptions from the antitrust laws and the Federal Trade Commission Act, for actions requested by the President in connection with allocations and credit restrictions.

Agreements fixing prices are prohibited under this section. Approval of the Attorney General is required for any action under this section. This section was included, in addition to section 708, in order to insure that the voluntary programs contemplated could proceed with assurance. It was not intended in any way to restrict or limit the general authority under section 708, and a specific statement to this effect was included in the section (bill pp. 76–79).

Section 713 establishes a joint congressional committee composed of five members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate and five members of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives. Expenses up to $50,000 in any fiscal year are authorized from the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives (bill pp. 79–81).

Section 714 states that the act is applicable in the United States, its Territories, and possessions and the District of Columbia (bill p. 81).

Section 715 contains a general separability clause (bill pp. 81 and 82).

Section 716 provides that the act terminates on June 30, 1952, or at such earlier date as the Congress by Concurrent Resolution or the President may designate, with a provision for continuance of any newly created agency for 60 days for purposes of liquidation (bill p. 82).

Declaration of Policy

(Bill pp. 28 and 29)

The bill begins with a declaration of the policy and objectives of the bill. It recognizes the interest of the United States in peace and opposing acts of aggression, and our determination to develop and maintain our military and economic strength. Directing current output to military purposes and increasing supplies will be necessary to accomplish our national security and foreign policy objectives. In addition the declaration of policy recognizes the need for positive action, under the authority contained in the bill, to prevent undue strains and dislocations upon wages, prices, and production or distribution of material for civilian use. Thus the declaration of policy recognizes that the national defense must be promoted both by building up our military strength and that of countries associated with us in the mutual defense assistance pact, the North Atlantic pact, and similar programs, and by maintaining and strengthening our American system of competitive enterprise and our free and democratic way of life.

Title I. Priorities and Allocations

(Bill pp. 29 and 30)

Title I provides general priority and allocation powers. These powers are the same as those contained in title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942, under which the War Production Board allocated the materials and facilities of the Nation during World War II. The committee intends that the same breadth of interpretation which was given to title III of the Second War Powers Act should apply to the powers in title I.

These powers are broad and flexible. They are peculiarly suited to the purpose of harnessing our complex and intricate productive system in the interest of National defense with the maximum benefit to national defense and the minimum interference with industry under our competitive system. It is necessary that these powers should be broad and flexible because limited or restricted or partial authority might even prove insufficient to accomplish the desired end in a given situation or might do more harm than good by making it necessary to use a shotgun instead of a rifle in order to accomplish a single purpose.

These powers can be used in many ways. They can be used to require the filling of a particular order in preference to another order, or to require the filling of a particular class of orders in preference to other classes of orders. They can also be used to stop or reduce the production of any item, in order to conserve the materials and manpower which would otherwise go into that item; they can be used to prohibit the use of a particular material for a specified purpose, or for anything except a specified purpose, in order to make the most effective use of that material. They can be used to restrict the output of an industry, to divert that industry from one type of product or another. They can be used to allocate productive facilities, transportation facilities and equipment, power and fuels, raw materials and finished products. They can be used to prohibit the accumulation of excessive inventories. They can be used to ration consumer goods at the retail level.

These powers can be used to channel materials to fill direct Government contracts, or subcontracts thereunder. They can also be used to channel materials to direct war support purposes or other essential purposes such as factories, utilities and transportation systems. They can also be used to promote the national defense by maintaining the essential civilian economy. They can also be used to restrict or prohibit less essential industries and those industries which directly interfere with the national defense.

However, while these powers are broad and are intended to be used broadly, it is the intent of the committee that they should be used only where necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense. They should not be used to accomplish purposes, however meritorious, which bear no relation to national defense. Your committee expects that careful attention should be given in exercising these powers to assure that their exercise will be so confined.

The priority and allocation powers are needed particularly in connection with scarce metals. As Secretary Sawyer testified, many of our most important metals were in tight supply before June 24, 1950, and the increased demands of direct military needs and of the Government stockpiles can be met only with difficulty.

In the spring of 1950, the 44,000 steel fabricators and 10,000 other users of steel were taking all the steel which was being produced even though the production at that time was greater than ever before, more than 100,000,000 tons. The military demands are expected to increase substantially, even though currently estimated increased demand for the military is not very great in terms of percentages. In addition to the direct military demands for steel there are many other demands closely related to our national defense: The military requirements of our associates under the North Atlantic Pact; the increased requirements for industries which are expected to increase their production such as the steel industry itself; and the increased requirements of the transportation industry, including particularly the needs of our railroads for freight cars and the needs for additional specialized ships. All these demands added on to the direct military increases will reduce the amount available for the 54,000 firms which are even now unable to get all the steel they could use. It is imperative that the reduction in the steel available for these firms, many of which are small and entirely dependent on this steel, be made in a way which will impose the least hardship on these firms and will impose the least hardship on the essential needs of the rest of the economy.

Other metals were mentioned in the testimony before the committee where similar problems are arising and can be expected to become worse. In the case of tin we are entirely dependent upon foreign sources for ores. The Government is now stockpiling tin out of our receipts from foreign sources. It is imperative that the currently increased stockpile goals for tin be promptly and fully met so as to reduce our dependence upon far distant foreign sources for this material so important to all of our industries, ranging from solder for the construction and electrical industries, to babbitt for the automobile and railroad industries, to tin cans for the food industry and to many parts of the chemical industry.

Another metal which is vital to all parts of our economy is copper. Without it our lighting and power system could not run, our entire transportation system would break down and many related industries would be stopped. We have a huge supply of copper and vast refining and fabricating facilities. Much of our supply, however, comes from foreign sources, and in recent months copper has been used faster than it has been produced, and inventories have been dropping sharply, almost to the point where, even without increased military demands, consumption might have to be reduced. Now, we are faced with increased military demands, the size of which is not yet known, with increased demands for transportation equipment, and with greatly increased demands for military stockpiles. These demands cannot be ignored. They must be met. To do so will require a reduction in the amount available for ordinary civilian use. Again, unless these reductions are made cautiously and with full consideration of the effect which they may have upon individual users of copper and upon the economy generally, we may well find that the defense effort is harmed by impairment of some industry which is essential, even though indirectly, to the national defense. For example, to deprive the utility industry of copper in order to increase the copper available for the munitions industry might well result in the long run in closing down many munitions plants and rendering uninhabitable the houses of many of the workers in those plants. Judiciously handled, these reductions can be accomplished without injury to the national defense, directly or indirectly, and without undue harm to the balance of the civilian economy. For this purpose, the priority and allocation powers in title I are necessary.

The same situation is true in the case of the aluminum industry, many chemicals, petroleum, and many kinds of equipment. Even though our productive capacity and resources are vast, the demands of our economy are so great and so varied, and our economy is running at such a high rate, that there is no margin to spare for the increased demands of national defense in many industries.

Section 101: Section 101 authorizes the President to assign priorities to essential contracts and to require their fulfillment in preference to other contracts for the purpose of promoting the national defense. It also authorizes the President to allocate materials and facilities as he may deem necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense.

Section 102: Section 102 prohibits the accumulation of excessive inventories of materials which have been designated by the President in the Federal Register either in excess of the reasonable and normal demands for business or home consumption or for the purpose of resale at excessive prices.

Section 103: Section 103 provides for a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than one (1) year or both for willful violations of title I.

Title II. Authority To Requisition

(Bill pp. 30–32)

Title II authorizes the President to requisition equipment, supplies, or component parts thereof, or materials or facilities necessary for the manufacture, servicing, or operation thereof. Three conditions are placed upon the exercise of this authority. First, that the material or facility is needed for the national defense; second, that the need is immediate and will not admit of delay or resort to any other source of supply; and, third, that all other means of obtaining the use of the property on fair and reasonable terms have been exhausted. The President is required to determine the just compensation for the property and to pay it promptly. If the owner disagrees with the President's determination of value, 75 percent of the amount shall be paid promptly and the owner may bring suit for the balance within 3 years from the date of the award. When the need for any property so requisitioned is over, it is to be offered to the original owner on payment of fair value. In case of disagreement as to the fair value, provision is made for arbitration of the value by three appraisers.

This authority is necessary in order to make it possible to put into use materials or facilities which, for one reason or another, the owners are unwilling to devote to the national defense. In some cases the owners may be hoarders or black-market operators who have built up excessive supplies of scarce materials in the hope of profit. During World War II, large supplies of pepper, silk, machine guns, and scrap were requisitioned from their owners. The owner of a building may wish to eject a tenant engaged in defense work so that he can use his plant for some completely nonessential purpose. In other cases title to the property may be uncertain or tied up in litigation and no one may be able to convey a clear title to the property. For example, the owner may be a foreigner or a corporation in bankruptcy or litigation. Other cases may occur where, for one reason or another materials or facilities may not be making their full contribution to the war effort, but could do so if put into proper hands.

Caution must, of course, be used in exercising this drastic power and full opportunity be given to the owner to cooperate voluntarily, and to obtain prompt payment and just compensation. Properly used, however, this power is an indispensable complement to the allocation and priority powers.

Title III. Expansion of Productive Capacity and Supply

(Bill pp. 32–38)

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

The process of gearing our economy to meet prospective requirements for defense and essential civilian uses cannot be confined merely to the distribution of scarce supplies so as to minimize the inevitable strains and dislocations. An important element of the total program, and one that needs initiating with the least possible delay, is to accelerate the increase of available supplies of essential materials and products. Title III is devoted to this objective.

Productive capacity in general is almost fully utilized. Though slack is present in some industries and there is available stand-by capacity in a few, such important basic commodities as steel, copper, and zinc are in exceedingly tight supply already, with no adequate increases of supply in sight.

The direct impact of military programs now known can be only roughly gaged. Indications are that for some resources these requirements during the next 10 months are within the range of civilian curtailment. But in judging the need for expansion of supply, these additional factors are important:

(1) Stockpile requirements have also been stepped up and in some cases exceed the demands of the proposed military program.

(2) In some cases, programs are needed for increased investment, even to assure maintenance of present levels of supply.

(3) The decision on the need for many types of capacity expansion programs rests not on the requirements of the coming year, but on the possibility of far greater requirements 2 and 3 years ahead; when such expansion programs would just begin to justify themselves.

The generally accepted assumption that we must plan for a possible further expansion of military programs means that there are some commodities where curtailment of nonessential consumption will not be sufficient, and some of the shortage now threatened must be met by programs to expand supply. Such programs must be initiated, in general, a year or more ahead of their effective contribution to supply. Government programs are needed wherever the necessary expansion of supply cannot be expected to come about through unaided private initiative.

Temporarily, allocation and priority powers will insure that military orders are filled, and that most of the essential civilian orders are also filled. Your committee considers it imperative to emphasize, however, that this is not sufficient.

While there can be no question that military needs must be filled, we must at the same time maintain a healthy and growing productive economy, which is the source of our military power. Otherwise our military strength cannot long be maintained. Furthermore, if our productive capacity and civilian economy is too long neglected and stifled, the way of life we are seeking to preserve might well be lost, even with military victory.

A variety of factors act as effective limits on the supply of specific essential commodities: high costs of marginal producers, shortage of working capital, shortage of funds for facilities construction, and uncertainty as to longer-range market demands. This title, accordingly, provides for appropriate measures to attack these various types of bottlenecks. The measures included are: loan guaranties; direct Government lending for expansion, development or production; and procurement contracts involving price incentives, advance payments and long-term commitments.

Still other measures to stimulate expansion of supply will be required in specific instances: for example, authorization of accelerated depreciation of new facilities on the basis of individual certificates of necessity. This last is not provided in this bill, but your committee recommends that it be seriously considered for inclusion in a tax program.

The following cases indicate the need for a range of devices to deal with different types of supply problems arising in different critical commodity areas:

Steel.—The steel industry has been operating at or above rated capacity since April. A return of conversion deals and the reappearance of black-market sales are indications of substantial current shortage.

The supply of steel, which was already short for civilian needs, cannot cover demands in the next 2 years, even with the industry's program for a further 5-percent increase in steel-making capacity.

The iron-ore supply appears to be the bottleneck factor for the next few years, and there is substantial risk that even the present rate of steel output cannot be equaled next year, because of difficulties with ore supply.

The effective limit on ore availability in 1951 appears to be vessel capacity on the Great Lakes. This is due in part to the very late opening of the 1950 shipping season and to the fact that shipping capacity was not fully used in late 1949 because the record-breaking 1950 rates of ore consumption were not foreseen. Ore stocks may be so depleted by early spring 1951 as to cause furnace shut-downs, and possible steel output in 1951 might be less than in 1950. Additional ore carriers cannot be built in time for the 1951 season, and the possible contribution of extra all-rail haulage is believed inadequate to avert a serious ore shortage.

Ore vessels begun this fall might serve during the 1952 season. But they are not being ordered and, in view of the long-term decline of lake supplies, the steel companies are naturally reluctant to commit funds to this purpose.

In the meantime the mining capacity for direct-shipping lake ore threatens to decline, despite all efforts to maintain output, within 2 to 5 years. Substitute ore sources include Venezuela, Labrador, domestic taconites, and other low-grade ores which, however, must be beneficiated before they can be used. All these projects require years of time and very large amounts of capital. For example, taconite plants require 2 or 3 years to build and around $20 of investment per ton of annual capacity. A further factor in the financing of taconite facilities is that the steel companies most urgently in need of new sources of ore are not those with the greatest financial resources.

Nitrogen fertilizer.—The threat in this case is diversion of a considerable fraction of existing capacity to the making of explosives, which will certainly occur with any substantially expanded munitions program. Remaining fertilizer production capacity would then be inadequate for maintenance of crop yields. There are virtually no nonessential civilian uses to be curtailed.

71199—50——3

Since a return to peacetime conditions would bring the Army plants back into potential use for fertilizer production, private investors are not likely to want to invest in expanded nitrogen fertilizer plants whose postwar value would be problematical.

Aluminum supply already is exceedingly tight. Two stand-by plants are being reactivated. Manufacturers are booked solid for 6 months ahead and inventories are at minimum levels all along the line. There is some evidence, in fact, that normal inventories have been drawn on recently in order to meet deliveries. Companies are allocating aluminum products to many customers on a historical basis.

